Only one influence remains to be noted, but that the most important of all—the living voice of the living missionary. There is such a thing as a dead missionary—and when one thinks of where they spend their lives, and the few privileges they enjoy, the wonder is there are not more. I would never let a dead missionary speak to a living child. No one feels the touch of death like a child, and its instincts will not be deceived. There are also weak missionaries, dyspeptic missionaries, soured and discouraged missionaries, unsympathetic, scolding missionaries. I would not have their voices heard in any Sunday-school. But when you can get the real man, at any cost bring him. The tale of self-denial, quietly told, will make its mark; long after the day is past and the story of his life forgotten, his personality will abide in the hearts of the best in the school as an ever-living power. If they cannot be got, let some one go where they are and catch their fire, and bring back their words, for a single echo from a living voice is eloquence.

Interesting scholars to become missionaries is the highest department of our work, and the one most of all neglected. It is not enough to watch among the scholars for an interest in missions. We must watch for the dawn of the missionary spirit, and direct the picked few who manifest it by solemn and careful steps. The missionary spirit steals into the mind at a very tender age. It is too great a thing to come late—it has to bear too much strain to be of hasty growth. Its seed must be in the virgin soil of the heart, and it must mature from the beginning of active growth. The few missionaries whom I have ventured to sound upon this matter have unanimously testified that the call came to them when very young; and I am inclined to place the usual time of impression at about the age of twelve years. This fact gives a new impulse to all the missionary work of the Sabbath-school.

UNITED KINGDOM BENEFICENT ASSOCIATION.—This Society was founded in 1863 to provide annuities up to £25 for persons of the upper and middle classes in reduced circumstances who are above 40 years of age, and unable, from bodily infirmities, to earn their own livelihood. Also to afford temporary help to candidates in urgent distress. Miss Bullar, Basset-wood, Southampton, has written a pamphlet entitled, "Friends," in which the objects, advantages, and claims of the Society are fully detailed. She will be happy to answer any inquiries. Little books and papers on the subject can also be had gratis from the Secretary, 4, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

LATYMER-ROAD MISSION.—The twenty-first annual report of this Mission recently issued (3d.) announces steady progress during the past year, and increased effort. A large hall and three class-rooms have been added to the building; the attendance at the Sunday-schools is larger; and the general behaviour of the scholars decidedly improved. Gospel Temperance principles are still bringing forth good fruit; some persons who a year ago appeared to be hopeless drunkards are now leading consistent Christian lives. The Committee have decided to open a separate Home in the neighbourhood of Ramsgate for boys, finding it unadvisable to mix boys and girls. This project will be carried out when sufficient funds are obtained. A Christian Working Men's Club has been formed, and the salutary influence of the Temperance work is felt by the people of the locality.

NOTES ON SCRIPTURE.—15.

"YE ARE MY WITNESSES."

As Christians we are not primarily professors of doctrinal truths, however important; we are Christ's witnesses, as the Old Testament saints were Jehovah's witnesses. Indeed, Isaiah wonderfully combines Jehovah and Jesus, the Old Testament and the New, when he says:

"Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, and my servant whom I have chosen: that ye may know and believe Me, and understand that I am He: before Me there was no God formed, neither shall there be after Me. I, even I, am the Lord; and beside Me there is no saviour. I have declared, and have saved, and I have shewed, when there was no strange god among you: therefore ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, that I am God" (Isaiah xliii. 10-12.)

The Old Testament saints were witnesses that Jehovah is God; the New Testament saints are witnesses that Jesus, risen from the dead, is the Christ (Acts i. 8; ii. 32; iii. 15; iv. 33; v. 32; x. 39; x. 41; xiii. 31; xxii. 15; xxvi. 16).

The first and last test of our Christianity is that we love HIM because He first loved us. Not a profession, but a Person; not a creed, but Christ; not a system, but the Saviour; not the Gospel, but God—is the actual object of a saved sinner's faith. It is all summed up in one word—HIM. "As many as received HIM to them gave He power to become sons of God:" "who by HIM do believe in God, that raised HIM up from the dead, and gave HIM glory, that your faith and hope might be in GOD."

Here we are all at one, and our testimony agrees together. "Here am I, send me," every believer may say, for by faith we have seen the Lord. We are competent and credible witnesses, for we know for ourselves that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world.

But God was not enough for us. We have set up creeds and systems, and have become divided into sects and cliques, and thus have lost the unity which makes testimony irresistible. And so the world asks, "Where is their GOD?" instead of taking hold of our skirts, as of those who are Jews inwardly, and saying, "We will go with you, for we have heard that GOD is with you."

Is it not time for us to come together and stand on the bare Rock of Ages, and be witnesses of HIM? Amidst our Conferences and Congresses, and Conventions, can there not be one at which we may dig through all our isms and individualism, through the chalk, and shale, and clay, and sand, of views and creeds, down to the Rock, which is Christ, until we all stand side by side upon that Foundation-stone? Might we not assuredly hope that there, walking by the same rule, minding the same thing, wherein we were otherwise minded God would reveal even that unto us?

All who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, love his appearing. They differ widely as to when He will come; and post-millennialists and pre-millennialists seldom meet on the same platform to encourage one another in that blessed hope. Even pre-millennialists are divided into two great camps, of presentists and futurists, and some smaller ones; and rarely do they come together to bear witness to their common hope. Or if they do, the differences of detail have a painful tendency to emphasize themselves, rather than the agreement in their hope on Him.

Might there not be a Conference of those who love his appearing, to meditate on his glory and to speak of HIM? Would it not be an edifying thing to seek out and to define how much we are agreed upon? Doing so, would not God reveal the truth whereon we were otherwise minded; and so lead us to one mind and one judgment, and consequently to an united testimony as to his appearing? Is it not probable that such a revelation as God would make to his people so waiting on Him, would show that the visions of the Apocalypse, for example, cover a larger area than any private interpretation, and would harmonise views which seem to be in conflict, because we only see one aspect at a time?

There is no controversy between brethren so long as we are simply seekers after truth. It is when we claim as our own the truths we find, or the errors that we take for truths, that the controversy begins; only then we fight for our own discoveries, or for our own opinions about other men's discoveries. Then, like the carnal and childish Corinthians, there must be schisms and sects among us, that those who are approved among us may be made manifest, and then we say we are of Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or Christ. And so we have eaten each before other his own supper and not the Lord's, and one has been hungry and another surfeited; yea, we have eaten and drunk unworthily, not discerning the Lord's body, and have been guilty of the body and blood of the Lord.

But we are wearying of this Corinthian carnival, and are discovering that those things in which we agree are much more, and much more important, than those on which we differ; and we are perceiving that the Lord Himself is saying to us, in the words of his ambassador, who spake in Christ's stead to our disorderly brethren in the infant Church at Corinth: "Wherefore, my brethren, when ye come together to eat, tarry one for another. . . . And the rest will I set in order when I come" (1 Cor. xi.)

And so, eating his flesh and drinking his blood, He leads us on to know (xii.) that all our gifts are his; that each is necessary to the rest, as an essential member of the one body; that He clothes the uncomely the more abundantly with his own comeliness; that for the health and welfare of the body He has given special gifts, which He bids us covet earnestly. But before apostles, prophets, and teachers, before miracles and gifts of healing, before helps, and governments, and diversities of tongues, He shows us a super-excellent way. And, joining hand in hand in holy fellowship, those of the host who have passed the flood, and those who are passing now, are seen to be one long line of witnesses, whose only life-work it was, and is, to show forth his death until He come. And down the ages there thrills through every heart the ever present prayer: "And now I am no more in the world, but these are in the world, and I come to Thee. Holy Father, keep through thine own Name those whom Thou hast given Me, that they may be one as we are. . . . And I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it, that the LOVE wherewith Thou hast loved Me may be in them, and I in them."

"And now abideth faith, hope, love—these three; but the greatest of these is love." "Little children, love one another." That we may be of one accord in one place, of one heart and of one soul, having all things common, and with great power give witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, and great grace be upon us all, "that the world may believe that THOU hast sent ME." SOLDIERS' HOME, ALDERSHOT.—We have received an interesting report of the twenty-first anniversary of the opening of Miss Daniel's Mission Hall at this military station; through the pressure on our space we are obliged to defer its insertion.

THEATRICAL EMPLOYES.

THE unwearied energies of scarcely less than 60,000 souls are spent in amusing the public. Men, women, and children alike are immolated on the altar of worldly gratification. Four years' daily association with actresses, ballet and chorus girls, and children, have only tended further to convince the representatives of the Theatrical Mission that the service of God and Mammon is incompatible. The kindly and Christian influence brought to bear upon about 6000 theatrical employés in the central Christian club-rooms provided for them, have with God's blessing been the means of leading many into the light and liberty there are in Christ. By the supply of bodily needs the hearts of others have been softened, so that between two and three hundred have voluntarily sought and found more congenial employment.

That this is the natural outcome of a true spiritual work is evidenced by the two following extracts of letters, the one being from a talented operatic artiste, the other from a dancer and music-hall comedienne:—

"I do indeed try to think seriously. Then comes the thought of how one can lead a heavenly life on the stage. I have no business to fall back upon but my voice. I was brought up for a governess, but I could not take to that now." This young lady, when she first came under the notice of the mission workers, was one of the least hopeful—apparently hardened and indifferent to spiritual things.

Mademoiselle L—— writes: "I long with all my heart to follow Jesus in spirit and in truth, but the question comes again, 'Can I do it while I am on the stage? Is it not for my own glory I am striving to please others instead of my God?' You would not believe how I long to follow Jesus, but then how could I live? I know no other trade. If only I had money enough to help mother and myself to live; but as I have not, I pray the Lord with all my heart to show me what to do."

This conviction is the outcome of some six years' efforts put forth in her behalf; amongst these the first was the monthly letter she regularly received from a Christian lady. Visits to her home, and advice to attend some local evangelistic service, deepened the conviction. Such instances are gleams of sunlight much needed, and graciously granted from time to time.

Touching appeals from parents, beseeching Mr. and Mrs. Todd to trace their missing daughters, greeted them on their return from eight weeks' deputation work in the summer. Seven young girls, fifteen years old or under, had been induced by the male members of one theatrical company to quit their homes, and from stage life had sunk to that on the streets. Four have been induced to return; of the others the youngest is friendless, and refuses to enter a refuge, being so captivated with the unrealities and sins of the theatre. One is motherless, has a drunken father—a scene-shifter—and a wretched home; the third is so sadly fallen that her relatives refuse to take her back.

For such cases we have no hope but in the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. They form a special branch of this important work; for thoughtful readers will well understand that girls known to be fallen could not be allowed the use of the Institute lest they should lead astray those who are striving to keep themselves respectable.

The Council of the Mission would be cheered if they could see their way to rent the remainder of the house in King-street, Covent-garden, two floors only of which constitute the present Institute. It has become a necessity to provide extra class-rooms and more adequate office accommodation. Sleeping apartments have also become absolutely needful for foreign and country girls. Fascinated by the glitter and attractions of the stage, with its liberal salary, they think their fortune is made; while, alas, it is too often found that being alone in London, and without respectable apartments, they readily drift into paths of sin. This might, to some extent, be obviated by the establishment of such a Home; its occupants would probably be induced to return at the end of the first season to the parental roof. £100 additional per annum is required for the rental of eight rooms which could be added. The total expense could hardly be less than £300, including partial board, which in many cases would have to be given.

Money, however, is not all that is needed. Voluntary but regular lady visitors for about 15,000 homes of theatrical employés in London and suburbs are required at once. The one lady at present officially engaged is completely overtaxed, and appeals for helpers to work with her. The constant removals, changes of name, and even appearance, render this work different from ordinary district visiting, much tact and patience being indispensable. Surely some readers could devote three or four hours twice a week to this excellently organised scheme. Others, hindered from more active service, might become associated as lady correspondents with some of the numerous unallotted members.

Within the last week several have decided for Christ, and have been added to those ex-employés of the stage who meet as a class on Saturdays for instruction in the spiritual life. A programme of classes and meetings will be gladly lent on application to Mr. Courthope Todd, 21, King-street, Covent-garden, W.C.

A WORKER IN THE AUSTRALIAN BUSH.

THERE is a good work to be done for the Lord in the Bush, but in this colony there is no Society to take the Word of Life into the interior. I have given up my employment, provided myself with a waggonette and horse, and by the sale of religious books seek to support myself whilst I tell "the sweet story of old."

A few incidents may not be out of place. Whilst delivering the Gospel message in a little inland town, I was told of a place a few miles distant where they had no service. I made my way thither, but found there was no place to meet in; there were nothing but bark huts or tents, except the store and the public-house. Of course we could hold a meeting in the open-air in the afternoon, but it being winter it was too cold to meet in the evening without a shelter. In the afternoon we had a good time; the men came round and, sitting, drank in the word of life. I was very anxious to have a meeting in some place at night, so I went to the publican (with little faith). He gave us the use of his billiard room to hold service in, and a most glorious time we had. Before the meeting commenced the place was filled, some coming miles. They put the people on the tables, brought in stools, chairs, &c., and as a last resource, sacks of chaff. Those who could not find sitting room stood either in or out.

Again I found that the arm of the Lord was not shortened nor his ear heavy. When the meeting was over the publican made me promise that should I ever go that way again I would call. They would remove a partition and so make more accommodation.

In many places I have gone to they never had seen a tract, and as a rule received them well. In the silent bush the men and women are open to the truth, and in many cases very gladly receive it when put simply and plainly before them. I am not in a position to purchase tracts, as I find it almost more than I can do to keep my horse and pay my way. Of course it's rough camping out in the Bush, week after week, where you have to be your own cook, tailor, washerwoman, groom, &c. I shall be grateful if you will make an appeal for me to enable me to take the glad tidings into the Bush, where they so very seldom hear the Gospel message. Should any one be disposed to respond they may communicate with my brother, Hermon Hulbert, 101, Old Ford-road, London, E.; who will forward anything to me.—Yours faithfully,

JOEL HULBERT.

For the Young.

AN OLD-FASHIONED REVIVAL.

IT was about the year 1830 that a young girl, Elizabeth H——, left her home to go to the village of Great Falls, U.S., to work in a cotton mill, which had been recently erected there. She had become discontented in school, having seen her young friends who had worked in the factory come home with their fine dresses and gold necklaces and shell combs, and she wanted to go away from home and work and procure such things, which seemed so very pleasing to her childish eyes. Her judicious mother urged her to remain, and obtain an education; but she was anxious to go, and her father, who worked in the mill, consented, and came home one time, and said that he had found her a place to work. Her mother wept as she parted with her, but she said:

"Well, Elizabeth, you will go, and your father is willing, and I can only give you into God's hands, and pray for you."

She went to the factory, and entered a boarding-house, where there were one hundred and ten girls, with hardly a Christian among them. They were giddy, wild, and gay, and she heard there what she never had before, oaths and curses from the lips of women.

Elizabeth was a great reader, and having exhausted her stock of novels and romances, she one night went into the adjacent room, occupied by a Methodist girl, to get something to read. The girl loaned her a tract, "Serious Thoughts on Eternity." She read it through in a few minutes, and went to bed. It fastened on her mind, and she got up again and read it over. There was no slumber for her that night, and from that time for three weeks she could hardly eat or sleep. She felt herself the chief of sinners, and knew not the way of escape. She had as a room-mate a backslider, and she once asked her if she would pray with her, if she would kneel down by her side. She reluctantly promised that she would; but before she reached their room the room-mate was in bed, and she was left to struggle with her convictions alone.

Elizabeth was in great distress, and thought that she must have salvation or die. She waited in agony until ten o'clock, when they came to take the lights away from the rooms; she still sat trembling in her chair, in agony of soul, and at length fell on her knees in the darkness and prayed:

"Oh, God, if there is a God, either take me out of the world, or give me what the Christian has, to take away the fear of death!"

While on her knees, there came to her mind a revelation of the justice of God, and the depth of her own guilt, and Christ was manifested to her as the Saviour of sinners, of whom she was chief. She trusted Him to save her, and sprang to her feet, and in the darkness confessed her faith in Christ, praising the Lord for his love and his salvation. Her Methodist friend in the next room was aroused, and hurried into the room, hushing her and saying:

"You will wake them all up!"

"I want to wake the whole world up!" was the reply.

Her voice rang through the house; the girls came crowding in and filled the room, packing themselves closely about her, weeping with a consciousness of their sins; and the night was spent in praising the Lord for his mercy, and pointing weary, burdened sinners to "the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world."

She went into the mill the next day, and it seemed on the way as if she wanted to kiss every blade of grass that grew, because her God had made it. The day was one of joy and gladness, and rest and peace, and on returning to her room at night she found two or three girls already there, kneeling and crying to God. Others came in and filled the room. Night after night they prayed and wept together, until between thirty and forty souls found peace in that room, without any of them attending a single meeting.

The place had been terribly hard and cold. It was a newly-built village, and the religious interest was low. A feeble Methodist Church struggled along under the guidance of a formal preacher, and such a thing as a revival had not occurred there since the village was built.

About this time a minister in New Hampshire, who knew nothing of these circumstances, had an impression upon his mind, "You must go to Great Falls." He sought in prayer to be released from this impression, but it continued. He was unwilling to go there; wickedness abounded, there was little to attract him, it was a hard and Godless field; and he prayed the Lord to excuse him from this service. But all was in vain; he must go to Great Falls and preach the Gospel. Shortly after he attended the annual Conference, when the Bishop assigned the preachers their stations for the year. As the Bishop was calling the roll, and announcing the appointments, he mentioned George S——, naming the place to which he was assigned. Instantly he arose and said:

"Not so, Bishop; the Lord says I must go to Great Falls this year!"

"What God has made known to you I dare not contradict," said the Bishop; "Go."

And so he was assigned to that station. He came there, a tall, spare, vigorous, athletic man, in the prime of life, and, with great power, bore witness to the Gospel of Christ, preaching righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come. His great plainness of speech offended many, but their complaints made little impression upon him, and to those who desired him to soften his words and smooth his tongue, he replied:

"I was not sent here by the Bishop, but by the Lord; and I shall preach to please the Lord, if I preach to bare walls."

There was little likelihood of his preaching to bare walls. The congregation filled the church and crowded it. The young converts from the boarding-house came to hear and rejoice in the good Word of Life. The house of prayer became a Bochim—a place of weeping—sobs and cries were heard throughout the congregation. Scores were converted. The place was too strait for the people, and an overflow meeting was held in the vestry, which was also crowded. The next year two ministers were sent instead of one, converts were multiplied, and the field of labour grew large, other churches were organised, and houses of worship erected, and, though many years have passed since then, the memories of those wonderful meetings do not fade from the minds of those who participated in them. Seed was sown for an immortal harvest, and much people were added to the Lord.

A few days since we saw Elizabeth, now a grey-haired grandmother, and heard her tell this story of her conversion, and the great revival which followed. And we remembered a day, in the summer of 1879, when we stood by the dying bed of that preacher, an old man of four-score and three years, who had lived through a long life of struggle, conflict, and testimony, by no means free from errors and mistakes, but who had ever held steadfastly the faith of Christ, and who came to his grave in peace and hope, like a shock of corn fully ripe, waiting for the harvest of immortality. And we are glad to record this story as a memorial of the grace of God, and the powerful early ministrations of the late George Storrs, of Brooklyn, New York.—The Common People.

A PUZZLE FOR OUR BOYS.

If you divide the number of camels which Job had before their capture by the Chaldeans by the number of men sent to take Jeremiah from the dungeon; add to the quotient the number of lords entertained at the feast of Belshazzar; from the amount subtract the number of righteous persons who could have saved Sodom; multiply by the age when David began to reign; divide by the number in Gideon's band; add the number of Philistines whom Samson slew with a jaw-bone; subtract the number of Solomon's Songs; multiply by the number of days Job's friend's tarried without saying a word; subtract the number of fishes caught in the draught of the miracle of fishes; and the remainder will be the number of sheep in my flock. What is the answer to this puzzle?—Central Presbyterian.

MR. A. G. MARMENT, of Newcastle, Staffs., has been conducting a ten days' Gospel Temperance Mission at the Friends' Adult Schools, Hartshead, Sheffield, with great success. He possesses the singular power of moving vast audiences to tears or laughter. He delivered eighteen addresses, which were characterised by fervent zeal, Christ and his power to save being always the central thought. Some very abandoned characters have been reclaimed. The result of the Mission shows that 534 pledges have been taken, 1082 blue ribbons put on, and 482 anti-narcotic ribbons donned.

LITTLE GIRLS.—A new and valuable agency for training little girls to habits of usefulness and domestic economy, is carried on by Miss Headdon, in "The English Girls' Garden," at the Villa, Bullo, Newnham-on-Severn. Work is there combined with recreation in such a way, that what is often regarded as menial, and spoken of as drudgery, becomes a pleasure, and habits of industry and care are acquired, which benefit and influence the whole future life. An Association has been formed for training teachers, with the idea of perpetuating the system and widening the sphere of its application. It is proposed to receive girls under twelve years old at a charge of 7s. 6d. per week; above that age, 10s. Miss Headdon is making no slight sacrifices in order to secure the success of her enterprise. She proposes to sell Christmas cards to add to the funds at her disposal.

DUBLIN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION,

OCTOBER 13—16.

THIS annual gathering is a great and potential fact in the religious history of Ireland. It is one of the many blessed legacies left to the British people by the evangelistic campaigns of our American friends, Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey. As autumn after autumn comes round many of the godly, earnest workers for Christ in the green isle, gather in their capital city from west and north and south, for a three days' spiritual feast of reason and flow of soul. It seems to grow in popularity year by year. With the large-heartedness and generosity that so prominently mark the Irish character, many of the Christians in the city extend a cordial hospitality to their provincial friends, and to the visitors from "the adjacent island" of Great Britain. Added to the holy stimulus derived from the meetings, these visitors form many pleasant and profitable friendships, which are to them a source of sustenance and cheer in their remote and it may be difficult fields of Christian work.

As usual, the Conference began this year with a social gathering in the Christian Union Buildings on Monday evening, October 13. After opportunity had been given for individual greetings and conversation, some valuable words of counsel and of exhortation were given by the Chairman (Viscount Bangor), and Revs. Dr. Duncan Craig and James Robertson. The meeting was felt to be a good preparation for the more formal assemblies of the succeeding days.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 14.

Lord James W. Butler, who presided this morning, in a few opening words gratefully acknowledged God's goodness in connection with the re-assembling of the Conference. After a cheerful song of praise

> "To Him who hath loved us,
> And washed us from sin," and the reading of the Scriptures, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor led us into the presence of the King, and in the name of Jesus implored his rich blessing on the engagements of the week.

GOD THE FATHER,

in various aspects of his relation to men, was the supreme topic of the morning's meditation. In the absence of Dr. Morgan, of Swansea, Mr. James Barton, Dundalk, spoke on God the Father "as the author of the plan of Salvation." Recognising the transcendent height and mystery of the subject, and the difficulty of grasping it by any human thought or speech, he said that in "the plan of Salvation" we have the crowning revelation of the love of God. Salvation came not as the mere result of the failure of man; "before the foundation of the world" God devised this wondrous scheme, and determined to manifest this purpose of his love. In dealing with the fallen angels in a byegone eternity, God doubtless exhibited his righteousness, but only in the Cross of Christ do we see this righteousness fully blended with his mercy and grace. Mr. Barton rightly emphasised the great and practical truth of the unity of the family of God, as one of the glorious purposes of God in our salvation. It is a fundamental part of the Gospel message, but it is one which the professing church seems slow to learn. These Conferences, where human names and sects are neither recognised nor known, are doing much, it may be hoped, to bring about and manifest this unity to the world.

From Mark xii. 1—12 (the parable of the husbandmen who killed the heir of the vineyard), as a starting point, Rev. H. J. Bergner, of London, directed attention to God the Father "as giving up his Son." How, he asked, could God carry out his purposes of grace, seeing that fallen man hated Him, and the righteousness of the law had to be vindicated? In a strain of elevated feeling, and with choice and fervid speech, Mr. Berguer unfolded the "one method" of meeting the case—by the Son of God Himself coming as the representative of that Godhead, to bear the penalty of human transgression, and to restore mankind to acceptance and communion with God. Our Father is the great Giver, not the Exactor. Many hearts must have thrilled in joyous response as the speaker told out once again, with graphic and impressive detail, "the old, old story of Jesus and his love"—Jesus, the gift of the Father, as the Saviour of a rebel race. A solemn closing word came, as to the exceeding sinfulness of sin, which caused the Saviour thus to suffer, and which ought to be hated by every saved one with a perfect hatred.

The feelings of the meeting, pent up by the glowing and rapturous words of Mr. Berguer, found a fitting relief in the child-like, heart-felt petitions of Rev. James Robertson, who led in holy thanksgiving and ardent desire, that the wondrous, unspeakable love of God might be re-echoed and reproduced in the lives of all who had experienced its transforming power.

"The collection" is an institution at the Dublin Conference; while it was being gathered, not only at this, but every succeeding session, Mr. J. Fowler made an earnest appeal for the support of the united Gospel services held at the Christian Union Buildings, the free breakfasts, the Y.M.C.A., and the other good works sustained and directed from this common centre.

Dr. Brookes, St. Louis, was expected to be present, and to speak on the third division of the subject: "God the Father as satisfied with the Son's atonement." In his unavoidable absence Rev. Joseph Rainsford, Dundalk, proved an acceptable "stop-gap." He contented himself with citing, and briefly expounding in an evangelical sense, such texts as Genesis xxii. (the offering up of Isaac by Abraham); Isa. liii., xlii. 21; Matt. iii. 17; John x. 17; Heb. ii. 9; Phil. ii. 9; Eph. v. 2. Once a sufferer, the Son is now raised from the dead, and is crowned with glory and honour. On his head are many crowns. As a pendant to the address, and at the request of the speaker, the congregation softly sang—

> "Oh, Christ, what burdens bowed thy head!"

An aged brother prayed that not one of those who had heard the truths uttered that morning might remain in ignorance of "the glorious Gospel of the blessed God."

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN IRELAND.

The afternoons were devoted to the consideration of reports of work done or needed. They came as a relief to the weightier subjects of the morning and evening. On Tuesday afternoon the topic was one of vast and peculiar importance—the evangelisation of Ireland.

Rev. J. F. Bickerdike, of Dublin, spoke of the need for work among Roman Catholics, who number four out of the five millions of the Irish population. He thought people were looking too much to what the various "societies" are doing, and too little to what can and ought to be done by every individual Christian up and down the land. He proceeded to enforce this responsibility. There can be no question as to the need. Anyone reading the inscription on Rathmines' Chapel—"To Mary, the refuge of sinners"—may see that the Romanists are an earnest, but a misguided people. They may be living up to their light, but that light is a very false and misleading one. Many Christians recognise their duty to seek the salvation of others, but they think they are not called to work among Roman Catholics. Where is the authority for drawing any such distinction? People suggest many excuses, but the thing for us to consider is: "Does our Lord command it?" If He does, and we refuse, for whatever reason, we shall be slothful and wicked servants, whom at the last He will disown.

As a visitor, Rev. H. J. Berguer (London) bore personal testimony to the value of the work of the Irish Church Missions, as carried on in Dublin. At the close of his remarks, Mr. Fowler said they wished rather to hear of evangelistic effort generally than of the work of specific agencies. They wanted to take counsel together and see if they could not do more to spread the knowledge of Christ throughout the land.

Mr. Corker exhorted his friends not to be disheartened in work among Romanists, by the difficulties in the way. It is possible to yield too much to a desire for peace, and a fear of exciting the prejudices of others. Christianity has never flourished so much as in times of persecution and difficulty. Let us be willing to make sacrifices and even to incur the obloquy of opposers if so the kingdom of Christ be advanced.

Another speaker said real and permanent work could be done among Roman Catholics by the simple distribution of the Word of God, or portions of it. This can be done by all. Keep copies of the Douay Testament in the house and give them to any who manifest a desire to possess one.

Mr. Hewson, missionary among the blind in various parts of Ireland, and himself blind, said the Lord had greatly blessed the efforts put forth among this class. He found from experience that the singing of Gospel solos was powerful in reaching the hearts of the people. He strongly felt that the declaration of the truth in love was far better than any controversial method.

Rev. Hamilton Magee had something to say about the discouragements that are met with, and which make the problem of Irish evangelisation so difficult. In fact, said he, there are some who seem practically to believe that Ireland is outside the pale of evangelisation. The following were some of the discouragements he enumerated:—

The religion of many Roman Catholics is more a matter of patriotism than of religion. They have also been taught to believe that Protestantism in Ireland is the symbol of oppression. The Irish people are peculiarly open to the influences of designing men, who call themselves "patriots." He did not think disaffection so prevalent as some would say; still it is widespread. Drunkenness, too, is a great obstacle. Mr. A. M. Sullivan, whom he considered a true patriot [and whose death, since these words were spoken, is deeply regretted by many not attached to his own church], lately admitted that the public-house is too strong for the Church, and the drink interest is likely soon to be the acknowledged king of the country. Then the people are preoccupied with political and other matters, which is a great hindrance. In the south and west of the country Protestantism is very low; in some places it is almost on the point of extinction.

Coming to the encouragements, Mr. Magee hoped the people were getting tired of agitation. He considered that the condition of the country was not so bad as in former days. The power of the priest has received a great blow. It is a literal fact that the Pope made Mr. Parnell's fortune, by placing his ban on the National Testimonial Fund. The Bible is being spread about on every side. Even the Roman Catholic newspapers are awakening the thought of the people. Would that the Protestants were as loyal to one another as they are to the Queen. They are sometimes divided by paltry and contemptible differences. More of the union that arises out of communion with the Master is needed; so is more prayer. There should be a Prayer Union for Ireland which all should join, irrespective of denominational peculiarities. Elijah's prayer on Carmel turned the current of the nation's history; any humble believer can do the same for beloved Ireland.

Mr. Barton said the burden of souls ought to lie much more heavily upon Christians. How few there are whose hearts are strenuously and constantly bent on this work of winning souls. If anyone thinks he does not know how to set about it, let him get on his knees before the Lord and ask for wisdom. Much can be done by united prayer, and by united special effort. These special evangelistic efforts should be sustained as long as the Lord gives indications of blessing.

Rev. Mr. Healy considered there was a great field for evangelistic effort in the workhouses of the country. He advocated the formation of ladies' committees to further this matter.

Rev. J. Dryden Smylie said the number of those present at such a meeting was a cause of thankfulness and encouragement. In order to success in Christ's cause, we must all have a fuller and stronger confidence in the adaptability of the Gospel to the needs of men. The difficulties within ourselves are much greater than any that are without. The simple Gospel is as able to save a Catholic as a Protestant.

Rev. John Elliott, Armagh, emphasised the need for the presence and power of the Holy Ghost. That will always be given in answer to believing prayer. The trouble is that we do not believe in our own prayers, and we do not expect the answers.

Before the very interesting proceedings were terminated, Mr. J. R. Fowler referred to the united evangelistic work carried on last year in the south of Ireland by Messrs. Moody and Sankey, followed by Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan. It was estimated that at least 2000 persons had been spiritually blessed through these special efforts.

Mr. Fishe wished to remark that there was already a Prayer Union in connection with the Church of Ireland. If all the churches of Christ would unite in this matter, it would be a great blessing to the land.

EVENING MEETING.

To a noble audience which crowded the spacious hall, ante-room and all, the Gospel of the grace of God was proclaimed, first by Mr. Hudson Taylor. The key-note on the programme was "God the Father, as welcoming repentant sinners," and the passage chosen by Mr. Taylor as illustrating it was the parable of the prodigal son in Luke xv. In all these human relationships, he said, we have a type, though a faint one, of the character of God Himself. The Fatherhood of God shines out, though feebly, from the solicitude that earthly parents show toward their dear children. Another thought that comes home to us is this: we prize results according to the sacrifice that we make. If any parents have given a son or a daughter to work among the heathen, how much more interested they are in the records of work in that particular field than those who may have merely contributed of their worldly substance. How dear to God is the salvation accomplished at the cost of the human life of his only begotten and well-beloved Son! How He longs that his prodigal children on the earth should come back to his heart and home.

An address followed from the Rev. E. Smith, Fairfield, Manchester. It was chiefly made up of autobiographic experiences and striking incidents of Gospel triumphs, and was heard with deep attention. Mr. Smith has wonderful vitality, freshness, and resource in his utterance, and if he could rid himself of an apparent self-consciousness of style, he would be a sharp instrument in the hand of the Captain of Salvation, in breaking down the opposition or reluctance of the human heart to the reception of the Gospel message.

There was a considerable after-meeting, conducted by Rev. Henry Dening, and the personal dealing with many of those who remained, gave hope that the Lord had been really at work in the hearts of the people.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 15.

GOD THE SON.

There was a large gathering this morning, Mr. George Chambers presiding. The first address was by Rev. H. J. Bergner, London, who considered the subject of the Son "as revealed in the Scripture." Surveying the gracious dealings of God with his people, he traced the symbolic teachings of the Mosaic dispensation, shadowing forth the One who was yet to come. The first books of the Bible, he said, were beautifully descriptive and suggestive of the spiritual life—Genesis: man's failure; Exodus: Redemption and deliverance; Leviticus: the method of the redemption, and the means of the deliverance; Numbers: the conduct of the people as they journeyed through the wilderness to the Canaan land; Deuteronomy: the laws that were to regulate that conduct; Joshua: the story of faith, conflict, and victory. Though the Levitical types were only types, yet they were clear and telling pictures, revealing the glories and the achievements of the Great High Priest, who appeared in the fulness of time. All through the Old Testament page Christ is revealed, though the eye of the world may not discern it. He is the one central thought and figure of the whole Book. By beautiful and expressive metaphor, and with ample illustration, Mr. Berguer set forth this blessed truth, and the threefold aspect in which He is presented as Prophet, Priest, and King.

Taking up another branch of the same great subject, Dr. Marshall Lang, Glasgow, viewed the Son of God "as revealed in the flesh." Space fails us, otherwise we should like to have reproduced at length, for the benefit of our readers, Dr. Lang's clear, weighty, and emphatic presentation of this blessed truth. We must content ourselves with some of the outstanding points. "We know that the Son of God is come." This is the assertion of St. John, and he will allow no challenge, no dissent. It is to him the naked rock of truth, the Christian postulate, the absolute certainty. His utterance is most emphatic. "Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God: and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God." From Genesis to Revelation one mysterious word is spelt out—Immanuel, Christ's personality, as it looks upon us through the Gospel narratives, is a personality confessedly unique. Even Strauss must admit that to account for it we must look beyond Judea. The notion of a mere glorification of a person by enthusiastic followers is now scouted by all candid criticism. "It is no use," exclaims John Stuart Mill, "to say that the Christ of the Gospel is not historical, and that we know not how much of what is admirable has been superadded by the tradition of his followers. Who amongst them was capable of inventing the sayings ascribed to Jesus, or imagining the life and character that have been revealed in the Gospel"? John's testimony is more explicit still. He speaks of the Son of God as having come in the flesh. Lest we might be tempted to make for ourselves—and the temptation has often been yielded to in the past ages of the Church—a Christ whose feet should only touch the earth, we are reminded in the New Testament that He is come, not into our nature, or into "humanity." "The Word was made flesh." John is careful to remind us of the human nature of our Lord. He tells us of the weary traveller who sat on the stone at Jacob's well and discoursed to the woman of Samaria. He tells us of Him as the friend who wept at the grave of the friend; as the sufferer who in his last hours cared for his mother.

What is the significance, then, of the Incarnation—its true and proper meaning? Again we quote John in his first epistle, v. 20: "This is the true God and eternal life." The incarnation of the eternal Word says to me: "This is the true God." The story of his three years' ministry explicitly and distinctly says, "This is the true God." It is not a mere divinity that we ascribe to Jesus. The old Arian was quite frank in acknowledging the divinity of the Lord Jesus. The Socinian and the Unitarian of to-day will in a fashion admit that too. But it is a divinity parted from the Divine essence by a fathomless chasm. The Christian verity is the essential deity of Jesus Christ. In the light of this position we read and study these four great witnesses, so independent and yet so united. We are told that the whole world could not contain the books that might have been written recording the sayings of our Lord and the facts of his life. My belief is that the Spirit of God guided the sacred writers so that they might give to us glimpses forming the various manifestations, as it were, of the self, the heart, the will, the very deity of God. Therefore, there is nothing small; there is an infinite greatness attached to every saying and every incident recorded by those four witnesses. When I read that Jesus took the little children in his arms and blessed them, I say: "This is the true God." When I read that He turned to the poor, weeping penitent, who was bathing his feet with her tears, and said, "Thy sins be forgiven thee," I say: "This is the true God." When I read that He received sinners, and ate with them, I say: "This is the true God." When I find Him looking in wrath at human perversity, I say: "This is the true God." When I behold Him healing the sick, curing the lame, feeding the hungry, walking on the sea, and breathing, "Peace, be still," I say: "This is the true God." When I see Him hanging on the Cross, his lips parched, his head bowed, his heart breaking, as He cries, "It is finished," I say: "This is the true God." Oh, it is the mightiest, the sweetest of mysteries—"God manifest in the flesh!"

The closing address was by Rev. H. Dening on Christ as "Priest and Victim on the Cross," full of apposite and helpful reflections on this marvellous theme.

DEEPENING OF SPIRITUAL LIFE.

This topic, so prominent at conventions in these latter days, drew together a large company on Wednesday afternoon. Colonel Noble presided, and briefly spoke of the importance of "rest in God" as a factor in the spiritual life. There was much solemn and earnest prayer in the course of the meeting. A sobered and tender tone pervaded the singing. Miss Havergal's consecration hymn was, of course, sung to the well-known and beautiful snatch of music from Mozart's Twelfth Mass, and this did not meet with the approval of Mr. Crawford Johnson, one of the speakers, who mildly protested that such a glorious song ought to be wedded to far more jubilant notes.

Rev. Thomas Hackett, Bray, took for his theme "Heart cleansing," specifying that God's intention is that it should be inward, thorough, and immediate. The fulfilment of the promise, however, depends on the faith of the recipient. He quoted various well-known passages bearing on the point.

Rev. E. Smith dwelt on the subject in its relation to the love of saints for those who are unsaved. An intense love to sinners, he said, ought to be the normal condition of the saved soul. A young man on the Staffordshire hills lived twenty weeks after he was converted; in that time he was the means of saving twenty others. He who is nearest to God is nearest the inner world of self. Alone with God, alone with self, alone with sinners—these things go all together. We see the peril of souls, the awfulness of sin when we look out on it through the eye of God. If we cannot wash sinners from sin by our tears, we know that He can wash them by his precious blood. We shall not only look, but work. The sweat of service will many a time save us from the fever of sin. There is a danger of putting the work of God in the place that ought to be taken by the God of the work. Our tones will become hollow, and professional, and metallic, if we do not take care of our own religious life. Let us read the Bible for ourselves, and we shall be able to make use of the truth for the saving of others. These were some of the epigrammatic sentences flung out by the speaker, with great fervour and in great profusion. He has a large store of incident. As a sample of those related in the course of this address, we may give this one:—

We have in our neighbourhood, said he, a poor working woman. The Lord blessed her, and she thought there were reasons for her getting plenty of religion—the more the better. Having plenty of it, and feeling its power, she tried to win her neighbours. She brought them by twos and threes to the House of God. Now, in a district where two years ago the sound of family prayer was never heard, through this quiet, holy woman I believe there are at least twenty-five working-class houses in which is erected an altar to the Lord God of Hosts.

We shall have disappointments. There is nothing so hard in this world as the bringing of souls to Christ, except the keeping of these souls close to Christ. We shall sometimes be weary and sick in soul, and heart, and brain, at the sin and the worldliness about us. But if we are much in communion with God, the weariness will pass away. The deepening of piety, love to souls: these two are practically one. What God hath joined together let no man put asunder.

Some last words came from Rev. R. Crawford Johnson, Dublin, on "Joy," as one element of the spiritual life. Speaking of the fact that the world looks more at the lives of professing Christians than at the Word of God, he put this question, which he said he could not answer: Whether does an unconverted or an inconsistent parent do the greater injury to his family? He told of a young lady whom he knew, who was moved to resolve that she would "seek the religion that made mother so lovely."

Among the many requests presented this morning there was one desiring thanks to God for the freedom of access among the people throughout the country granted to the agents of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland. Prayer was asked for a rich blessing on the intended evangelistic tour of Dr. Somerville in the ancient kingdom of Greece. Earnest petition was also put up for the conversion of Ireland, and for the entire abatement of the many evils that afflict her national and social life.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The hall was very densely crowded this evening. The first address was from Rev. James Lewett, Worcester, on "Christ's Mediatorial Reign." This reign may be said to have begun when the first sinner was brought back to God. But it was only fully made known and realised when Christ had suffered and died and risen again, and taken his place at the right hand of the Father. He learned to rule because He first learned to obey. God has exalted Him because He humbled Himself to the death. The principles of his administration are eminent wisdom, perfect equity, boundless sympathy, and moral suasion. The issues of his reign are not uncertain. There is no failure with Him who is the King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

In an address that enchained the attention of the crowded congregation, Mr. Smith, of Manchester, gave an account of his personal experiences in witnessing the saving power of "Evangelical Doctrines" upon a working-class population. As he well said, nothing but such doctrines applied by the Spirit of God could have produced such wonderful transformations in life and character as those he related.

[A report of the third day's proceedings will be given in our next issue.]

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

WE have just received a proof-programme of the approaching Annual Conference of the British Evangelical Alliance, the arrangements for which have been delayed owing to the pressure of work in connection with the recent great gathering at Copenhagen. The subjects chosen for consideration at the Conference to be held in Brighton are:—The Last Words of the Lord Jesus Christ: (1) The Resurrection Message to his Church (John xx. 17); The Family Oneness; (2) The Parting Command (Matt. xxviii. 18, 19, 20); Union for Conflict and Service; (3) The Voice from the Glory (Rev. i. 11); Call to Holiness and Victory. The meetings are to be held morning, afternoon, and evening, in the Pavilion at Brighton, on Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 28 and 29.

BOOKS FOR SHIPPING AND FISHING VESSELS.—Sir,—The wintry gales will soon be upon us and they will probably destroy many thousands oft he Bibles, Prayer-books, and other books, magazines, and pictorial papers which the sixty-seven Missions to Seamen placed in libraries and bags on board upwards of 7000 merchant and fishing vessels at forty-nine different seaports last year. The injured libraries will need replenishing, and as our stock is very low, may I venture to solicit by your favour the privilege of again appealing to your readers for fresh supplies of disused literature for seamen and fishermen, which may be sent prepaid, in boxes, hampers, sacks or parcels, &c., to any of our chaplains, or to me.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

A MEETING was held in Exeter (Lower) Hall on Thursday evening last, to give account of seaside services held during the past season. Mr. S. D. Waddy, M.P., presided. The honorary secretary, Mr. Bishop, presented a statement of the work, showing that meetings had been held in Scotland, Yorkshire, and many parts of the east, south, and west coast, including altogether forty-one places. They had every reason to be thankful to God for the success which had attended their efforts, and were increasingly convinced of the deep importance of the Mission. Work had been done in eighty-five places, in addition to those already enumerated, by persons not definitely attached to the organisation. At Eastbourne meetings had been continued after the Mission closed. Mr. Rogers, at Bournemouth, had been a most valuable helper, such an one as was wanted at every station. The report urged the necessity for extended operations, and suggested, as suitable means, better organisation, more mutual knowledge among the workers, an addition of at least 2000 lady-workers, and the practice of more direct personal dealing with the children.

The assembly, which nearly filled the hall, was further addressed by several gentlemen connected with the Mission, including Messrs. Innes B. Wane, J. C. Farthing, E. Dennes, W. F. Seagrove, E. Arrowsmith, and E. J. Kennedy, who told of the services conducted by them respectively at Eastbourne, Bournemouth, Weymouth, St. Leonards, Scarborough, and Bridlington Quay. The similarity of the reports was quite forgotten amid the details of special interest connected with the several Missions, while each speaker bore testimony to the importance of the work, the growing sympathy of local friends, the great blessing they had gained themselves, and the evident promise of unlimited extension. There were many instances to record of awakening and decision for Christ among the young, through the seaside meetings. Not only the children, but their parents had been reached, as well as visitors and others who gather outside the children's circle on the seashore.

Mr. Wane remarked on the importance of securing the decision of children ere they leave school, and pleaded the exceeding brevity of life as a motive for haste. Mr. Farthing encouraged workers to persevere, saying that what he had considered the poorest address he gave in Bournemouth was used by God to the saving of a dear child. Mr. Dennes maintained the interest of the meeting by narrating many instances of blessing at Weymouth, one occurring at their farewell service on the last evening. Mr. Kennedy appealed for practical and pecuniary help, and said that a remarkable feature in the work done at Bridlington Quay was the number of elderly persons who were awakened. Mr. Arrowsmith urged all unsaved friends present to decide at once, and all Christian workers to be more zealous. "Let all sign the pledge, and when Christmas comes have drawing-room meetings for the boys then home from school." Mr. Seagrove recommended all holiday-makers to devote their seaside visits to this blessed work. One of the speakers said a whole family at Ramsgate had been saved through services held by Mr. Spiers seven or eight years ago.

As a fitting conclusion to the whole, the Chairman delivered a brief address to the missioners, founded upon our Lord's words to the seventy whom He sent forth to preach.

AN IMPOSTOR.—A lady writes that in answer to an advertisement for a servant she was visited by "a middle-aged, middle-sized woman, dressed in shabby-genteel black," who obtained money of her, gave a false name and address, and a reference at 25, Finsbury-square. We would remark that if persons answering such advertisements ask for money on any pretence, it may be taken for granted that there are suspicious circumstances in the case.

SOUTH AFRICA.

MR. KRÜGER, the French missionary, who has just gone to Kabylia, gives in the Journal des Missions Evangéliques a very instructive account of a journey made through the Lessonto country. To show the feeling of the natives towards white men generally he describes a meeting with a chief, who was accompanied by sixty armed men. On ascertaining who Mr. Krüger was, the chief turned to his followers, saying, "Let them pass, these are not whites" (equal to "niggers" in the mouth of some United States people), "these are missionaries;" ordinary "whites" being regarded as enemies of the natives. In confirmation of this, another missionary gives an account of a journey across the Boer country from the Diamond Fields. After showing the French pastor and his companion the customary hospitality, Théron the Boer said, "Why don't these English stay at home, instead of running about the world monopolising land and commerce?"

As to the coloured people, Théron represents the old regime: "The Boers are, like the Israelites, charged by God to destroy the Pagans of Canaan; a black man, in their eyes, has no right to possess the land of his fathers; the more he kills the better it is."

The missionary referred to an accident, from which a large number of blacks narrowly escaped death. "It is a pity," said the old man, "that they had time to escape. If fifty of them had been killed there would have been so many caffres the less."

With all this, the Boers of the old school are very religious. They have excellent traditions, family worship, hospitality, tenacious attachment to their church. They find some way of reconciling their piety with these barbarous theories regarding the Aborigines. But this spirit is yielding to larger and more generous ideas. The Boer pastors are seeking to enlighten the people, but their efforts are not yet crowned with much success.

In the evening's talk with another Boer the travelling missionary said: "To whom much is given, of him much will be required." "No doubt, sir; no doubt. My opinion is this: God has given me some capital. He demands, let us say, six per cent.—that is the ordinary rate of this country. Well, I ought to give God six per cent. By being honest in my business I give Him say half; in bringing up my children well I reckon I give God one per cent. By my piety, prayers, &c., I make, perhaps, another half per cent. And if I do not succeed in making the six, well, I count upon the mercy of God to let me pass all the same, because He says we are saved by grace." Are there not many amongst so-called English Christians who make some such calculations as these?

LADIES' NEGRO'S FRIEND SOCIETY.—Mrs. Sturge, President of this Society, has lately issued the 49th. Report. The sum of £178, collected by friends, has been voted in grants to various workers in the field of foreign Missions. Readers are specially referred to the general literature published by the Peace Society, 47, New Broad-street, E.C.; also to the Anti-Slavery Reporter, containing a letter contributed by the Right Hon. W. E. Forster on the proposed Home for Liberated Slave Women in Cairo. Funds for the first year's expenses have been secured, including a donation of £100 from the Queen. The Committee record with satisfaction "that the Senor Joaquim Nabuco, the advocate of freedom in Brazil, announces that seventeen municipalities in the province of Ceard have voluntarily liberated all their slaves." Also that emancipation is progressing in Cuba, where slaves are now receiving wages, and can appeal to the Courts of Law for justice. The proposal for a new school in Jamaica for coloured girls is now an accomplished fact, the teacher being a great-granddaughter of William Knibb. The work progresses on the Gold Coast, "where for the most part polygamy and slavery, with social and moral misery, abound." The contrast visible between the Christian native families and their heathen neighbours is very striking, the wife and mother being restored to her proper place, and exercising good influence on all around her.

Notes and Comments.

An excellent series of addresses by Dr. Robert Martin, of Manchester, is now appearing in the Band of Hope Chronicle. One on the Importance of the Nervous System lies before us, and its references to the effects of tobacco smoking form a striking testimony to the evil results of that habit, especially on the young. As Dr. Martin says, the younger the smoker the worse are the results. Tobacco blunts or weakens the nerves of taste, impairs digestion, exerts a very prejudicial influence on the organs of vision, induces tremulousness of the hands, injuriously affects the nerves which preside over the heart's action, and so often leads to palpitation, and undoubtedly in the case of boys reduces the intellectual power by its action on the brain. Dr. Martin cites The Lancet, and other highest medical authorities, in support of his own conclusions. Too much cannot be said against this growing practice, injurious as it is alike morally and physically.

If about 2400 years ago, two separate messages from Ahasuerus, King of the Medes and Persians, could be translated into various languages, written and delivered, at different times, in 127 provinces, and both messages delivered in less than one year (see the Book of Esther), how long ought it to take Christians now to obey the command of their King, our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, the King of kings and Lord of lords, to translate, print, and deliver to every creature in all the world his one message?

Speaking at a meeting at Bethnal-green the other day, Mr. S. Morley, M.P., called attention to the large amount of social suffering among the poor which is self-inflicted. Thousands of people would immediately elevate their condition in every respect if they would do what he had done for twenty-eight years, abstain altogether from drink. The fearful influence of overcrowding was seen in the large number of unfortunate women in the streets. Mr. Morley's contention, that more sympathy with the condition of the people is essential on the part of Christian workers if they are to be induced to accept the higher ministrations of Gospel truth, has in it a most important element of truth. The poor and the outcast are very amenable to kindness, a fact our Lord and Master fully recognised and acted upon in his own holy ministry.

Mr. Titus Salt, M.P., read a thoroughly practical paper at the Church Congress at Carlisle on Active Self-denying Charity as an aid to personal holiness. He described the one aim of all true charity to be doing good; hence great care is required on the part of workers to ensure that they work on right lines and in the spirit of true faith and prayer. Nothing is more likely to destroy the spirit of selfishness, or to elevate, strengthen, and purify, the whole life, thought, and character, than patient, self-denying regard to the miseries of others. How deep is the need for such toil was aptly set forth by Mr. Salt in the following quotation:—

"In this vast room, each place by habit fixed,
Are sexes, families, and ages mixed.
To union forced by crime, by fear, by need,
And all in morals and in modes agreed;
Some ruined men, who from mankind remove;
Some ruined females, who yet talk of love;
And some grown old in idleness—the prey
To vicious spleen, still railing through the day;
And need and misery, vice and danger, bind
In sad alliance each degraded mind."

A gentleman in Washington, convinced that the sin of slander is on the increase all round, has offered a prize of fifty dollars for the best sermon on the subject. It is a lack in relation to modern pulpit preaching that sins of this class are not more frequently dealt with. The Word of God is full and clear in its rebuke of all evil speaking, but sins of the tongue are seldom alluded to by ministers of the Gospel, although even among professors of religion they are sadly indulged in. The moral aspects of the Gospel need enforcement in these days of disregard to Divine law and precept.

The London Missionary Society is soon to lose the services of its Home Secretary, the Rev. Robert Robinson, who has held that post for nearly twenty years. Feeling that in view of the increasing efforts of the Society, a greater amount of strength and energy is required on the part of a Secretary than he can command, Mr. Robinson has retired to make way for a younger man. He carries with him in his retirement the warm affection and high esteem of all who have known him in connection with Mission work, and we hope he will be yet spared to aid the cause he has so nobly served, although not in an official capacity.

The war against clerical attire is being carried into Church of England ranks as well as those of the Nonconformists. The Rev. E. Husband, incumbent of St. Michael's, Folkestone, in a recent sermon expressed his wish that the clergy were more at one with the people than they are, and his belief that one of the hindrances to ministerial influence is the adoption of a clerical garb and tone, as though it were "the cowl that makes the monk." He admitted that there are some whose only credential for the office of the ministry was their clothes. A new era would soon dawn in reference to Gospel work among the poor if ministers generally abandoned officialism and made themselves the friends as well as teachers of the poor.

We continue to receive communications testifying to the great spiritual destitution which prevails in many of our villages. In numbers of cases no place of worship is available but the church, where often Popish practices and errors are adopted and taught. The bigotry of landlords is often so pronounced that cottagers dare not lend their rooms for any evangelistic work such as might be done if a place could be secured, and so souls are left in this Christian (?) land literally to perish for lack of knowledge. We fear these are by no means isolated or exceptional cases, but such as may be met with in all parts of the land. Liberty of conscience is not the birthright of all Englishmen.

Under the title of "A Right Way to capture Thieves," the Salford Chronicle has a leading article upon the work carried on by Mr. Alfred Alsop, of the Manchester and Salford Street-Children's Mission. The writer's impressions on visiting this excellent institution were most favourable, as, in addition to the children's branch, there are also reading-rooms, gymnasium, mission-hall, &c., for adults; and some very rough, notorious characters have been thus brought in. We cannot, however, but reprehend the writer's idea that foreign missionary effort should be restrained until the heathen at home are reclaimed. On the contrary, we believe that obedience to the Lord's entreaty and command, "Go ye into all the world," would be followed by a tenfold sending forth of labourers at home.

Miss Maria A. West has left England on her return to Constantinople. Letters may be sent to her addressed to Stranger's Rest, as before.

The forthcoming Presidential election in the United States is eliciting some very plain speech concerning the personal character of public men. It is not a whit beyond the necessities of the case, and we only hope that in England the same demand for a clean record may be made with regard to all who seek or who hold places of eminence, whether in the Court, the Upper and Lower Houses of Parliament, the Judicial Bench, or elsewhere. The Cincinnati Methodist Conference at its recent session adopted the following, reported by a committee of eleven ministers:—

"The alarming doctrine is boldly taught that 'the chastity or unchastity of public men of national repute and nominated for office before the people of the whole country is not a proper subject of discussion,' and that private character does not affect one's fitness for high public position, and should not influence the suffrages of conscientious patriots. We shudder at the consequences of having such principles invade our homes. When distinguished men—both the living and the dead—are, in the same sentence, stigmatised as profligate and lauded as patriots and statesmen, the inevitable effect is to lead our young men to regard a pure character and a spotless life as matters of secondary consideration. That such 'evil fruit' from this 'corrupt tree' has already appeared, we are too well assured to doubt. By the public teaching of such sentiments the sanctity of the family is invaded, the virtue of our children is imperilled, the purity of our public men is endangered, the morals of every community are poisoned, the honour of the whole American people is assailed, the very safety and perpetuity of the nation are involved. In view of these perils, therefore,

"Resolved, 1. That it is the solemn judgment of this conference of Christian ministers that such moral and political teaching is an intellectual and moral disgrace—a disgrace to our age and civilisation—and that, unrebuked, it must necessarily work a demoralisation of the public conscience to the youth of this generation and to our great Republic, which no language can describe and no mind fully conceive.

Resolved, 2. That we respectfully urge the religious and political press, the various religious bodies, of whatever denomination, and all lovers of pure morals, without respect to party affiliations, to unite in honest Christian effort to defend the homes and to guard the morals of our land by discountenancing all immorality and personal impurity, whether of private or public character, in high or low station, within or without the political party of their choice."

Is it too much to expect that the churches in Great Britain and Ireland, and in our colonies, will follow this outspoken and fearless example of wholesome truth telling; and that the Press will give it publicity?

The Times has had some correspondence in its columns of late concerning gambling in railway carriages, and in a leader on the subject deprecates any attempt to deal with it by legal enactments. It is impossible not to wish something could be done to prevent the evil influence of such a practice, especially on the young. There is much sound sense, however, in the reasoning that "all these matters are for moral agency to deal with. If parents, preachers, tutors, and friends, cannot bring young people to confine themselves within the limits of prudence and honesty, no laws will do it for them. There is always a way of escape out of any legal restriction, and it only gives a new zest to any forbidden pleasure. Our moral reformers must begin at the root of the thing, which is imprudence in all forms." At the same time legal restraint cannot be entirely ignored, and ought to be employed on the side of virtue, and in the repression of vice.

St. Mark's Hospital for Fistula, City-road, E.C., is one of the most useful, although least known of our public institutions. Those who profit most by its benefits are of the labouring and industrial classes, and it is a most desirable thing that its capacity for usefulness should be maintained. At present its needs are greater than the supply, and earnest appeal is made for additional funds. There is a devoted band of Christian workers at this institution, and the staff is now increased by the addition of Mr. D. W. Jones, who has been long known in the East of London as a "toiler of the sea," in connection with the "Welcome Home." Mrs. Palmer, the matron, and Mr. Jones, will be grateful for parcels of tracts or books suitable for distribution among the patients, which can be addressed to the hospital.

The sad distress which prevails in Sunderland calls for hearty and practical sympathy. The statement issued by Dr. Harris, the Medical Officer of Health, shows that the mortality of the town, especially among children, has been seriously affected by the semi-starvation, and worse, that exists. Homes bare of furniture, scanty clothing, starving families, and fireless hearths, are indeed facts to move the most callous. Prompt and systematic liberality is requisite under the circumstances reported, and we shall be glad to receive and remit any contributions to aid in an emergency all true Englishmen must view with deep sorrow.

The Primitive Methodist has a good article in its last issue on the difference between ecclesiastical and spiritual religion, a subject requiring constant elucidation and enforcement. They are often confounded one with the other, and as a consequence many souls are self-deceived. Our contemporary is none too practical, and is strictly correct in saying—

"There are men to-day who are scrupulously religious, who are sound in creed, attentive to ecclesiastical arrangements, and zealous to win converts, but who will take advantage of their brother for their own interest, who will take usury from the poor, and leave the helpless to perish. There are men who would not miss a Mass or attendance at church or chapel on Sunday; who would not miss a meeting or neglect their contribution to the church funds; who would not read a doubtful book or be seen in the company of a person suspected of heresy; who would not put themselves in circumstances where they could be misunderstood, or go further than the regulation journey on a Sabbath; who fast twice in the week and give tithes of all they possess; who are the very pink of propriety and free from every suspicion; but in whom there is not to be found one drop of human kindness; who are cold, hard, and selfish, and never knew what it was to be moved by the enthusiasm of humanity."

The work of God in Spain under the Spanish Evangelisation Society, whose headquarters are in Edinburgh, is making encouraging progress. A new opening has presented itself in Pentevedra, through the efforts of a Christian couple who have gone there to labour on their own account. Gospels and tracts have been freely distributed, and some cottage meetings held, much desire being shown by the people to know the truth. A remarkable movement is taking place also among the children of the schools in Seville. They have formed themselves into a Children's Missionary Society, for the purpose of attracting to Christ the uncared for children of the city. They have a weekly collection for the purpose of defraying the expenses of their work, and have already distributed some thousands of tracts and Gospels among the outcast poor, beside being instrumental in bringing in not a few children and adults to the Gospel meetings.

The latest addition to the sketches in The Pall Mall Gazette on "Centres of Spiritual Activity" appeared last Monday, and is on the Young Men's Christian Association. It is brief, and would be very much to the point if the words "Aldersgate-street" were added to the title. To the outside world, who do not know the exact position of the London Associations, it will, we fear, prove most misleading.

It is not often that stage managers have such support from ministers of religion as that given by the Rev. J. Lindsey, Rector of St. Clement Danes. In a letter to the author of a play now being performed at a London theatre, that clergyman strongly expressed his admiration of the new play, and urged ministers, church officers, and members of religious congregations to go and see it performed, at the same time wishing the manager success in his endeavour "to preach such powerful sermons from the stage." It is pitiful that those whose work it is to uphold the teachings of Christ should lend themselves, both by example and precept, to the maintenance and defence of carnal vanities, so utterly opposed to His spirit and Word.

In connection with the departure of Mr. Henry Varley, with his wife and daughter, for work in the United States, a special meeting for prayer will be held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Monday next, at 7 p.m. On Tuesday, the 28th inst., Mr. Varley gives a farewell address, to men only, in the large Exeter Hall; doors open at 7.30, address at 8 p.m. Our friends leave in the Britannic on the 30th, and will be followed by many prayers for the Divine blessing to attend their Mission.

Many of our readers have been deeply interested in the colonisation of the Holy Land under the auspices of the Jewish Refugees' Aid Society. It will be seen (p. 21) that they have already a settlement at Artuf, near Jerusalem. From the first the Committee appealed for £7500 to enable them to do their work thoroughly, and render the refugees independent and self-supporting. They have barely received two-thirds of that sum. Yet even with the limited means at their disposal, much has been done. A property of 2500 acres has been bought, and nearly 200 Jews have been maintained thereon under Christian teaching and supervision, and are really showing some aptitude for agricultural work. The first crops went mainly to the fellahin who had planted them, and a good deal of labour and expense will be necessary before the work will be thoroughly remunerative. £7500 is not a large amount to spend on an experiment so deeply interesting. We trust that £1000, for which a special appeal is now made, will quickly be forthcoming from those who obey the injunction to, and believe the promise, "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem; they shall prosper that love thee."

Y.W.C.A., GROSVENOR HOUSE, GREENWICH.—This institution, of which Miss Stone is the honorary manager, is progressing in a most satisfactory way. A large meeting of friends—chiefly ladies—gathered together last Thursday to celebrate the close of the second year, to hear the annual report, and to confer on the work of the future. The addresses given by Dr. Saphir, Mr. W. T. Paton, Mr. C. B. Ker, and Dr. McKillian, were of a most earnest and practical character. The absence of Mr. Stone was very feelingly alluded to, he having had to undertake an extended voyage to recruit his health.

BLANDINA.

(SECOND CENTURY A.D.)

WITH news of Christ the Lord Pothinus came,
And with him Irenæus, o'er the Sea
Called Great, bringing with joy along the Rhone
The story of the Cross.
Seven years, by day,
By night, in lonely village and in town,
Following the winding stream, the mountain path,
Up to Savoy and to the rugged Alps,
The young disciple preached in Celtic tongue,
And men were brought from darkness into light
To find the peace the world can never give
Or take away.
Then came the day of fire,
Of scourgings in the market-place, the stake,
The wild beasts' den, the vile arena mob,
When all the brutal crowd arose in wrath
And shrieked for blood.
A few, and but a few,
Afraid of sword and flame, in fear of death,
Denied their Lord, and offered to the gods.
One man, a Roman, claimed appeal to Rome.
So messengers were sent to learn the will
Of him who ruled at Rome, Aurelius:
And he who wept upon a sophist's words
Bade all the Vienne colony uprise,
With that at Lyons, too, to drag to death
Those who had dared to speak of Christ
And of a risen Lord.
Pothinus died in jail,
The aged frame racked out of shape. The streets,
The baths, the forum, were but hunting-grounds,
The tribune urging on the mob.
One girl,
Blandina, brought before the Judge, stood firm,
A bondmaid only, yet of Christ beloved,
Heroic in her faith.
No creaking rack,
No flame, no dungeon gloom or yelping crowd,
Could fright her soul; for in her pangs she saw
One with her in the furnace fire, whose form
Was like unto the Son of God.
A feast
Was given to the mob, and in the ring
Maturas, Sanctus, and Blandina stood.
"I am a Christian," Sanctus calmly said;
Maturas smiled, and simply whispered, "Christ,"
Lingering upon the Master's name. The girl,
"We are the Lord's, we do no wrong."
The crowd
Shrieked out, and glowing pincers, fire, and rack,
Were plied, till death, sick of the cruel sight,
Brought surcease to the youths.
Tied to a stake,
Blandina stood in prayer. Forth rushed the beasts,
But, as at Babylon, the lions' mouths
Were shut of God; they hurt her not, but slow
Crept to their dens across the blood-stained dust,
More human than the yelling men.
Once more
The girl was dragged to jail, and day by day
Brought to the ring to see her brethren die,
Until no more of them remained; and then,
Beaten with many stripes, burned in the fire,
Tied in a net, they threw her to a bull;
And so at length she died—"I do no wrong,
I am the Lord's," upon her paling lips.
For six long nights the bodies of the slain [guards,
Mangled, and charred, and torn, were watched by
And then thrown to the flames, their whitened dust
Cast to the eddying waters of the Rhone,
Like that tossed to the rippling, sedge-lined Swift,
Winding away through dewy English fields,
Besprent with buttercups and daisy flowers,
Unto the widening Avon and the sea;
When, at a foreign conclave's proud command,
The peaceful grave at Lutterworth was spoiled,
And grand old Wicliffe's mouldering bones dragged forth,
After their rest of forty years, and burned.

CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL, JERUSALEM.—This institution, superintended by Dr. Sandreczki, continues to be highly appreciated and to be a medium of much blessing to the afflicted children in the Holy Land. It is a work that well deserves the unremitting sympathy and support of Christians in England. Miss A. L. Beales, Osborne House, Bolton-gardens South, S.W., has acted as hon. treasurer since the death of her father.

THE REMARKABLE MOVEMENT
AMONGST THE JEWS IN BESSARABIA, S. RUSSIA.

DEAR SIR,—Since Bishop Titcomb's letter respecting this movement appeared in The Times, in August last, reference to which has been made subsequently in various papers and periodicals, there has been much inquiry amongst Christians as to the reality and probable issue of this shaking amongst the dry bones of the House of Israel.

This movement had been brought under my notice some two or three months before, and I made reference to it in my lecture to Jews in the Conference Hall given in the middle of July last. I was then waiting for further light. Early in September I wrote directly to the leader of the movement, Mr. Joseph Rabinowitch, at Kischeneff, enclosing a cutting from The Times of the letter referred to, and asking for information as to the origin, development, and probable issue of this movement.

On the 16th of September I received a long letter in beautiful Hebrew, in reply to mine, and confirming our hope that it was a genuine work of God. This letter was accompanied by a pamphlet, in printed Hebrew, setting forth the articles of faith subscribed to by the members of the New Covenant. The letter, in full, will (D.V.) appear in an English translation in the November number of Service for the King, and the letter in Hebrew and English, together with the pamphlet in English, will shortly appear in pamphlet form for the general reader. Mr. Mathieson, Mrs. Pennefather, and other Mildmay friends have seen the letter, and are greatly interested in the movement.

It was thought desirable, if possible, to get Mr. Rabinowitch over to London, and let him speak to Jews and Christians in the Conference Hall. This, by the Divine blessing, might stir the Jews in London and throughout the country, and, indeed, might influence the Jewish mind throughout the world. It might also increase interest in the Jews amongst Christians. I wrote a second brotherly letter to Mr. Rabinowitch, in which I mentioned this proposed visit to London, and on October 13 I received in Hebrew the following reply:—

"Kischeneff, October 8.

"Beloved of the Lord, and brother in Christ, highly honoured John Wilkinson,—You have ravished my heart, dear friend; you have ravished my heart with your letter and pamphlets, which I received yesterday. Who am I, that I should find so much grace in your eyes and in the eyes of the other brethren? The Lord recompense thy work, and a full reward be given thee of the Lord God of Israel, under whose wings thou art trusting. Amen.

"Now I will hasten to the reply. In my first letter I put before you a faithful and complete picture of the work to which the Lord inclined my heart to devote my best energies. By the grace of God, which is given to me, I am like a builder, digging in the depths of the hearts of our Jewish brethren in Russia, with the view of laying there the foundation, which is Jesus Christ, and to build in them a temple for the Holy God; to make it known to them that they are Christ's, and that Christ is God's.

"To give you the statistics of the number of listeners to the Gospel of Christ, and to describe to you the manner of their services, and their liturgy, is beyond my power just now. For many obstacles, which I cannot name here, are still surrounding us on every side, and these holy stones are strewn over every street. But by the grace of God and his Messiah, I daily gain the favour of the high officials of our Government towards my work, and I trust that He who promised us 'the sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee,' and 'thou shalt call thy walls salvation,' will shortly permit me to see the erection of a temple of God among my brethren in Russia. To this I also hinted in my former letter.

"As regards my coming to London, I write to tell you that, if you find it desirable for the furtherance of the Gospel among our Jewish brethren, that I should come to you and receive some spiritual aid from you, and to be comforted together by our mutual faith, if it be the Lord's will, I am ready to come to you as soon as I shall receive a letter from you, together with your kind contribution towards my necessary travelling expenses for that long journey, and for the maintenance of my family for three months, which will amount to about £100. When I am in London we shall take counsel together as to how we should walk to the house of God in company, and then I shall reveal to you my whole heart. And now I close with the words of St. Paul (2 Cor. ix. 10): 'And he that supplieth seed to the sower and bread for food, shall supply and multiply your seed for sowing, and increase the fruits of your righteousness.'—Your friend, who is glorying in the crucified Jesus Christ, "Joseph Rabinowitch.

"P.S.—Give my kind salutations to all those who are seeking the prosperity and the uplifting of the horn of Israel, and the consolation of Zion and Jerusalem. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen."

Mr. Mathieson has seen this letter this morning, and Mr. Reginald Radcliffe called on me this morning, and we spent an hour in reading together these letters, and parts of the translated pamphlet, and in prayer for the Lord's guidance. It is suggested that I should go over and see the work on the spot, and if desirable bring Mr. Rabinowitch back with me. In this case I should take our beloved missionary, Mr. Adler, with me, and make our visit a missionary tour, as Mr. Adler speaks Hebrew, Russian, and German.

I do not feel at liberty to take the expenses out of our Mission Fund, and I have no private means, so we put the matter before thLe ord and his people. We shall need at least £200. Should this amount be sent in to me or to Mr. Mathieson at the Conference Hall for this special Mission we shall regard it as a token from the Lord; and though for many reasons we would much rather stay at home, we will cheerfully say, "Here am I, send me."

John Wilkinson.

MR. JOHN B. GOUGH ON PROHIBITION.

AT a great Temperance meeting recently held in Tremont Temple, Boston, one of the speakers was John B. Gough. The following is the Boston Herald's report of his remarks:—

"Fellow-Citizens,—I am no politician, and I am not going to make a political speech. For forty-two years I have been fighting this liquor-trade—against the trade that robbed me of seven of the best years of my life. I have long voted the Republican ticket, hoping always for help in my contest from the Republican party. But we have been expecting something from that party in vain, and now, when they have treated the most respectable appeal from the most respectable men in this country with silent contempt, I say it is time for us to leave off trusting, and to express our opinion of the party. I do not believe in compromises of any sort, nor have I believed in them at any time in my career. I have fought the drink-traffic right straight through, and I want Prohibitionists to show an uncompromising front to that traffic. We are fighting a tremendous evil, and we must make sacrifices if they become necessary. But there must be no compromise with the enemy. You must stand to your principles.

"They talk about Protection, but Temperance people have no protection whatever. We want protection from the liquor-traffic for the widow and the orphan and the children. That is why I changed my politics, and if I live until the first Tuesday in November I shall give my vote for a prohibitory candidate. With political parties and with demagogic methods of argument and abuse we have nothing to do. I believe that free whiskey in the United States and Benjamin Butler's teachings would bring a bloody revolution in this country in less than five years, and I pray God to give us good men to rule over us. I have defined my position, and with God's help I will stick to it the remainder of my life."

THE HOUSE OF REST, KILBURN.

AFTER being closed for two months during repairs, the re-opening of this Institution was celebrated on Friday, the 10th inst., by an All-day Meeting. Praise, prayer, and testimony were the subjects announced on the circular of invitation. To this call a goodly number from all parts of the Metropolis responded, and the character of the meeting was sustained throughout. Miss Mason gave a short account of the way in which the Lord had shown her very clearly that the time had come when the repairs of the house could no longer be postponed, and the wonderful manner in which she had been enabled to meet the demands as they came in. The whole of the two houses have been renovated, and very much of the furniture, having stood the wear and tear of eighteen years, has had to be replaced. Altogether the cost will be considerably over £200.

The needs of the present and future were then spread before the Lord in very earnest prayer, many present offering notes of praise for the great blessing the House of Rest at Kilburn and Eastbourne had been to them personally. A large number of Missions were represented, and prayer was offered on their behalf. It is impossible to give any idea of the blessed and soul-stirring atmosphere which prevailed throughout the day in the meetings. Many an earnest word of exhortation and encouragement was given by the brothers and sisters present.

Mr. Russell Hurditch said he had only that very morning received a letter from a friend, a very earnest Christian worker, who mentioned that the House of Rest at Eastbourne had proved an immense blessing to her this summer. He spoke of the great need that exists of Christians drawing together in loving sympathy one with another, and added that the signs of the times plainly indicated that we should soon be driven together by the deadly opposition to the pure Gospel of Jesus Christ, and how much better it is to be drawn by the mutual attraction of love to Christ and one another for his sake.

In the afternoon, the subject that seemed specially laid on the hearts of many was an earnest desire for increased power for service through the fulness of the Holy Spirit.

The Rev. E. W. Moore gave a very helpful word on the request of Elisha for a double portion of the spirit of Elijah. The "double" portion was the birthright of the firstborn under the Mosaic Economy, in order that the one thus endowed should be the representative of his father. So for this purpose we are endowed with power from on high that we may be Christ's representatives.

In the evening the certainty of the return of the Lord Jesus Christ as King of kings and Lord of lords formed the special subject of exhortation, and an earnest entreaty was given by Miss Mason to hasten his return by seeking to win the wanderers to the fold of the Good Shepherd.

Rev. vi. 9 was referred to as showing the estimate in which those who devote themselves with a self-sacrificing, fearless spirit to their Lord's service are looked upon by Him. They may be despised by the world, but God sees them in the place of sacrifice, their life yielded up as an offering complete and well-pleasing to Him.

We closed with an earnest prayer that the House of Rest might be used more than ever for sending out into the world labourers filled with the Holy Spirit, thoroughly consecrated to the Lord.

"OLD SCHOLARS' MEETING,"

MOUNT HERMON ORPHANAGE, KILBURN.

THIS annual meeting was recently held, when a good many of the former inmates of the Home were present, some of whom, having become "settled in life," brought their little ones with them.

After a cheerful tea, prayer was offered by Mr. Russell Hurditch, and a short address was given by the Rev. Meynell Whittemore, D.D., on the motto "Keep Cool." There were occasions when we should "keep cool," and others when we should do the reverse. If we witnessed a case of cruelty to animals, or a fellow-servant doing a wrong act, or were cognisant of anything being against the honour and glory of Jesus Christ, in such cases we should do well not to keep cool, but bravely and warmly to stand up for the right. But when we had to bear with injust treatment, and contend with bad tempers, when we were misunderstood by those around us, and were worried with half a dozen things at once, and there was great danger of irritation, then was the time to "keep cool." As the Psalmist said, "I refrain my soul, and keep it low." It was sometimes very difficult to do this, but at such times it was helpful to remember Him who endured such contradiction of sinners against Himself, and who was always "meek and lowly."

A new opening in life might present itself—a delightful situation, with many privileges, where early rising was of no importance, great liberty given about "going out," and high wages; at such a time it was very necessary to "keep cool." No doubt behind such attractions there would be some drawbacks, and perhaps it might prove to be a most undesirable position to occupy. He gave this advice because if we did not at such times keep cool, evidence would be failing to convince those around us of our Christianity. "If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, . . . this man's religion is vain." These were strong words, but they were Bible words, so certainly true.

How were we to "keep cool"? By keeping close to Jesus. Then, indeed, should we find perfect peace and perfect rest. In the hot deserts of our earthly pilgrimage, when heated and weary, there was a shelter where each and all could "keep cool," the shelter as of "the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." He hoped it would be the happy experience of each one present, that day by day they might realise His tranquillising presence calming their hearts, and that they might dwell "under his shadow with great delight."

Then, as the Apostle, they would be able to say to all the worries and anxieties of this life: "None of these things move me." They would then have that "peace which the world cannot give nor take away," possessing the joy of the Lord, looking constantly unto Jesus. He prayed the Lord abundantly to bless them, and that from the meeting Miss Cole might take fresh courage for her "work of faith and labour of love."

Addresses followed from Mr. Russell Hurditch and Mr. Menzies, of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union. Then Miss Cole, for a few minutes, spoke to her "old scholars" on "Time is short." How necessary it was, because of the shortness of the time, to "apply our hearts unto wisdom." Nothing would be successful without application, and the highest object of all application was true "wisdom," which "excelleth folly as the light the darkness." There was a time for everything, but none to spare. There were no such things as "spare hours and leisure moments." She reminded them of the duty of daily Bible reading; it was through the neglect of this that so many Christians became cold and careless, and were a hindrance instead of a help to the cause of Christ.

After a few extracts from letters received, and messages from those who had been prevented from attending, the meeting was concluded with praise and prayer; and in a short time the "old scholars" were again widely distributed, returning to their different situations, we trust the better for the good advice given, and the pleasant time spent together.

Will the friends who may have read the above account, do all in their power to aid and uphold Miss Cole in her arduous undertaking, the continuance of the Homes, in which 114 destitute orphans are cared for and trained as domestic servants? "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto Me" (R.V.). M. P. P.

WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE, WHITECHAPEL.

MR. HENRY HILL, founder and Hon. Sec. of this work, has every reason to be satisfied with the success which crowned the long-looked-for event of Wednesday, the 15th inst. Eight memorial stones were laid for the new building, which, when completed, will be a fine tructure, in the Whitechapel-road, immediately opposite the London Hospital. The estimated cost of the freehold land, and the building which is now being erected, is £10,500, which will provide for the varied requirements of London working lads, including reading-room and library, refreshment and class rooms, mechanical workshop, gymnasium, dormitories, swimming-bath, and lecture-hall, with accommodation for about 1000 members. Toward the required sum £5000 has been raised; the contributions of the opening day realised £565, thus leaving about £5000 to be obtained.

A large pavilion was erected on the site for the opening ceremony on Wednesday, and a considerable audience was present to witness it. With the Lord Mayor in the chair, Mr. Hill read a brief statement recounting the origin of the work: how he had been stirred nine years ago to write a letter which was published in THE CHRISTIAN, and through which a public interest was excited; this formed the germ of the movement that had culminated in the present undertaking. The first and principal stone was then laid by the Lord Mayor. Beneath it was placed a bottle containing copies of The Times, Daily News, City Press, and THE CHRISTIAN, with coins of the realm. Rev. Wm. Tyler presented a silver trowel to the Lord Mayor, who congratulated the Committee on having secured so good a site; he believed the addition of dormitories to be a capital plan, as it would keep the boys from lodging in dens of iniquity. The remaining seven stones were laid by Sir Robert Carden, Mrs. Horace B. Marshall, Miss Hill, Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith, Mr. Franklin Smith, Mr. F. A. Bevan, and Mr. Hill. The trowels were all presented by Rev. W. Tyler, and each stone pronounced to be duly laid by Mr. Cooke Baines.

Brief addresses of much interest were given at intervals during the afternoon, the various speakers each commending the institute to public support, as meeting a pressing need of the day. Alderman Whitehead remarked specially on this feature, observing that every lad will either develop into a good or into a bad citizen; he thought nothing equal to the institute could be devised for securing the former. Sir W. Carden wished there were many more such institutions. Mr. Marshall (speaking for Mrs. Marshall) said his family have now in their possession fifty-eight trowels. Miss Hill expressed her father's deep regret at being prevented through illness from being present; it was on his behalf she had laid the memorial stone. He had already subscribed £250 to the new building, and now sent £50 more. She could assure them that his interest in the work was unabated, while, for her own part, she was never so much impressed as now with the immense importance of preserving the lads.

A largely-attended meeting was held in the evening. The Earl of Shaftesbury was prevented being present through illness, and Mr. F. A. Bevan presided. The proceedings were enlivened by selections of music rendered by the Alpine Choir. The spacious and handsomely-decorated marquee was well filled, and addresses were given by several gentlemen present.

Rev. DONALD FRASER said the town people were in danger of being swamped by the vast inflow of population from the country. There was also a danger of a dwindling process going on among the poor of London physically. This arose from insufficient food, and from the want of suitable house accommodation. The Arabs were a fine race, but they drink only water, and live much in the open air.

Rev. W. BARKER, Rector of Marylebone, commended the Institute, because of the incompleteness of the education of boys when leaving school. This would now be supplemented by the Institute, which would help to fit them to use aright the political power which is fast falling into their hands. The philanthropists of London should concentrate their efforts on benefitting working boys. He had found that pupil teachers go to the music-halls, &c., as well as the boys, and he feared the endeavour to draw the young people away from such places by providing innocent attractions would not be successful. What they must do was to begin early in life. In an eloquent address the rev. gentleman suggested that more good may often be done by indirect than direct influence, and that the general good atmosphere of a place or home is often more salutary in its effect on the young than the definite religious acts in which they are required to join.

A handsome testimonial, in the form of an address, written and framed, was presented during the evening to Mr. ARROWSMITH, in recognition of the interest he had taken in collecting for the institution the noble sum of £1200, from his friends, and among the children at Mission services. This was followed by a racy and telling speech from Rev. CHARLES SPURGEON, jun., who found a text in the eight stones just laid. Practical remarks were made on the loadstone, stepping-stone, foundation-stone, whet-stone, living-stone, corner-stone, top-stone, and memorial-stone. It was an ingenious and humorous address, and though it made the eighteenth meeting he had attended during the week, there was no lack of energy, either physical or mental. Mr. JOHN HILTON, in the course of a brief address, said he did not know what or where London would be morally but for its schools and institutes. Most of the speakers dwelt on the advantage of having a dormitory and swimming bath, and hoped the present building might be followed by others all over London and the country.

Mr. HILL thought he could say this was the proudest moment of his life. His heart had been set on raising this new building for years, and he could not express to anyone the pleasure he felt in seeing the work begun. As he looked on the stone he laid during the afternoon he could but say "Ebenezer." All the obstacles had been removed, by the help of God. Many boys once in the Institute are now doing well; several belong to Y.M.C. Associations, and one or two are preachers. Commercial men send to us, said Mr. Hill, for the boys, and then want more. When complete the Institute would be carried on at a minimum cost; no regular salaries would be required but for manager and housekeeper; and indeed it would almost be self-supporting. The great thing before them now was the remaining £5500. This must somehow be obtained during the next twelve months. A bazaar would be held next January, when he hoped to realise £500.

MISSION HALL, CHISWICK.—On Sunday week the harvest thanksgiving services were held, and on the following day thirty of the children from Mrs Ginever's Orphan Homes spent an evening at the Hall. On their arrival they were provided with tea, during the intervals of singing with refreshments, and on leaving took with them the various gifts received. The railway expenses were defrayed by pence taken at the door—one penny from each person; and in addition to what was taken home by the thirty children, what remained was sent on the following day, together with a small sum of 8s. 3d., which had been contributed. Could not this example be followed by other friends? At least we trust the Orphan Homes will be borne in mind. On Sunday last, Mr. Norman preached, and at the close there were eighteen inquirers, many of whom professed to find peace through believing.

"WHO WILL GO FOR US?"

STIRRED to the heart by the gross spiritual darkness of millions in the great Russian Empire, many of whom are longing for the Gospel message, and there is none to tell it them, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe is endeavouring to awaken amongst the Lord's people at home a sense of the blessedness of going forth at his call, and for his Name's sake to make known the story of redeeming love. With such a view the veteran evangelist has visited Scotland, and is now spending a season in London, speaking in various churches and chapels and other assemblies of Christians as he finds entrance. On Tuesday week, at the Central Noon Prayer Meeting, Aldersgate-street, after praise and prayer, gave some little account of his recent visit to Russia, of the eager longing everywhere manifested to hear the Gospel, and of the persecution which has arisen and driven forth the company of believers from St. Petersburg, scattering abroad in all parts of the Empire its witnesses to the truth. Reverting in his own simple and unconventional style to the primitive precedent recorded in Acts viii. 4 and xi. 19, our brother proceeded as follows:—

MR. RADCLIFFE

When the ten thousand of believing men and women were scattered and felt their responsibility to declare the word of life, the Lord was greatly pleased and began to work mightily. We read "the hand of the Lord was with them, and a great number believed, and turned to the Lord." Christ tells us the Father is greatly gratified by the return of the prodigal son, and much more is He gratified when He sees his children bringing back many prodigals.

Now a great many, both in England and America, are like Peter, in Acts x., asleep on the house-top. The voice comes, "Rise, kill, and eat," and they begin to make objections. Peter thought the Gospel was only to be preached to his fellow-countrymen. Some of the disciples, in Acts xi., thought the same; and from Acts xxii. 17—21, we find that even Paul made at one time such a mistake. The Lord, in mercy, scattered the disciples by persecution; they went abroad everywhere, and the hand of the Lord was with them of a truth. Although that book is called the Acts of the Apostles, I believe that thousands of souls were added to the Lord through the word of the ten thousand scattered disciples. The normal state of the Church is to be "scattered abroad, preaching the Word;" but it wants the very power of God to make us do it.

A pastor on the Continent said lately to me, "The people of my native land cannot give as the Christians of England and America can." "Why not?" "Because they have not been exercised in giving. Everything has been found for them—churches, ministers, everything, and they have not learned to give." So one reason we are not ready to go abroad is that we have not been exercised in so going forth, we have lost the sense of responsibility, and with it lost a rich and blessed privilege. And strange to say, we have been more asleep with regard to the Continent than any other part of the earth. We say "The Lord's Prayer," as it is called, "Thy will be done on earth," but we seem to think that means England, or India, or China only, and forget it means what it says—the whole earth. We have been asleep with respect to the millions in the vast Empire of Russia in grossest darkness. The Lord says "Go," and we prefer to remain, and invent all sorts of excuses for our disobedience. If God says to one man "Go," he may support ten missionaries, but that will not atone for his lack of obedience. Read Haggai i. 7—9, and find how all is profitless. Why? because, "I did blow upon it." They had been disobedient and God gave no prosperity. So it is to-day; London is crowded with clergymen, ministers, missionaries, and volunteers, and there is but little blessing, because we will not "Go and preach the Gospel to every creature."

May God stir the Church in America and England to begin to do the Lord's work in his own way, to scatter abroad and preach his word amongst his poor persecuted Jews, amongst the heathen, and amongst the perishing millions on the continent in Russia. Then shall there be blessing, and with rejoicing will we bring home our sheaves!

REV. JAMES H. BROOKES, D.D.,

of St. Louis, U.S.A., said: The last thought of Jesus, just before the ascension scene, is contained in Luke xxiv. 46—49. Read these words, then turn to Acts viii. 4, and see how the disciples obeyed. "They were scattered abroad." Doing what? Many of us have fallen into the mistake that it is only those who are formally set apart who may preach the word, but this passage is conclusive. Men and women were scattered abroad preaching the word. Suppose a man or woman had a sovereign remedy for the cholera, would they not go at once and tell it to the people of Naples or Marseilles? Now we have a remedy for sin; let us go and tell it those who know it not. I have heard of a sermon preached in London fifty years ago by Edward Irving, in which he took the ground that Christians need not wait for any formal call from church or society, but were under personal individual obligation to go and preach the Gospel to every creature. I am sure we all of us feel the reproof of the words spoken to-day. We in America particularly so, for so far as I know there are none who have gone forth from America, as many have done from this country, simply at the Lord's call and without leaning on any society or church.

Now the question for us is, Can we personally do anything of this kind? Are we called so to do? Would the Lord have us go? God grant that many may hear his voice. Of this I am sure, that when the name of Jesus is made known to the ends of the earth, that is equal to the birthday of the coming of the Lord; humanly speaking, that is what He is waiting for. When his Gospel is preached for a witness to all peoples, then shall the end come. We are not responsible for his coming, but we are responsible for personal obedience to his command—"Go ye."

CARING FOR THE SERVANTS.

IT was my privilege recently to be present at a large gathering in connection with the Servants' Mission and Homes for Men and Women Servants, 14, Sloane-terrace, Chelsea, and 186, Buckingham Palace-road, S.W. The meeting was held in the Mission Hall, at Sloane-terrace. Much was said to call forth a spirit of deep thankfulness to God for all He has wrought amongst that noble class, to whom we are so indebted when faithful service is rendered, "not with eye-service, as men-pleasers, but as the servants of Christ."

Mr. Goodchild, head of the Mission, now nearly eighteen years old, held in his hand a large packet of letters from those who could not be present, but desired to send in notes of praise for answered prayer, and blessing in various ways. A letter was read from a butler, who with his wife were made the means of the conversion of his mistress, who now treats her servants as friends. A housekeeper asked prayer for a blessing on a Bible-class just begun in the house. One in the room asked praise for the recent conversion of a laundry-maid.

Mr. T. C., now an evangelist, but formerly butler to a noble lady for many years, spoke words of exhortation to tried ones, having himself had to pass through the fire, not only from ungodly servants but ungodly masters and mistresses, who, by their conversation and demeanour, had often pierced his heart as with a sword. Notwithstanding many such trials, it was most gratifying to hear from some of these dear servants of the warm appreciation of godly employers, and their hold on the affections and willing service of their dependents. God stir us up to more prayer for the conversion of this important class. A. Malpas.

P.S.—Should anyone like to know more of this work, application should be made to Mr. Goodchild, 14, Sloane-terrace, Chelsea.

KNOCKING.*

By Dr. J. R. MACDUFF.

THE SAVIOUR'S CALL.

THERE is no rest, oh weary soul,
Except thou rise and let Me in:
A sadder bell than funeral toll
Rings o'er the heart debased by sin.

If thou would'st have thy pulses stilled,
Life's fever-heat exchanged for calm:
Come forth, and have thy casket filled
With my own choicest Gilead-balm.

What wealth of gladness would there be,
If thou wilt only hear my voice;
Angels would hold high jubilee,
And with the Church on earth rejoice!

. . . . . .

THE SOUL'S RESPONSE.

Come in! Thou Blessed of the Lord!
Oh! wherefore standest thou without?
Long have I heard thy pleading word,
Yet long the prey of darkening doubt.

Come in, come in! I mourn the thought
Of this thine unrequited love,
The days and years which Thou has sought
In vain this closed heart to move.

. . . . . .

Oh let my love no longer wane,
Tempted no more from Thee to roam;
Calm waiting, till Thou come again,
And with thy promise call me home.

High festival, without alloy,
Above this world of sight and sense;
With me would be the central joy,
All heaven its glad circumference.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Cornwall.—Mr. Richard Brown, the eminent Negro evangelist and melodist, has held successful Gospel Temperance meetings during the week at Saltash, Truro, and St. Columb. The meetings were enthusiastic, and a large number of blue ribbons were distributed. He is assisted by Mr. Taylor, of Manchester. Mr. Brown's recital of scenes in slave life was warmly appreciated.

Drunkenness in Silesia.—In Upper Silesia brandy-drinking is greatly on the increase. It is not uncommon on pay-day to meet troops of drunken men and women in the streets. To prevent, if possible, such a state of things, a Communal Insurance Society refuses to give the weekly allowance in all cases of illness that can be distinctly traced to intemperance or dissoluteness.—Der Evangelist.

Enfield.—A seven days' Gospel Temperance Mission has lately been conducted by Mr. W. Forbes, who spoke every night under the presidency of the following gentlemen on successive evenings:—Dr. J. J. Ridge, Rev. E. Morgan Morgan (Wesleyan), Rev. G. W. White (Baptist), Mr. J. Downing, Rev. A. F. Cotton (Baptist), Rev. R. J. Sargent, and Rev. H. S. Toms (Congregational). The weather was very unfavourable, but good audiences were obtained, especially at the closing meetings on the Sunday night. Besides the evening meetings there was an afternoon meeting for domestic servants (by special invitation), addressed by Mrs. Frampton; two special afternoon meetings for women; a Saturday afternoon meeting for children, and a drawing-room meeting for ladies, addressed by Mr. Forbes or various friends. The town had been previously canvassed by a large number of ladies, under the direction of the honorary secretaries of the ladies' sub-committee, Mrs. Downing and Miss Toms, and a Gospel and Temperance tract with a bill left at every house.

* From a dainty little volume, just published by Messrs. Nisbet & Co., entitled "Knocking." The author says in his preface it is "an attempt to set forth in verse the passionate, importunate, reiterated pleadings of the Saviour at the door of the human heart." The idea is well carried out, in most musical stanzas, full of rich imagery and striking metaphor. The verses are so arranged that they can be utilised as morning and evening meditations for a month. The "Soul's Response" is added in some thirty stanzas more, and the whole is a poetic gem of great literary beauty and spiritual power.

YOUNG MEN IN IRELAND.

FOLLOWING hard on the heels of the Dublin Christian Convention, there was held in the same city, and in the same building, a Conference of Irish Y.M.C.A.'s. Delegates were present from most of the leading towns in the island, north and south. The National Council sent as its representative Mr. W. Hind Smith, who is as nearly ubiquitous as any man can well be, in his earnest and efficient efforts to carry the blazing torch of a revived spiritual life up and down among the Y.M.C. Associations of the country. Mr. George Williams, who seems to be as highly revered and loved across the Irish Channel as he is on this side, sent, by letter, his hearty greetings and the assurance of his fervent prayers; he would have added his personal presence if he could. The attendance of the Christian public was by no means overflowing. Presumably, the said Christian public had exhausted its energies or its opportunities during the days of the Annual Convention. We must conclude that Irish Christians are as yet scarcely awake to the value of the Y.M.C.A. movement. Still there was no small ground for encouragement in connection with this little Conference, and one may fairly hope, without being unduly sanguine, for brighter days in the immediate future.

A number of papers were read by delegates dealing with the various aspects of Y.M.C.A. work. All were marked by much earnestness, and by an understanding of the special needs of the present time. At the opening session, Rev. D. Mullan treated on "The Relations of the Associations to the Churches." There ought, he said, to be a feeling of mutual responsibility. On the side of the churches there should be a due recognition of the varied wants of young men, many of which could not well be met by any existing denominational machinery. Pastors and senior members of all evangelical bodies might justly be expected, by personal sympathy and by pecuniary support, to help on a movement that is proving so beneficial to the young men of all the churches. On the other hand, the Associations ought to do all in their power to strengthen the hands of the churches, by eschewing sectarian proclivities, and by acting as feeders to the various churches, of course leaving young men perfectly free to follow their personal convictions in the matter of church fellowship. Mr. Mullan's paper was an excellent contribution to a very important subject, and will have helped, we trust, to dissipate in Ireland, for ever, the foolish idea that there is any sort of antagonism between the Association and the Church.

Mr. Hind Smith read a paper, setting forth the value of "District Organisation." It will be enough to say that Mr. Smith so ably represented this subject in all its bearings, that the Conference resolved on the immediate appointment of a Travelling National Secretary. His duty will be to visit the associations throughout Ireland, starting new branches, reviving the interest where it appears in danger of languishing, promoting fraternal practical union among the branches, and seeking generally to bring young men within the pale of Association influence. This proposal was received and adopted with much heartiness, and a considerable advance made in securing the necessary financial guarantee. It was stated that £350 a year would be needed to meet the expenses of the new office. Irish Protestants are surely rich enough and liberal enough to furnish that trifling sum for such a worthy object. The crucial thing will be to fix upon the right man for the post. We doubt not the man will be forthcoming, and we augur much good to the young men of the sister isle, as the result of this new and auspicious project.

At the second sitting of the Conference a suggestive paper was read by Mr. S. S. McCurry, on "The best means of reaching young men." Briefly stated, his points were these: Let the pastors of churches be asked to co-operate; have a periodical visitation of all large houses of business; get hold of strangers as soon as they come to reside in the city; have free social gatherings, the cost of which may be defrayed by moneyed merchants and other employers; let each member of the Association constitute himself a missionary and not leave all the aggressive work to the overtaxed officials; let the Y.M.C.A. restaurants be the best and cheapest in the place; let the educational classes be ditto; encourage the forming of personal friendships between young men: to sum up, let the members place themselves without reserve in Christ's hands, and "the best means" will suggest themselves.

During the conversation that followed the reading of this paper, Mr. Hind Smith urged that representatives of the Association in large business houses should be delegated to get hold of strangers as soon as they arrive, and introduce them to the Association. Mr. Mullan, adverting to the tremendous influence exercised over young minds by music, strenuously insisted on the cultivation of this element, as an attraction. Young men should not be reduced to the necessity of going to music halls and operatic performances in order to hear glorious and inspiring music. Let every Y.M.C.A. member develop his musical gifts, whether vocal or instrumental, to the fullest possible extent. Mr. McCann told of a place in the North where "Gospel soirees" had been found a fruitful instrument of blessing.

Another paper was read by Mr. Frank Fitt, Limerick, on "The work in smaller towns." As he well remarked, this is a very important subject, because the small towns provide the supplies of young men for the cities and larger towns. It is, however, attended with difficulty, especially in the south of Ireland, where the Protestant populations are comparatively small. Speaking generally, Mr. Fitt recommended co-operation between the various smaller towns in a particular district, so that they might be mutually helpful, by periodical reunions, by uniting to secure a supply of good books for the respective libraries, &c. In the after conversation it was agreed that the northern Protestant districts of Ireland offer the best field for the establishment of branches in the small towns, and such a result may be expected to follow the appointment of a travelling missionary secretary.

At other meetings of the Conference valuable papers were read on the deeply important subjects of "The Prayer-meeting," "The Bible-class," and "Youths' Associations." These are universally recognised to be of primary importance, and it is gratifying to find them brought well to the front by our Irish brethren. At the two evening gatherings evangelistic addresses were given by different friends, and reports of progress were submitted. Altogether, as we have said, the proceedings of the Conference augur well for the future of the movement in our fair sister isle.

MALOGA ABORIGINAL MISSION.

ANOTHER report of his work among the aborigines of Australia comes to us from Mr. Daniel Matthews, of Maloga. It is entirely made up of extracts from his diary, and, as such, forms a record of work for God altogether unique. An insight into the general character, customs, and mode of living peculiar to this downtrodden race is here graphically presented. As a specimen of the nature and results of this interesting Mission work conducted by Mr. Matthews and his wife, we select the following memoranda:—

"Sunday, December 23.—After the service, the people congregated around to shake hands, as is their custom at night. Bagot Morgan came forward among the rest, and said, 'Mr. Matthews I want to see you, please.' 'All right,' I replied, 'wait a bit.' As I was displeased with him, I kept him till the last, and thinking perhaps he wanted a piece of tobacco, or was going to deceive me again, I inquired what he wanted, not having the least idea what he had stayed behind for. 'I feel I am a sinner, sir, and am going to hell, and I must give my heart to Jesus to-night.' I could not have been more glad if an angel had spoken from heaven. 'Thank the Lord, Bagot,' I exclaimed, 'the Spirit of God is teaching you; it is not I but God's voice; listen to it to-night.' Said he, 'When you were preaching this evening it seemed as if you were saying it all to me; I have been a long time hindering you in this Mission, and stopping others from being saved, and I must give my heart to Jesus now.' 'The Lord is leading you, Bagot,' I said; 'kneel down, and give up your heart to Him now, and He will save you.' I knelt beside him at the sofa, and feeling that much depended on the issues of the moment, I poured out my soul to God in prayers and tears. Bagot wept and pleaded too, and in a few moments rose rejoicing and happy.

"I took him by the hand, and said, 'Thank God for saving your soul. Now, come along and see Lizzie.' It was a late hour. Most of the people had gone to bed, and Lizzie was waiting for her husband. When I told her the glad news of her husband's conversion, she looked delighted. My own heart was so full of joy that I went round to several of the huts to tell the people. In a few minutes about a dozen congregated in Bagot's hut, where we spent an hour in praising God. Everyone was in tears, and all raised their voices in thanksgiving for what God had wrought. As we stood looking at one another, and shook hands with Bagot and Lizzie, we burst out into the Doxology, and it was sung with extraordinary power and sweetness. Lizzie had been praying for two years that God would convert her husband, and now her joy was full."

The report says:—"After ten years' labour we feel that scarcely anything has yet been done toward evangelising the scattered tribes of this unfortunate people. The few whom we have instructed are as nothing to the great mass who still remain uncared for, and under Satan's bondage. A plenteous harvest of precious souls lies before us. Upwards of 8000 blacks in this colony alone are perishing for lack of knowledge. The work is of no ordinary nature. Unlike the regular routine of home or foreign missions, we are called upon to find 'a home' for every member of our Mission. In fact, our position is more paternal than missionary. We are always among them, and day by day they look to us for help, instruction, counsel, and teaching. The past year, more than any, has been rich in trials as well as in mercies. Will all who read this report please to pray that God would give us special wisdom and grace in the multifarious duties that fall upon us daily."

OVER-PRESSURE IN ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS.—The Metropolitan Board Teachers' Association, numbering 2078 members, adult teachers in the employ of the London School Board, agreed at their annual meeting to the following resolution:—"The Metropolitan Board Teachers' Association endorses generally the report of Dr. Crichton Browne, on the over-pressure and worry in schools, and thanks him for the report."

THE SMYRNA REST.

DEAR SIR,—Some friend has sent me the last report of the Smyrna Rest. It revives very pleasant memories of a visit in the spring of the present year, and I am sure your readers will be interested in getting a glimpse of that work through the story of one who saw it on the spot.

Smyrna has a large population of 200,000 or thereabout, made up of Turks, Greeks, Armenians, and Jews mainly, but all the nationalities of the East are also represented there. It is the most thriving of all the Turkish ports, and a great many English ships are constantly loading and unloading in the harbour.

There is a broad, magnificent quay stretching along the sea-front two or three miles, and it is lined for the most part with cafés. There is no home-life proper among Easterns; the café is substituted for it. Here is the café for the Greeks, for the Turks, for the Jews, &c. Professions and trades, and labourers also have their café. The Liverpool café is there also to represent our English drinking dens and to ruin our English sailors. These places are wide open to the street; many of them offer the attractions of German bands and dancing girls, and they are crowded in the evenings with men. Our English ships lie stern on to this quay, and are anchored ten or twenty yards off the shore.

The Smyrna Rest stands up quite conspicuously in this long row of Pandemoniums. The outside is imposing, and the inside is cosy and clean, and homelike exceedingly. The walls are hung with texts of Scripture in Greek, Armenian, Hebrew, &c. &c. A stand for newspapers is in the centre of the floor, and little tables with chairs are placed here and there for reading, writing, or refreshments. The one corner of the café is fitted up with the usual arrangements for supplying coffee, &c., and the opposite one is curtained off for prayer and praise meetings, and is a very sacred place to me.

If I felt grateful to find such an agency there, my gratitude was quickened a thousandfold when I became better acquainted with the work and the worker. The work was originated by Miss West, who is now carrying on a similar work at Constantinople, but it is now entirely under the management of three English ladies, Miss Grimston, Miss Armitage, and Miss Hayward. These ladies have a boat for their work, and they retain an English sailor—a true-hearted Christian, who is thoroughly interested in the work. Whenever a ship arrives they can at once reach the officers and the crew, and they distribute the Gospel messages and invite the men to the Rest when on shore. One ship lay in Smyrna over two Sundays, and these ladies used their influence in bringing a number of the sailors in the harbour to our forenoon service. The large saloon was quite filled, and they supplied us with Mr. Sankey's hymn books, and led the service of praise. I believe many will never forget these blessed Sabbath mornings.

They had nightly meetings in what I might call the sanctum of the café. There was a beautiful English yacht anchored not far from our ship, with a crew of seventeen hands; eleven of these professed to find the Lord in that place. It was a most refreshing testimony to his grace to see these men rise up, one after another, in a meeting crowded with sailors, and tell how they had come into port utterly ignorant of God, and now they had found the dear Saviour, and He was very precious to them. The yacht passed on to Constantinople, and the men took with them an introduction to friends engaged in similar work there, and before long a letter came telling of their arrival, and of their zeal in visiting the English ships in the harbour to show forth the Redeemer's praise.

The Lord is thus using the ladies to save and preserve our English sailors from the frightful temptations and ruin which destroy them in such a port as Smyrna. This is not all. They have a large hall adjoining, and Dr. Constantine, an able and earnest Greek evangelist, works in conjunction with them. He gathers his own countrymen together, and preaches Christ to them. The place is generally quite full of his own countrymen, and a great and growing interest in the Gospel is being awakened amongst them.

These ladies, I believe, support themselves from their own private means, and I see the appeal for help to carry on the work is expressly modest; but I can assure any of your Christian readers who would consider it a privilege to help forward the kingdom of our Lord in the East, that here is an open door and a work which the Lord is blessing. I would be greatly gratified personally if some of God's wealthier servants would furnish me with the means to send out a magic lantern and some good slides. This would be a great aid to Dr. Constantine in his winter work. My own immediate funds have pretty liberally assisted me to help other departments of work in the East which excited my interest, or I should not have to make the suggestion here, which I do entirely on my own responsibility.

I enclose my card, and beg to subscribe myself, A Presbyterian Minister.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

M. Réveillaud, in connection with the Paris Mission Intérieure, has been holding some very successful meetings in various towns of France. At Troissy there is a church composed entirely of those who have come out from Romanism.

Corea.—Dr. Mackay, of the Episcopal Methodist Mission in Japan is opening Christian Mission work in Corea under favourable auspices. A high Government official and the American ambassador promise to make a clear way, so far as they are able. The Methodists seem to be the first in the field as Christ's witnesses.

Pastors in Russia.—The Russian secular clergy, mostly pastors in the villages, are not generally well instructed, consequently the higher posts in the church fall to the monastic clergy. The former are so poorly paid that they can scarcely bring up their children without begging. A petition is about to be sent to the Emperor Alexander, praying for some amelioration of their condition.—Le Christianisme.

Gaubert, France.—Pastor and Mrs. Kruger, of the Free Church of Gaubert, France, desire that all the kind friends in England and Scotland who so generously helped them in the building of their new church, should know that it is to be opened for special services on October 26; and as they expect large gatherings of Roman Catholics as well as Protestants, they wish their friends to join in asking the Lord that many precious souls may be saved on that day.

Destitute Children.—The General Council of the Department of the Seine now takes charge of abandoned children. Since January 1, 1881, 2,900 children have been received. They are first admitted to a hospital, whence they go to a Sanatorium. They are then apprenticed, the Council having two large schools of industry, one for cabinet-making, and the other for horticulture; one for printing is soon to be added. The director estimates that in 1885 it will be necessary to provide for 3400 children of both sexes. The annual cost for each child is only 120 francs, less than £5.—Le Christianisme.

The Jewish Sabbath.—Rabbi Gottheil, of New York, has sent round to the heads of synagogues a communication calling their attention to the small attendance at Divine worship on Saturday. He proposes, in consideration of those who are prevented by business from going to the synagogue, that the services should be conducted on Sunday. As many agree with him, a committee is to be formed to consider the proposition. It is thought a change in the Ritual is also contemplated. Some Jews may thus be induced to inquire into the Christian's reason for making the Lord's Day his Sabbath.—Wahrheitszeugen.

Jews in China.—There exists in China a colony of Jews who emigrated there 200 years before the Christian era. A Jesuit, who discovered them in the eighteenth century, says they told him their ancestors came from a kingdom in the West, called Judah, which was conquered by Joshua; that the Jews who came out of Egypt numbered 600,000. Their alphabet contained 26 letters, but they used only 22. When they read the Bible in their synagogues, they cover their faces with a thin veil, in remembrance of Moses. When spoken to of the Messiah they manifested great surprise, and when informed that his name was Jesus, they replied that the Bible made mention of Jesus, the son of Sirach, but they knew no other.—Le Christianisme.

Harvest Praise.—The children and brethren of the Johannesstift, near Berlin, have celebrated the Harvest Festival very prettily. Many friends were invited, before whom a procession of girls and boys passed, each carrying flowers, fruit, or corn. They then formed in order, and sang verses of praise to God, and others embodying lessons to be learned from the flowers and birds, the whole interspersed with passages of Scripture recited by the boys, such as, "Behold the fowls of the air," "Consider the lilies of the field," &c. After this a sermon was preached, when the children again came forward, and went through a series of healthful gymnastics, accompanied by their own band. An exhortation was then given from "The harvest is great, but the labourers are few." The chorale, "Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord," concluded the heart-stirring and happy day.—Evan. Auzeiger.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

THE monthly workers' meeting was characterised by that heartiness which is always felt on these occasions. Friends from near or far alike received a warm welcome from the most indefatigable of workers, Miss Macpherson herself.

In the interval between tea and the public meeting, Miss Macpherson read letters she had received from some of her "old boys" now settled in Canada. One of these has been used of God in preaching the Gospel and leading many souls to the Saviour. This is but one example of many more. A little band of the "fruit of the work" was also present as a living testimony to what the Lord has strengthened his honoured servant to do.

A young man who had been in Canada three years was in the room, and was immediately spied out by the lady-chief, who promptly held up his "manly pair of hands" to show what kind of men Canada work can produce, adding, "Do not imagine that he is going to stay in this country, though. Our lads always stick to the land of their adoption."

The chair was taken by Mr. Sharp, of Redhill, who, in a few telling comments upon Ezek. xv., showed two chief characteristics of the vine-clinging and fruit-bearing.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe spoke in loving terms of Henry Moorhouse, whose beloved widow was present. "D. L. Moody," he said, "was a comparatively unused man until he came under his influence." He hoped that Miss Macpherson's Home would produce more than one Henry Moorhouse. In committing to the Lord and to the prayers of his people the nine ladies about to leave for China, he lamented the reluctance with which Christians generally fulfil the command to scatter abroad. "Let us ask the Lord to scatter the Christians. Trade is being blasted and emigration work is going on. Pray for this emigration scheme more than ever, and for the conversion of the children, that they may be sent forth as missionaries, and then what a blessing will come from this old warehouse."

Mr. Broomhall then introduced the ladies who are going out to China on the 22nd inst. Each spoke a few words, telling how the Lord had led them, and asking prayer for their work. Of the nine who are going, six are from Glasgow.

During the meeting twenty Scandinavian sailors sang a hymn in their own language, and the work of the "Strangers' Rest," "Welcome Home," and "Scandinavian Temperance Home" was commended to the Lord in prayer.

Miss Steer, from the "Bridge of Hope," also asked prayer for a new room, to be opened on the 30th inst., for the preaching of the Gospel among the women and children at Ratcliff Highway, in connection with the work at the "Bridge of Hope." The room is the dancing-saloon of an old public-house, which will hold about 200.

The meeting closed with prayer and praise, and we trust some were stirred to pray more earnestly than ever for the poor perishing heathen and the missionaries who go out to tell the glad tidings; and, as one said during the meeting, while we are talking of scattering, let us see that we are clear of the blood of the souls at our own door.

Letters to the Editor.

ONFERENCE HALL, ECCLESTON STREET.

Dear Sir,—May I, through The Christian, all the attention of those of the Lord's people who, whilst on a visit to London, are deprived of the privilege of attending the meetings for prayer in connection with their own churches, to the gatherings held at the above hall, on Tuesdays at 1.30 a.m., and Fridays at 8 p.m? The hall is but a few minutes' walk from Victoria Station.

These meetings are for prayer, and for mutual edification and help through meditation on the Word of God. Not a few have written from their distant homes, testifying to help or comfort received at these gatherings. All are most heartily welcome.—Yours faithfully, H. Baring.

OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Sir,—The public schools of England claim to give boys between the ages of thirteen and nineteen the education of a Christian gentleman. But those who have been through a public school will bear me out when I assert that the ignorance of the vast majority of public school boys of the way of salvation is as universal as it is deplorable. Their religious ideas, scanty as they are, are more or less what their parents have told them in childhood, or such as are natural to the ordinary English mind. God is a far-off Being, to worship whom always seems dull and irksome; the name of Jesus, so sweet to a believer's ear, is surrounded with a haze of mystical theology; and as for God the Holy Ghost, he only exists in the creeds of the Prayer-book and in the second chapter of Acts.

Who is responsible for this state of things? I do not wish to throw any stigma upon schoolmasters; but they are mostly of the Broad Church school, and whatever spiritual life they may themselves possess, except in a few rare cases, they utterly fail to communicate the secret of their correspondence to their pupils. "I never understand the sermons," said a thoughtful boy to me on one occasion, "but I listen to them as lessons in English." Whenever religion crops up in the course of conversation, it is treated in an off-hand manner, for to express oneself strongly on this subject is considered professional and hypocritical, and there is nothing which a boy resents so much as being called or thought a hypocrite.

And yet boys at a public school are surrounded by all the temptations which are "common to man." Not one in twenty schoolboys has never sworn an oath or refused to join in a half witty, half impure conversation. Boys are not criminals; but what can you expect? It is a marvel that they are not worse. It is only a strong esprit de corps, the natural instinct of those who are gentlemen, the prevalence of manly games, and the dread of severe punishment, which prevent so many from becoming reckless.

But though at a public school the general moral tone may appear to the outward observer to be tolerable, it is nevertheless a fact that poisonous germs find their way into many an innocent young heart, which only need a little freedom from restraint in order to develop into diseases of an alarming nature. And yet so much might be done to counteract the evil by enabling the chosen few to find their way to the Rock, where they might stand as beacons of warning and of light to the mass of their schoolfellows. One of the most influential Christians living used, when a boy at Eton, to hold a Bible-class of some thirty or forty of his companions, and the result has been that a religious tone has ever since existed in the house to which he belonged. But, alas, this is a rare exception.

It was a step in the right direction when Mr. Moody started the idea of having something of the nature of a Club for Christian young men of the upper classes. It is not unreasonable to suppose that from this might have emanated a mission to public schools. But this idea of a Club has already been knocked on the head, and a committee is now considering the best steps to be taken to form some new organisation. But I hope that, whatever scheme is adopted, the necessity of getting at the rising generation of England's governing classes will not be lost sight of, and I commend this important matter to the consideration of all Christian parents, trusting that they will take it to the Lord in prayer, and then we can rest assured that something will be done.—Yours truly,

Arthur MacGregor.

OPEN AIR MEETINGS IN HYDE PARK.

Sir,—In your issue for October 9, Mr. Charles Cook writes that "open revolution and socialism are promulgated on the Sunday, whilst Christadelphians and infidels are also seen, with their select admirers round." It might be supposed that Christadelphians are connected in some way with infidels and socialists; I beg to deny most emphatically that there is the slightest ground for such a supposition. They are as widely separated as the poles.—Yours faithfully,

Herbert H. Horsman.

THE McALL MISSION, PARIS.

Dear Sir,—The McAll Mission is much pressed at the present time for want of funds, and yet never was a winter campaign more promising, with regard to spiritual blessings. The meetings are large, well attended, and fruit is daily coming to our knowledge. But the rent of the halls and the workers have to be paid, and we do not know whence the help will come.

Our Committee think it my duty to go to England, to plead our cause and raise some interest on our behalf. I shall be glad to accept any invitation to public or private meetings, in London or vicinity, from Oct. 28 to Nov. 7. We shall be most thankful to the friends who will be led to organise such meetings for us, or in any other way contribute to the success of this Mission, which, notwithstanding all drawbacks, will make its way, and reach, I believe, in the end, the great masses of our people.—Believe me, dear Sir, very truly yours, R. Saillens.

Avenue du Maine, 177, Paris.

Mission and other Appeals.

To Friends of the Boys.—Last year many kind friends sent hampers of apples to the Boys' Homes at 22, Dorchester-place, Blandford-square, London, N.W. Please not to forget them this year. Hampers to be addressed as above to Mr. Payne. Other Homes of all kinds might be benefited in the same way.

Dear Sir,—I thank you for your kind note of yesterday enclosing cheque for £5 in aid of our Liverpool Strangers' Rest. Our exchequer is quite empty, there being at the present time a deficit of over £80. I shall be glad if you can spare a corner in your valuable paper to bring the matter before the Christian public.—Yours faithfully, Thos. A. Leigh.

Alexandra-buildings, 19, James-street,
Liverpool, Oct. 16

Dear Sir,—May I ask if anyone will lend or give a disused tricycle (in good working order) to a Christian ex-police-constable, who has many opportunities of service for the Lord in a country district by visiting, lending books, &c.? This work has been much owned and blessed, but failing health renders it difficult for him to walk the distance, which he is often called to travel.—Yours truly, C. Gurney,
Hon. Sec. of Christian Policemen's Association.
11, Ladbroke-terrace, W.

Mr. R. Bodker (jun.), who has been for some time past labouring amongst fallen women in Brixton, wishes to furnish a house for those who have not yet fallen, but who are exposed to great temptation. He is well-known in the locality, and can show good references, including Rev. Jos. Rhodes, 135, Blenheim-crescent, Notting hill; Rev. W. Mellor, Woodford, Essex; Rev. Z. B. Woffendale, 10, Gainsford-street, Camden-town; Rev. G. Savage, Spring-green, Isleworth; Mr. R. Gosling, Belmont-road, Clapham, to any of whom donations may be sent.

WORKING GIRLS' INSTITUTE, KINGSLAND.—A meeting for workers was held here on Monday, 13th inst. Rev. E. A. Stuart, of Holloway, delivered a practical address from Psa. cxxvi. 6, dwelling upon the going forth, coming again, and the rejoicing of the worker. This was followed by a conversational meeting, at which arrangements were made for future operations, and hopes expressed that monthly meetings of the same kind might be established. Miss Robarts says:—"Our present need for increased and immediate help is very great, and we also want more workers, who will give one evening a week to come to the Institute, and in various ways influence the poor girls for good." An additional nurse will be secured when the funds permit; also the provision of "free teas" for Sunday afternoons. More visitors are also wanted in the locality. All departments of the work are well managed, and might be considerably extended were the workers numerically adequate. "But," says Miss Robarts, "we are crippled for want of workers." The Institute is situated in Ridley-road, and is three minutes' walk from Dalston Junction. We warmly commend this admirable institution to the support it so well deserves.

AN EARNEST WORKER IN EGYPT.

Dear Sir,—One of the most devoted, single-minded Christian workers I have ever known is Herr Peter Rudolph, whom I met a few months since in Alexandria. He is a converted Jew, a German by birth, of good family. At a very early age he embraced Christianity, and after enduring long home persecution, was renounced and disinherited. Speaking fluently several Eastern and most of the European languages, our own amongst them, and possessing also much quiet argumentative power, Herr Rudolph is specially fitted for the work of his special devotion, that of bringing to his Jewish brethren of every nationality the knowledge of Gospel truth.

His missionary exertions, with this object, have been varied and extensive. He laboured for some time in Palestine, but for the past few years his efforts have centred in Alexandria, where there is a considerable Jewish population, whose entire confidence and respect he possesses, as he does the high esteem of all the authorities. The amount of work got through by this unassuming, ardent missionary is something amazing. A few words of his own, from letters received by me, since my return home, may, better than any words of mine, place his views and the man himself before your readers.

"On my arrival in Alexandria I set to work to organise a night-school, for the propagation of Gospel truths and the teaching of the English language, among the Jews more particularly.

"Owing to unfavourable circumstances I have been constantly thwarted from the time I began the work. The preaching of the Gospel became very difficult. I had a hard battle to fight, not only against the unbelief of the Jews, but against the prejudice, superstition, and fanaticism of the Greeks. I began to work by having conversations in houses, coffee-shops, &c. In two years I had my night-school, which was well attended. During the four years and a half that I have been in Alexandria I have distributed some 3500 Gospel messages, Bibles, and New Testaments, among all classes and nationalities. You know well, my dear friend, that I am alone here in this kind of work, and it occupies all my time.

"On August 4 I reopened the adult night-school, and it has since been regularly attended. The number of pupils varies from fifty to seventy nightly. Rev. Mr. Ewing, an American missionary, was so generous as to let me have his day-school rooms for the present. I never expected to get so many pupils, for before the bombardment the number never exceeded twenty-five or thirty; now there are sometimes eighty. May the Lord send me some Christian heart to assist me in carrying on the work."

A letter that I received a few days since from a lady in Alexandria, who highly esteems Rudolph and his work, tells me that he is now in sad straits, with no remaining funds, and with increasing responsibilities. I shall be glad to reply to any communication respecting himself or his work.—Faithfully yours,

S. Gillespie Prout.

CHILDREN'S MEDICAL MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The objects of this society are to extend among children a knowledge and love of Medical Missions; also to help forward Medical Mission work at home and abroad. During the year about £150 has been received, and disbursed to various Medical Missions in India, China, Africa, Syria, Italy, France, London, and New Zealand. The greater part of this sum has been raised by the various branches of the Association existing in London and the country, composed of children who collect money by cards, and who are formed into meetings under the direction of local secretaries, for the making of garments, toys, &c., the proceeds of which form the reliable portion of the Society's income. One lad, who is blind, worked day and night to finish his toys for the Mission, saying, "it was a good thing he did not want to see, for he could work when he lay awake at night." Friends wishing to collect may obtain cards from Miss Butler, 47, Endell-street, W.C.; also "Missionary Readings," or "Missionary Sundays," as preferred.

Notices of Books, &c.

The Orient Boys: A Tale of School Life. Hodder & Stoughton. 3s. 6d. A healthy story, of American origin, well told, and pointing some good morals that boys will do well to learn.

Child's Companion. 1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. The volume for the current year is full of cleverly told stories and well-designed illustrations, the pictures of animal life being particularly good. It will make a pretty and very welcome gift.

Sermons in Sentences. Edited by Rev. A. A. Toms, M.A. Field & Tuer, Leadenhall Press, E.C. 2s. 6d. Extracts from Bishop Brownrigg's Sermons, carefully selected, and often deeply suggestive. The book is printed in Early English style, and similarly bound.

Messrs. Nisbet & Co. have issued Bible Pictures and Stories, by James Weston (1s.); and Pretty Pictures for Our Little Ones, by same Author (1s.) These are beautifully illustrated, and form admirable gifts for little children. They are marvels of cheapness and value combined.

From the same firm comes John Harris, The Cornish Poet: The Story of His Life, written by his Son (1s.) The subject of this sketch was a genuine, simple-hearted, and noble-spirited disciple of Christ, one who was naturally gifted with poetic talent, which was sanctified to the Master's use. The story is well written, full of interest, and calculated for much usefulness.

The Church of England Sunday Service Book. H. Frowde & Co. 2s. A very convenient arrangement for Church of England worshippers, obviating the constant need of turning over pages to different parts of the Book of Common Prayer, and simplifying for all the otherwise complicated order of service.

Illustrated Temperance Tracts. By J. W. Kirton, LL.D. Jarrold & Sons. 1s. This new series, by the author of "Buy Your Own Cherries," consists of twelve striking narratives, which cannot be too widely circulated. They are calculated to be highly useful, and well sustain the good repute the writer has acquired as a Temperance advocate.

True Tales of Adventure, Valour, and Virtue. By James Macaulay, M.A. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. This is a collection of thrilling stories suitable for boys, and those who admire daring and courage. It contains numerous illustrations, which serve to make it a useful and attractive volume.

From "The Beginning" to "The Glory." By Lady Beaujolais Dent. Nisbet & Co. 3s. 6d. A series of Scripture lessons for Bible-classes, chiefly taken from the books of Genesis and Exodus, and interwoven with New Testament passages, so as to show the harmony between the Old and the New, as forming one inspired whole. They are thoroughly evangelical, skilfully arranged, and full of expository teaching and light.

Our Blue Jackets. By Sophia G. Wintz. Hodder & Stoughton. 1s. A history of Miss Weston's life and work among our sailors, containing a photograph of that devoted worker in the Lord's vineyard, and full information as to the noble work she has been instrumental in accomplishing. Every one who cares for the hardy mariners and brave "tars" of England should read this fascinating record of loving labour for their welfare.

Church Ordinances: From the Layman's Standpoint. By Captain Seton Churchill. Nisbet & Co. 2s. 6d. Members of the Established Church will find this volume replete with matter bearing upon Church Ordinances. Their abuses, arising from exaggerated or superstitious views, are ably pointed out; and the advantages of obedience are urged with commendable warmth and candour, while free from the least charge of bigotry or sacramentarianism.

The Gospel in Great Britain. By Rev. S. Macnaughton, M.A. Nisbet & Co. 3s. 6d. The author traces the history of evangelical truth as to its introduction and development in our own land and the sister isles. Beginning with the work of Succat, known as St. Patrick, he continues his researches through the centuries up to the time of Wesley, and proves the fallacy of the popular belief that England owes its possession of Christianity to Roman Catholic zeal. Soundly Protestant in its bias, the book all through holds up the fundamental doctrines of the Gospel, and the pre-eminent value of spiritual truth as opposed to all mere clericalism and ceremonial observance. It is a most useful and reliable compendium of valuable information, such as most people are but too little acquainted with.

The King's Daughter; or, The Life and Work of Mary Tappin. By G. T. Seymour. 66, Paternoster-row. 1s. A most remarkable woman; her sole ambition was to be entirely consecrated to Christ, that He might use her in the salvation of others. Well known in the East of London, she was beloved by all, and those who read her memoir will be astonished at her courage, devotedness, and striking originality. Those who desire consecration to the Saviour should buy the book.

Joseph Livesey: The Story of his Life. Edited by James Weston. Partridge & Co. 1s. The present sketch is founded chiefly on the "Autobiography" published by Mr. Livesey in his "Staunch Teetotaler," during 1868. The publishers have done good service in presenting in this handy form the memoir of a great social and political reformer. Specially will it be helpful as affording a stimulus to young readers in the example set them of successful self-help.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. we have received a parcel of Annuals, comprising The Friendly Visitor, The Family Friend, The Children's Friend, The Infants' Magazine, The British Workman, The Band of Hope Review, and Sheet Almanacks for 1885. All these are of real merit as to their contents, while the binding and general get-up of the volumes are unusually good and attractive. The Sheet Almanacks are quite equal to former years, and contain many features of fresh interest.

Simon Peter: His Life, Times, and Friends. By Edwin Hodder. Cassell & Co. 5s. The design of this volume is to set forth the life "of a real man, and to bring to light his character, motives, and feelings." This laudable aim is unquestionably realised. The life of Simon Peter, rather than St. Peter the Apostle, is here depicted. All his known characteristics appear vividly, while others less familiar are brought out. It affords profitable reading for the Sabbath, or the quiet of the sick chamber. As an exposition, too, the volume will be helpful to preachers.

Memoir of Rev. Christian Theophilus Hoernle. By his son, Rev. J. F. D. Hoernle. Simpkin & Marshall. A record of forty-nine years' labour in Persia and North India respectively. Will have a value far beyond the circle of the deceased's acquaintances, both for the character pourtrayed and the work delineated. In the former is illustrated the persistent toil of a faithful servant of the Lord; and the latter may be truly said to deserve a place in the annals of modern Missions. Sir W. Muir, and the Bishop of Lahore, in Preface and Introduction, warmly commend the volume.

Letters to a Cambridge Freshman. By Robert Somervell, B.A. Cassell & Co. 1s. The author has undertaken a difficult task in proffering advice to University freshmen. Such counsel is sorely needed, but these twelve letters, while dealing with some important points, omit many of equal moment. With smaller type and double the material the work would have been of much greater value. We heartily commend it as far as it goes, and hope that the author will soon issue a more complete edition. Having been himself so recently at the University, he is fully competent to judge of the present-day freshman's needs.

From Messrs. Nisbet & Co. come three neat and original little volumes, each of which may be highly commended. The Way of Peace, by Anna B. Warner (1s.), should in these busy times be in the hands of every Christian as a guide to restful as well as active service.—The Christian's Jewels, by Rev. T. H. Leary, D.C.L. (1s. 6d.), consists of extracts compiled from many authors, illustrative of the graces, Faith, Hope, and Charity.—Gates and Doors, by Mrs. A. Russell Simpson (1s.), is a really refreshing as well as instructive series of chapters on Bible themes. It is full of Gospel teaching, presented in a striking and original form. form.

Just in Time. By Mrs. G. S. Reaney. Hodder & Stoughton. 5s. Mrs. Reaney is already popular as an authoress, and this, her latest production, will enhance her reputation. The hero of the story, Howard Clarion, was the victim of neglect and indifference, as well as evil influences, in his early home training; the story recounts his sad career in consequence. Rescued at last by loving and persistent efforts to reclaim him from the paths of vice, he is used as an illustration of the motto, that "when all else fails, love saves," and as an evidence that the Divine compassion is boundless and tender in its regard to the erring and lost. As a Gospel Temperance story it will be likely to do good service, as well as in other directions.

SALVATION FOR THE CHILDREN!

THE CHILDREN'S EVANGELISTIC MISSION AND PRAYER AND WORK UNION.

We send Evangelists to any part of Great Britain to conduct Missions for Children and Young People in any School, Church, or Hall, of any Evangelical Denomination. Apply to T. Eyres, Hon. Sec., 253, Southampton-street, Camberwell, S.E.

From the commencement this has been a work of faith. We desire to testify that we have never made known our wants, yet God has supplied all our funds in answer to prayer.

Hebrews vi. 19.

To shelter respectable Young Women in Trouble.

FOR rules of admission to the Anchorage House, and full particulars of the work of the Anchorage Mission, and for trained servants, apply (by letter only) to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley, Rosalyn House, Grove End-road, N.W., London.

Many of the young women admitted being mothers or about to become so, the extra care they require, and (when friendless) the help that the Mission must give towards paying for their infants at nurse during the first few months of the mother's return to service or other occupation, causes the work to be unusually costly, and subscriptions are much required, sent either to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley (President of the Ladies' Committee) at her private address as above, or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

WOMAN'S MISSION TO WOMEN.

LONDON MISSION, 1884-5.

The Committee of the Female Mission to the Fallen are considerably increasing the accommodation at their Mission Houses, in view of the extra efforts that will be put forth to reclaim our Fallen Sisters during the Church Missions to be held during November and February in the Metropolis.

The Committee appeal for liberal Christian sympathy and support. About 800 cases are aided annually, at an expenditure of £4000. The annual subscriptions amount to only £1436.

Full particulars of the work are contained in the Annual Report, which will be forwarded on application to Arthur J. S. Maddison, Secretary, 32, Charing-cross, S.W.

"Moon's" Society for Embossing the Scriptures and other Books for the Blind.

Dr. Moon's simplified type, suitable for all ages and capacities of the blind, is of universal application. It has been adapted by him to 250 languages and dialects. More than 150,000 volumes of the Word of God, and other books, have been supplied to the blind of numerous countries.

Subscriptions and donations are urgently needed to carry on this daily increasing work, and will be gratefully received by Dr. W. Moon, 104, Queen's-road, Brighton (Acting Trustee); also by the Editors of The Christian.

HOMES OF HOPE, Nos. 4, 5 & 6, Regent-square, Gray's-inn-road, London, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

The applications are most distressing, and the funds are quite exhausted.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. W. Spencer Walton has commenced an evangelistic mission at Bath.

Mr. James S. Parker, formerly missionary to the City taverns, has been appointed lay-evangelist in connection with Trinity Church, Hampstead.

Baptist Salvation Mission.—In a dark spot in Kennington, a few constrained by the love of Christ have stepped on the scene, taking the light of the world with them, and God has used them to turn many from darkness to light. With "Holiness unto the Lord" for their motto, and experience, they hope to accomplish great things with weapons which are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds, and the casting down of everything that exalted itself above the name of Jesus.

Glasgow.—Some time ago I asked special prayer on behalf of the Mission to be conducted by Messrs. Mateer and Parker in this city, and now I should like friends who prayed to join in praising God for blessing bestowed during the meetings. The Mission extended from Sept. 29 to Oct 12. On week nights the meetings were held in Frederick-street Baptist Church, and on Sabbath evenings in the National Hall on the south side of the river. The meetings throughout were accompanied by signs of Divine blessing and especially was this so on Sabbath evenings, when goodly numbers waited to the inquiry-meetings and professed to receive the best of all blessings. A. Y.

Mr. Aitken at Plymouth. — The grand old church of St. Andrew's, Plymouth, is again being crowded night by night, on the occasion of Mr. Aitken's second visit to this town. Addresses have been given by Mr. Aitken daily to "busy men," which have been largely attended. On Wednesday evening, after an earnest appeal from the evangelist, a large number of inquirers retired to a side chapel seeking personal help. Each night there is reason to believe that many have obtained the help they sought. The attendance at all the meetings—for servants, and for children, conducted by Rev. J. Stephens, and for women by Mrs. Crouch—proves that a real interest is awakened, and that the Spirit of God is working mightily in the town.

Kirkby Stephen.—The annual gatherings at the Congregational Church here (the scene of so grand a work of grace last spring) took place last week. Dr. Paton, of Nottingham College, delivered an address to Christians on Saturday evening, and on the Sunday to large congregations he discoursed on "The Body of Christ" and "The simplicity of Christ." These addresses were marked by great power, and one of them has been published by Mr. J. W. Braithwaite. On the Tuesday evening a public meeting was held in the chapel (preceded by a tea-meeting), when Mr. Young, the veteran minister from Annan, Mr. J. N. Carr, from Carlisle, and Mr. Byers, the pastor, addressed the meeting. So marked was the presence of the Spirit at this meeting that it was continued for three hours. Other Christians in the town united to help in the praise portion of the proceedings, and altogether a more profitable and helpful time has not been experienced here for years.

Camberwell-green Congregational Church —A fortnight's Special Mission Services have recently been held in the lecture-hall of the above church, conducted by Mr. Oscar Owers, of the Evangelisation Society. They commenced on Saturday evening, September 13, with a Prayer-meeting, at which the Rev. W. Tubb, of Camberwell New-road Chapel, and Dr. Clemance, the pastor of the church, were present. The addresses of the evangelist were marked by fervour, directness, point, and power, and the impression made by them deepened as the services proceeded. At times the feeling of the meetings was very deep and intense. Very few remained behind for religious conversation, but yet it is certain that a blessing was received by many at the meetings, for which they will long be thankful to God. In the week following special services were conducted at the Hall at Waterloo-street (a Mission station of the Camberwell-green Church), by Mr. Pugsley, a working man, also from the Evangelisation Society.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

WIMBLEDON.

The annual members' meeting was held on the 1st inst., when an encouraging report of the year's work was read. The winter sessions has opened with an attractive programme. In addition to the Bible-readings and devotional meetings, educational classes have been commenced in various subjects, and a course of lectures, debates, &c., have been arranged. An evangelistic service is held on Saturday evenings. The reading-room is open every night.

GIRVAN, N.B.

The Y.M.C.A. here has been visited by Mr. R. Henderson Smith, the Travelling Secretary of the United Y.M.C.A.'s of Scotland. On Sunday, the 12th inst., he addressed the usual morning meeting and encouraged every heart with words of wisdom and loving sympathy which God the Holy Spirit enabled him to utter. In the evening he gave an address in the United Presbyterian Church (Rev. Mr. Stillies) on the "Field, Mission, and Methods of the Young Men's Christian Association," to a very considerable audience.

SOUTHAMPTON.

The third annual meeting of members was held on October 13; Mr. R. C. Hankinson, J.P., occupied the chair. There was a very large attendance. The secretary, Mr. Bridie, read the report, which showed the strength of the Association to be 330; £17 at credit in bank, and over 100 services conducted by the members during the past three months. The public annual meeting is fixed for October 30, when the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury hopes to preside. Lord Mount Temple, Canon Wilberforce, and others are expected to address the meeting.

TENT WORK IN FULHAM.

"WHAT are you going to put up there, governor?" was the question asked by a rough man, who was standing outside watching the erection of the tent.

"We are going to open it as a tent to preach the Gospel in, my friend."

"Well, you want some preaching the Gospel here so as to convert some of these fellers in this 'Half-way House,'"

Well, we thank God that some of these "fellers," as our rough friend calls them, have come out for Christ.

A man who had been a drunkard, said to me one night, as I was coming out of the tent: "You see that room, sir (pointing to the bar-parlour of a publichouse), you see it is all dark?"

"Yes, I do."

"Well, before you came and opened this tent we used to be sitting round pots of beer singing till the house was closed; but, thank God, we are now singing for Jesus." He then mentioned the names of the men in the tent who are now serving the Lord Jesus, who were to be seen with him drunk in that parlour. These men have now taken a shop, and turned it into a Mission-hall, that they might have a place to call their home, and so meet, to get hold of their drunken companions.

After they had done their work in the day, they came to this hall till 12 o'clock at night, making the platform, whitewashing, painting, and others laying on the gas, so that they have a very nice clean Mission-hall of their own.

The converts then met in the tent for the last time to hear an address from the Rev. D. Carr, of Munster Park. It was a sight to see the large number listening to the words of exhortation from the minister's lips.

We have been asked by the men to open a working men's club and reading room, to counteract the influence of the publichouse. Any newspapers or books for the reading room will be thankfully received by Mr. C. Elgar, 12, Pellant-road, Lillie-road, Fulham. F.

The sale of work, books, &c., on behalf of St. John the Evangelist District, Caledonian-road, October 28, 29, at Worthing House, 1, Mountfort-terrace, Barnsbury-square. Addresses by Rev. Prebendary Wilson, M.A., vicar of Islington. Friends earnestly invited to attend.

The Gospel Male Choir was, during the last five months of the London Mission, a special feature of the meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. There are, doubtless, many more who would wish to dedicate their voices to the service of the Master; and with the present volume (which is arranged for 1st and 2nd Tenor and 1st and 2nd Bass) in their hands, and the hearty co-operation of a few brethren like-minded, this wish can be easily gratified. Says Mr. Mc Granahan:—"Organize a quartet, a double quartet, or better still, a chorus of male voices; and prove the power for good in the harmony of male voices when consecrated to the glory and service of our divine Master."

May be had either in Old Notation or in Sol-fa.

"It is as fine a collection of Sacred Airs as can anywhere be found. All the Hymns and the Tunes are beautiful, impressive, gracious; and the rendering of them, and the hearing them sung in private or public alike, have led many to change their whole course of life."—Oldham Chronicle.
"Of this Sacred Song Book it is scarcely needful for us to say a word. Thousands have listened and thousands have sung them, and will retain their good impressions, when all the mists have rolled away."
Baptist Messenger

This Volume, which is largely composed of New Sacred Songs, Duets, Choruses, and Anthems, has been used alternately with "Songs and Solos," during the great London Mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Mr. Sankey and Mr. Mc Granahan are already well known by their hymns, which are sung all the world over; and the present collection, which is specially suitable for Gospel Choirs, will doubtless add to their reputation as true Gospel musicians.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONSUMPTION.

CASE of Mr. W. PRIOR.

This case was introduced to my notice in April of last year by the patient's brother, residing at Thatcham, Berks. Consumption had been in the family. Had commenced in this instance in the very frequent way—by cold, failure of appetite and strength; then cough, spitting, expectoration with blood, perspirations, hectic; then rapid loss of flesh. Dr. P——'s report: "Right lung diseased."

My treatment was commenced at once. In one month there was a perceptible change for the better. The brother writes: "Cough less; as regards pain and breathing the Liniment gave quick relief. The patient has got out a little. We have great hope he will be about with us again."

Continued improvement through May. In the latter end of June a slight relapse through cold. From July to September progressive improvement, and to the end of the year.

At the commencement of the present year the patient went to business. July 1 Mr. W. Prior writes:—

"My brother's recovery is complete. He has been five months in his situation. You are aware that in April last he was given up by his doctor, who said no more could be done for him, and we at once sent to you. From that time we carried out your instructions to the full, and had no advice but yours. You cannot think how thankful we are that we did so, for otherwise he must (humanly speaking) have been numbered with those that are no more. When we first wrote you he could hardly walk upstairs. An egg beaten up with milk was all that he could take. Now he says he never was so well in his life. There could not have been a more wonderful cure than his, and people say it is miraculous. You are at liberty to publish this. Yours faithfully,—W. Prior, Prospect Cottage, Thatcham."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

Reprinted from "The Christian."

"The Gospel is preached variously. It is sung by angels; it is lived by the Lord; it is exhibited in miracles of healing and resurrection; it is plainly published by the burning words of Peter and Paul, and of the others who had felt its life-giving joy in themselves. Sometimes it is a tale of love, of mercy, and of life; sometimes a command; sometimes a warning; sometimes an entreaty."—Extract from Introduction.

HOW TO STUDY PROPHECY.

THE study of prophecy is a duty that believers in the Divine authority of God's Word may not neglect, inasmuch as "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable," so that nothing God has chosen to reveal may be regarded with indifference or neglect. The spirit and method in which Christians approach prophetic truth, and investigate the realm of unfulfilled prophecy, is of deep importance. A speaker at the recent Conference, held at Shepherd's Bush, suggested that a contemplation of the character and example of those mentioned in the New Testament as anticipating the first advent of Christ might be very serviceable in directing us as to how we should deal with the subject of his second appearing. The idea when worked out answers admirably to the suggestion made. Seven representative examples may be employed, each one furnishing its own lessons and illustrating its own truth.

(1) We may begin with the cases of Zacharias and Elisabeth, the honoured parents of John the Baptist. "They were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless." Their minds had evidently turned to the nearing time for the coming of Israel's Messiah. Such an expectation was then prevalent in the world, signs and tokens were beheld, inducing the belief that some great One would ere long appear in connection with Jewish history, and not a few were looking for redemption in Israel. The words of the angel to Zacharias as he ministered in the temple would indicate the strength and earnestness of desire with which this man of God had looked forward to some such interposition of Divine Providence. "Fear not, Zacharias: thy prayer is heard" (Luke i. 13). A prayer, not so much for a son (for verse 18 shows his hope had ceased), as for Him of whom every pious Israelite longed to be the progenitor, that seed in which all the nations of the earth were to be blessed.

Prayer for the return of the Lord, based on earnest longing for that grand consummation of the Christian's hope, becomes us all. "Thy kingdom come," "Even so, come, Lord Jesus," are petitions taught us by Divine authority, and if we "love his appearing," we cannot fail to present them often before the throne. Zacharias receives the Divine response, affording new light upon the fact he contemplated, with mingled astonishment and doubt. Elisabeth is full of faith and joy when she is made acquainted with what has transpired, and realises the Divine intent. Zacharias soon recovers from his unbelief, and, on his tongue being unloosed, breaks forth into sublime adoration and glowing testimony. His mind has become awakened to the reality and nearness of the advent of the Lord, and, led by the Spirit of Truth, he follows readily and with child-like trust the guidance of the inspired records he had long studied, and now beholds in clearest light.

(2) The second typical case may well be, Mary, the Mother of our Lord. Graciously accepted of God, and living in faith on the word of his testimony, she too waited for its fulfilment. Her acquaintance with the prophecies of the Old Testament is evidenced by the words of her song: "He hath holpen his servant Israel, in remembrance of his mercy; as he spake to our fathers, to Abraham, and to his seed for ever." Surrendering herself to the purpose of God, in the wondrous mystery of the incarnation, Mary sets aside all other considerations, and is rapt in holy joy at the thought of the great things God hath done, and is about to do, by means of the Saviour so soon to appear. Never were maiden's faith, courage, and devotion put to so severe a test as when the prophetic intimation reached her ears, and dawned upon her soul, that the Christ was through her, as the chosen one of God, about to be born.

(3) The next figure upon the scene, as we survey the days just prior to the incarnation, is Simeon; he of whom it is said, "The same man was just and devout, waiting for the consolation of Israel, and the Holy Ghost was upon him." The sorrows and the sins of his race were ever present to his mind; heir only remedy was in the coming of the promised Deliverer,—that long-looked for Redeemer of men. All his hopes centred in the sure prophetic Word, and with eager eyes he had, through long years of holy service, looked for the salvation of God. No marvel, when at last he saw the infant Jesus, and knew that He was indeed the Christ, Simeon was ready to depart, all his deepest aspirations and holiest desires finding in that sight their fullest satisfaction. For him to live had long been Christ, and now to die was gain.

(4) In John the Baptist we may see another type. Assured that the coming One was at hand, he boldly testifies, and seeks by faithful ministry to prepare men for his approach. Moral and social evils are by him sternly rebuked, the Godless formalism of his age is unhesitatingly denounced, and the need for repentance and speedy turning to the Lord, in order to escape from wrath, and secure the blessings of the kingdom, is solemnly enforced.

(5) Joseph of Arimathea may furnish us with a fifth illustration. "An honourable counsellor," he belonged to a class of whom it is said, "Not many mighty, not many noble are called." He, too, had studied well the prophetic page; he knew things could not long continue as they were, and, convinced that God could not long delay the fulfilment of his word, he waited for the kingdom of God. Quietly, unostentatiously, but with deep and fervent longing, he sought to discern the signs of the times, and to make sure that the true Messiah was indeed at hand. Withholding decision until conviction was deep and clear, and evidence unmistakable, he held himself ready to grasp the truth as soon as its foundations were ascertained to be strong.

(6) Nathanael was clearly another of the students of unfulfilled prophecy at the time of the Saviour's advent. Accustomed to secret meditation and private study of the Scriptures, he sought to trace the steps by which the hope of his nation and the desire of his own heart should be accomplished. Cautious and accurate in his researches, frank and genuine in his spirit, and withal docile and teachable, he was one to whom the earliest rays of the bright prophetic morn were communicated: "An Israelite indeed, in whom was no guile."

(7) And then, lastly, we would refer to the Magi, those men of faith who, prompted by the Spirit of God, came from far to prove the authenticity and learn the certainty of prophecies treasured among the relics of centuries past, when a Daniel and an Ezekiel dwelt in their land, or some who had heard their predictions made them known in their midst. "Where is He that is born King of the Jews?" was their ardent inquiry; and when they had found Him, to bow before Him and lay their gifts and offerings at his feet, was their supreme delight.

Holiness of life, surrender of self, patience of hope, faithful testimony, thirst for the kingdom of God to prevail, prayerful investigation, and diligent inquiry, with a view to fullest consecration—these are the several essentials to wise and Scriptural study of prophetic truth. The angel of light shall visit all who, like Zacharias and Elisabeth, walk humbly with God, waiting upon Him in his appointed way. A magnificat, jubilant as that of Mary, shall be awakened in the heart of all who place themselves, as she did, at the disposal of God, to advance his purpose in the advent of his Christ. A revelation as clear, and a satisfaction as deep as that of good old Simeon, shall be given to those who wait as patiently and untiringly as he did for the Son of God from heaven. For them the light and the glory will assuredly appear. A confirmation of their faith, and a declaration as sure and convincing as that the Baptist had when he saw the Spirit of God resting upon the head of the Incarnate One, shall be granted to those who as faithfully, and with similar self abnegation, serve unto the kingdom of God's dear Son. An issue, brighter than that which succeeded Joseph's secret discipleship, when he laid the Saviour in his newly-prepared tomb, shall follow the quiet waiting of all who Joseph-like hide in their hearts the counsels of God, and yearn for the coming day. And for those who with willing feet go forth to meet their Lord, a star, brighter than that the Magi saw and followed, shall arise and shine; for to all who diligently inquire for Him, and hasten to greet the glory of his presence, it shall be granted to find that "the day dawns and the day-star arises in their hearts." And sooner than perhaps they think they shall be led to the spot where indeed He Himself shall appear to their joy. Not more sure, even though it be longer delayed, was his first coming to them than is his second advent to ourselves On all hands the signs of the times betoken a crisis such as that which shall precede his coming, and we may remember that in addition to these, and far more certain in its tone and teaching, "we have more sure the prophetic word, whereunto we do well that we take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place." G.

NOTES ON SCRIPTURE.—16.

Zechariah iii.

JOSHUA, the high-priest of Jehovah, stands before the angel clothed in filthy garments, and Satan at his right-hand to resist him. But the Lord rebukes the adversary, and tells Joshua, "Behold, I have caused thine iniquity to pass from thee, and I will clothe thee with change of raiment." The prophet interposes with the plea, "Let them set a fair mitre upon his head" (the high-priest's crown, with "Holiness to the Lord" engraven upon its golden plate, which was bound with a blue, a heaven-coloured, thread upon the fore-front of the crown or mitre). "So they set a fair mitre upon his head and clothed him with garments," that is, with the high-priestly garments of glory and beauty, of which the fair mitre, with its engraven golden plate, was the crown and consummation.

Joshua and his fellows were men of sign; like Isaiah and his children, they were for signs and for wonders in Israel, from Jehovah of hosts, who dwelleth in Mount Zion.

The prophetic vision pointed onward to Jehovah's elect Servant, the Branch, the Dayspring from on high (Luke i. 78), for the Lord tells Joshua, "I will bring forth my Servant, the Branch . . . and I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day."

The high-priest was the representative of Israel. He was clothed in filthy garments because Israel had so deeply revolted and become a rebellious house. Satan, the accuser of the brethren, was there to lay his charge against God's elect, and to keep their iniquity always in view. But the Lord rebukes and overcomes Satan by causing Joshua's iniquity to pass away, and, in spite of the accuser, clothes Joshua in the glorious and beautiful garments surmounted with the holy crown.

But all this was effected not by power, but by righteousness: "I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day"—the day of Calvary, the day of which that other day of that other Joshua was a sign. "There was no day like that before it, or after it, that the Lord hearkened to the voice of a man; for the Lord fought for Israel" (Jos. x. 14)—that day not preternaturally lightened, but preternaturally darkened, when Jehovah hearkened to the voice of the Man Christ Jesus when He cried: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do! . . . This day shalt thou be with Me in paradise! . . . Woman, behold thy son! . . . I thirst! . . . My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me? . . . It is finished! . . . Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit!"

"For the Lord fought for Israel"—and for all mankind—against the tempter and accuser, against the enemy and the avenger, against all the powers of darkness and of death. He fought for Israel when He cast the great hailstones of judgment on the Man He loved; when He bade his sword awake against his Shepherd and against the Man that was, and is, his fellow—fought for Israel when He made Him who knew no sin to be sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him.

In that one day when the iniquity of that land was removed by Him who was the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but for the whole world, the accuser's occupation was gone; then was the judgment of this world, then was the Prince of this world, cast out.

"Thro' suffering and defeat,
He won the meed and crown;
Trod all his foes beneath his feet
By being trodden down."

And when He ascended—when the Man Child (the υἱὸν ἄρσεν, the Male Son), who is to rule all nations with a rod of iron—was caught up to God and to his throne—then the accuser of the brethren, who had accused them before God day and night, was cast out, and his angels were cast out with him.

The elders, who obtained a good report through faith—the saints of the Old Testament—overcame him because of the blood of the Lamb, and because of the word of their testimony, loving not their lives even unto death; but Jehovah-Jesus finally rebuked and silenced him as the accuser by taking upon Himself the filthy garments, and removing, by His own blood, the iniquity of that land and of the whole world in that one day of Calvary and the Cross, when He made one sacrifice for sins for ever, and brought in everlasting righteousness. Then the Resurrection-day, when Jehovah greeted Him with "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten Thee!" Then the Ascension, when our Great High Priest, Jesus the Son of God, passed through the heavens, clothed in his garments of glory and beauty, and sat down on the right hand of God.

"THESE FORTY YEARS."

"THESE fifty years" is the cry of the London City Mission celebrating its Jubilee. "These forty years!" is the exclamation of the Ragged School Union in commencing its annual report. And forty eventful years they have been to thousands of destitute children, rescued by self-denying men and women, the rescued filling honourable positions, and the rescuers either rejoicing in the success of their work, or among the blessed who "rest from their labours, and their works do follow them." The report computes the children thus reclaimed at between 300,000 and 400,000.

It is abundantly evident that there is still an urgent need for this Union, and it is cheering to know that, in addition to the 193 paid teachers and monitors, there is a voluntary army of 3278 teachers, who labour in the 180 schools and institutions now under the fostering care of the Union.

The report dwells first upon the religious agencies, giving statistics which show that more than 39,000 children attend the Sunday Ragged Schools. There are also 73 Bible-classes for elder scholars, with 3000 in attendance. The number of young people who have become communicants during the year is 406.

Passing on to the educational department, it stated that there are 35 day-schools with 4252 children on the books, and 4696 on the books of the night-schools. The benevolent operations include infant nurseries, maternity societies, Dorcas meetings, soup kitchens, Christmas dinners, Bands of Hope, penny banks, boot and shoe clubs, and other agencies which all who labour among the poor are familiar with.

The body of the report is commendably brief, but 49 pages are taken up in describing various centres of work in town and country. The whole is deeply interesting. Copies may be had by sending to Mr. John Kirk, the secretary, Exeter Hall, London.

MEDICAL PRAYER UNION.—The annual meeting of this Union was held on Thursday week, at Exeter Hall, and was presided over by Dr. Heywood Smith. The report showed fluctuating results for the past year at the different hospitals where branches are formed. Some had steadily progressed, both in numbers and influence, while others had somewhat declined; in one or two instances there had been a sad falling away from steadfastness. The Chairman delivered a brief address, containing excellent counsel to those present. The meeting was also addressed by Rev. Evan Hopkins, who spoke an "Walking with God," Dr. Le Gros Clark, Captain Baring, Dr. Ziemann, and Dr. Saunders, all of whom urged the students to decision and consecration.

CHRIST-LIKENESS.

OH, to be more like Christ!
My Saviour and my King;
So far as possible to man,
Like Him in everything!

Oh, to be more like Him
Who once for sinners died!
Ready for suffering, or for work,
So God be glorified!

Oh, to be pure like Christ!
Holy in heart and mind;
That Satan, tempting me, like Him,
No vantage-ground might find.

Oh, to be meek like Christ!
Long-suffering, slow to ire;
Willing offenders to forgive
As oft as they desire.

Oh, for the mind of Christ,
On schemes of love intent;
Oh, for more heavenly-mindedness—
Thoughts oft'ner God-ward sent!

Oh, for the faith of Christ!
Faith in the Father's love;
Trust that, in every time of need,
He'll succour from above.

Oh, for the zeal of Christ—
Untiring, burning zeal!
Zeal for God's glory, and man's good,
The sinner's endless weal!

Oh, for the love of Christ—
Love that is always kind;
Ever new objects and new spheres,
Seeking on earth to find.

Oh, for the joy of Christ,
Joy over sinners saved,
Who in the fountain of his blood—
Sin's antidote—have laved.

Oh, for the peace of Christ,
Which He alone bestows:
Peace like a river, deep and broad,
Increasing as it flows.

Oh, to be more resigned
To all our Father's will;
Like Christ to say, "Thy will—not mine,
Father, in me fulfil!"

Oh, for his patient spirit;
Never a murmur heard;
Falsely accused, reviled and mocked—
Answered He ne'er a word!

Oh, for a sight of Christ!
Then shall we like Him be—
Like Him in holiness and bliss—
When we his face shall see.

Oh, for his Advent, then,
According to his word;
To bring—or raise—his saints, to be
For ever with their Lord!

On earth a thousand years,
With Christ we then shall spend;
And share his glory evermore,
When we to heav'n ascend.

A CHRISTIAN SOLDIER.—M. Edward Revel, Service de Santé, du 19, Corps de Armée, Algiers, Africa, writes to us that he would be most grateful to any reader who would forward to him their copy of The Christian after perusal. The postage is 1d.

PREVENTIVE WORK IN GREAT YARMOUTH.—The Rampart House Working Girls' Home, though small, is doing a good work amongst our toiling sisters, providing them with food and shelter at a nominal cost. Free classes are held in the evenings, at which reading, writing, and arithmetic are taught. Last winter over a hundred girls availed themselves of the privileges of these classes, the Bible-class and sewing-meetings attracting the largest numbers. There is in this Home a room set apart for tired workers, a bed and sitting-room combined, where a weary Bible woman may obtain rest and change at a very low price.

For the Young.

A FAITHFUL WORKER.

IN Anna Shipton's "Waiting Hours," Chapter IV., are some records of singular nterest of Mrs. Janet Webster, a school-istress at Aberdeen, whose method of ducation may interest our young readers. he has very recently been called to her rest bove, and as she was in life, so was she to he end, a bright example of faith and prayer nd praise—"not slothful in business, fer-ent in spirit, serving the Lord."

To my question, "How do you teach such oung children, who cannot even read?" she eplied—

"By prayer. I welcome them with prayer, aving already been to our Master's feet for ıy message, and for light and blessing on ıy teaching. When I dismiss them I give anks for any good they may have received. Iy desire is to bring God before them as seen ı Jesus Christ, God's Son, and in the Holy pirit's power. All I teach them I teach iem in prayer. And when the day's duties re over, and I must go to rest to be fitted for nother day's work, I go over my labour and ray God to seal it with a blessing.

"When the children are round about me, o make them understand the nature of rayer in daily needs, I ask for a cup of ater when a little weary and thirsty, and put up a brief petition for the Lord to less the water. There is profound silence ithout my bidding. At another time, cover-ıg my face with my hands, I have asked for ght and sunshine in a dark, cloudy day. nd so many times has He answered, that ie children, in low, glad voice will say, God has answered already.' Then I hold p my hand, saying, 'Hush, while we thank im,' and all is silence. The children do not rget this, and often in their prayerless omes they repeat to their ungodly parents ie lessons they have learned of faith in God. Iany a mother has told me that she was us led to pray; and others have had their ith strengthened by the account of these mple prayers answered.

"Many a night, while their eyes are closed slumber, I am praying the Master for iem; and when I awake in the morning, y first prayer is to thank the God of all ercies that I am still on the earth to labour vhile for Him, and I lay all my day's duties efore Him once more."

A slight sketch of one of her lessons will ve some idea of what seemed a fascinating pplication of the truths of God, to be en-raven (as it has very often proved to be) on ie minds of the little ones.

There are two or three books on her table. ie takes the two largest in her hands.

"See, children, here are two books." very little head is turned at once. "You e, God writes all your bad deeds in this ook. Shall we say what these leaves tell? he lie, the disobedience, the bad words . . . l are written here.

"But Jesus calls you to go to Him. He as suffered and died for your sins. Child, ill you go to this dear Saviour?

"Now God reads your name written in e white book. See what He does. He kes the napkin [suiting the action to the ord], He dips it in the blood of his dear on, the Lamb of God, and wipes it all away. e washes all the evil deeds clean out, and ys, 'Though your sins be as scarlet, they all be as white as snow; though they be d like crimson, they shall be as wool.'

"Now, children, look at me."

Every eye follows her hand, as she gathers her books and working implements together, and makes with them a covered passage across the table.

"Now see. Here walk the lambs of Christ with Him. Jesus is a wall of fire round about his people, and his wings cover them, and He gives light to the end of the road.

"'He shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust.'

Then waving the napkin—"See this napkin. Who could lean against it? There is no strength in it. But if I lean on Jesus, He will never fail me, He is so strong. He is my strong Rock and house of defence."

One of her addresses—all of which have an earnestness and tenderness which may well win her the love and reverence of her little pupils—closed thus:—

"My lammies, I like ye to learn weel; for I shall sune be awa. Sune the great white angel will come for me; and he will say to me, 'Come awa; ye have no more work to do. No more shall ye walk in weariness. No more shall ye speak to the little lammies. No more shall ye weep. No more shall ye be sick. No more shall ye be sorrowful. Come awa with me; your work is done!' Then the gates of that bright place where Jesus is will fly open wide, and Jesus Himself will say to me, 'Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.'

"Pray, pray on, God's dear children! You may not see the answer to some of your prayers here, but Jesus sees them. Every one is a letter written to Him, and laid on the table in heaven to be answered when the time is come." [Then lifting up a letter from the table]—"Jesus will say, 'My Father, here is a prayer of one of mine; it is still unanswered, it is needed now.' Perhaps you may be in heaven when He says that. No matter, it is your letter, and your prayer, and it must be answered. 'Answer this, my Father, for Thy name's sake, and for Thy glory! Bless such an one now!' and it is done!"

One day a friend, while waiting for admittance to the schoolroom, was attracted by a pretty child in the street. The lady called her, and spoke to her of Jesus. The child did not reply. She listened with the deepest attention, her head bent on her breast, and her brown hands clasped in the attitude of attention. As the lady proceeded, she nodded assent in the most intelligent manner, as if perfectly understanding and entering into all she told her, of the tender care of the Good Shepherd over his own lambs; and when she added that "not only old people and rich people die, but children; there are many little graves in the churchyard," the child lifted hands and eyes to heaven, and, with a smile that told how well she had comprehended, replied—

"Yes; there is little graves in the churchyard; but the big trumpet will sound, and we shall all rise up again and meet Jesus."

There was no difficulty in tracing the school where the wee lammie had learned her lesson.

"As to prayer," said the schoolmistress, "I am not taken up with this petition or another, until I have had a look at our lovely Jesus. Then He sends the Spirit in full measure, and the words of persuasion come to my mouth. Often I cannot continue in silent prayer. I speak aloud to Him in the night season. One midnight a man passing the house heard some one speaking, and stopped at my casement to listen to my prayer. Up to that hour no word of prayer had ever passed his lips. Two years afterwards he returned to this place. He told me the blessing that had fallen on his soul that night, when curiosity had led him to my window, and for the first time he understood that a sinner can approach the mercy-seat with assurance when washed in the blood of the Saviour, and anointed by the Spirit of grace."

Praise was the element of the schoolmistress's life. It was the music of her tongue; it was her sowing song and her reaping song. She never said, "We ought to praise;" but she did it; and so taught others that prayer brings forth praise. She literally did nothing without this acknowledgment of the goodness and grace of her blessed Master. She accepted nothing without praise. She went to her work praising for the privilege, and she ended it with praise for the blessing she was sure would seal it; for she had asked for it.

Do you answer questions in THE CHRISTIAN? If you do, will you please tell me whether, after taking the pledge and blue ribbon, it is right and necessary to wear the ribbon. We have had some talk about the matter, and cannot decide. —Yours truly, R. C.

[By all means wear it. You can never tell the good it may do, and the restraining influence it may have on those who see it. Pin your colours to your coat, and never be ashamed of them. DUBLIN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 16.

GOD THE HOLY GHOST.

A GOODLY company came together again this morning to hear the messages of the appointed speakers on this all-profound and important topic. Dr. Elder Cumming, of Glasgow, exhibited the doctrine of the Spirit with regard to his "personality." The Old Testament opens with an unveiling of the personality of the Spirit. He took part in the great work of creation. He it is who gives the spirit of sorrow for sin, of repentance and faith. He inspired the prophets of old time. He moves the people of God. Turning to the New Testament, we find that the Spirit rested on the Saviour at his baptismal dedication to the great work of his life. He led the Saviour up into the wilderness to be tempted. Christ plainly taught the personality of the Spirit in his fuller manifestation at the close of his own Mission and his departure from the world as a visible presence. Throughout the Book of books the one voice that speaks through the varied human voices is that of the third person of the Godhead. He it was who endued the Apostles with power from on high; what a mighty change came over them then! He is the distributor of gifts in the first days of the Church. What does He do now? Every saved soul is a monument to the grace and power of the Holy Ghost. He is the great Teacher. If we are ignorant of God, it is because we have not gone to Him for enlightenment and knowledge. He dwells in the surrendered heart. He does not speak from Himself; He comes with a message from the Father concerning Christ, whom it is his work to glorify. We must feel with Him and deal with Him, therefore, as a person, not as a mere influence. Let it be ours to trust Him, obey Him, and yield to Him, as He moves in our hearts.

To the next speaker, Dr. Marshall Lang, was assigned the duty of setting forth the Spirit "as the giver of light and life." This was, in the judgment of some at least, the most important and notable utterance of the Convention. Rather than rob it of its effect by condensation, we prefer to wait till we can give it with adequate fulness in a subsequent issue. When Dr. Lang ceased to speak to the people, there followed much speaking to the Lord by various brethren, beseeching Him for the bestowment of that Spirit whose offices and work had been the theme of consideration.

UNITED COMMUNION.

For the first time in the history of the Dublin Convention, a place was made in the programme this year for the united observance of the Lord's Supper The hour from 3 to 4 of the third day, was set apart for this purpose. A large number availed themselves of the opportunity of remembering in this way the dying love of the One Lord and Saviour. Ministers of various denominations led the solemn engagements of the hour; although those belonging to the Irish Episcopal Church did not feel at liberty, from the circumstances of their ecclesiastical position, to join with their brethren of other churches in taking any official part. We feel sure they would gladly have done so if conscientious scruples had not forbidden. It is greatly to be lamented that in these enlightened days the Eucharistic Feast, which ought to be the visible badge of union among Christians, should, instead, be a symbol or occasion of division. In Scotland, at such Conferences, the ministers of the Established Church freely unite with their brethren of other communions in the common Supper. Why it should not be so in England and Ireland we are sorely at a loss to know or understand. In Ireland there is even less excuse than in England, because since the disestablishment of the Episcopal Church there, all denominations are on a perfect equality, and the stigma of "dissent" has, at any rate, no legal existence. We hope that in future years this obstacle may be removed, and the Irish Protestant Christians, in Conference assembled, may manifest to the world, in the most available and telling way, that in Christ Jesus they are one, whatever be their denominational differences and proclivities.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Immediately after the Communion Service, a large meeting was held to consider the important subject of Foreign Missions; Mr. J. Fowler presided.

First to speak was Rev. S. King, Dublin, who directed special attention to Alaska, in the north-western part of the United States territory, embracing one-sixth part of the area of the Republic, though the population only amounted to 34,000. Comparatively little has yet been done there in aggressive Mission work, though some beginnings are being made. It is land that is yet "to be possessed" for God.

Professor Henry Drummond next gave, in his charmingly easy and artless descriptive vein, some impressions of missionary work as gathered during his recent visit for scientific purposes, to Central Africa. He told of a little communion service where he sat down at the Lord's Table on the shores of Lake Nyassa, with "three or four white men, their faces blanched with fever, four black men, and three black women." These dusky brethren and sisters were the first fruits of the Free Church of Scotland Mission there. But a few years ago they were little better than savages or wild animals; their presence at that communion table was a signal proof of the reality and power of Christian Missions. The Professor described, in language somewhat similar to that used by him at the last Mildmay Conference, the work of the African Lakes Company, the deserted Livingtonia station on the shores of Nyassa, and the faithful Christian simplicity of the native who accompanied him on his exploring tour. In closing his address he spoke of the stealing of the young for slaves as one of the difficulties to be encountered in the African mission fields. Two little girls had been carried off, just as rabbits would be carried off, from the school at Livingstonia. He inquired who had taken them, and found it was a powerful chief who had a large village upon the shores of the lake. He went to him, and found him seated in a large hut, and round about the hut were forty poles, upon each of which was a human head transfixed. That was the home to which these two Mission children were taken. Some two months afterwards he heard that a great storm had swept over the lake, and that two of the chief's slave dhows had gone down in it—he hoped these two Mission children were in that ship. It had been his lot to have been in four quarters of the earth, and he had seen a little of Missions. He had seen some of them not worthy of support, but he had seen some of them that were worth all a man's money, all his work, and all his prayers.

Third, and last, came Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, who, in the few minutes at his disposal, could not be expected to speak of the great land of China, with its teeming population of 250 millions of souls. He only desired to emphasise the fact that God's command to every believer is to take the Gospel to each unit in these millions. Would that we were all ready to obey the command at any cost. The state of the Church, he said, in regard to Foreign Missions, is one of the most solemn and awful things I know. We are willing to have Christ to die for our salvation, but we virtually say, "We will not have this man to reign over us." We are shocked when we hear a wicked man saying, "Damn you;" yet that is virtually what we are saying to these perishing millions. Even if we do little good to the heathen by going out to them, we have no idea of the good we ourselves may receive. In seeking to win souls for Christ we win Christ for ourselves. It is blessed work. Would that fathers and mothers coveted it for their children and friends. There are wealth and talent enough in the country to evangelise the heathen world within ten years. These lands are now at our very doors. Who will say, "Here am I; send me?"

CLOSING MEETING.

It fared ill this last evening with those who arrived late. When the hall had been packed to the utmost limits of a pressure little short of hydraulic, still there were many claimants for admission. These were accommodated in the Presbyterian church opposite. In the great hall the galleries were reserved for men; and a splendid spectacle they presented as they covered the benches in close array.

The two addresses of the evening were specially addressed to the occupants of the gallery, though they were equally suitable for all. Rev. Henry Montgomery, Belfast, tersely and effectively expounded and applied the sayings of the penitent thief on the cross, "Dost not thou fear God?" How many young people seek to escape even from the thought, much more from the fear, of God. Yet we are told by the wise man that this fear is the beginning of wisdom. "We are condemned justly." This must be the verdict of every honest human heart. It is well to know exactly where we are. As some one has said, "The first step on the way to heaven is to know that by nature we are on the way to hell." "This man"—"Lord, remember me." The thief had formulated a good theology, wherever he got it. He had learned to believe both in the humanity and the divinity of the Saviour. Christ's reply was instantaneous: "To-day shalt thou be with Me in paradise." "To-day!" What power He must have who could so soon transform a crucified thief. "With Me." That was to be his company—better far even than the good fellowship of prophets, apostles, and martyrs. "In paradise;" wherever Jesus is, that is paradise, no matter about the locality. Mr. Montgomery closed with a very affectionate and pathetic appeal to his young brothers to enter the service of Christ without delay. "You will want to become Christians some day, and it is not manly, after giving the cream of your life to the devil, to come and give the bruised and battered fragments of a wasted life to the Saviour."

Professor Drummond gave the final address. He asked his young friends in the gallery to look at "Temptation" in the face for a few minutes, before the Convention closed. Proceeding to detail, he said that temptation was a universal experience; it was a personal thing. Every man has his own temptation. It was a lonely thing — a thing that must be met, borne, and dealt with single-handed, as far as human help is concerned. It was a subtle thing and a pitiless thing. On the last point, Mr. Drummond told this incident:—

I knew of a man who was a Temperance lecturer. In his early years he had been a great drunkard; but he was reformed, and had got considerable notoriety as a platform speaker in one of our large cities. By trade he was a glass cutter. One day, many years after he had been a confirmed Christian, as every one thought, a servant girl brought into his place of business a decanter, with a broken neck, and asked him to cut it smooth. He took up the bottle to see what was wrong; the fumes of brandy came out of the neck and went into his brain. He turned the decanter upside down and got a drop of the liquid upon his finger. He put it to his lips. It set his blood on fire. He went to the nearest public-house and got drunk. That was the beginning of a very bitter and disgraceful end.

Turning to the bright side of the shield, the Professor showed that temptation, though it may be the child of sin, and the parent of more sin, is not itself sin. It is only when we dally with it, entertain it, and enjoy it, that it becomes sin to us. It is, moreover, a useful, advisable, magnificent, nay, an indispensable thing to every man. Resistance to it is the practice of the soul, without which the soul could not attain to anything great. So the Apostle James has that astounding passage: "Count it all joy," not sorrow, "when ye fall into divers temptations, knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience." How, then, are we to deal with it practically? When it comes we must resist and suffer till it has passed. We must work—have the mind and body continually occupied with some good, useful study or occupation, especially at those seasons when we know temptation is strongest. But above all—and without this all else is vain—we must have one who is able to keep us, and that is Jesus Christ. We must be able to say with Paul, who knew his own heart well, and who confessed that he was the chief of sinners, "I am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed to Him"—the custody of our life—not until next week or until next Conference, but "until that day."

A short after-meeting for young men brought the happy and profitable Convention to a fitting close.

THE LATE JERRY McAULEY, NEW YORK.

IT is only once or twice in a century that God gives the world an evangelist of the first magnitude. But among such burning and shining lights as a Moody and a M'Cheyne, He sets many a lesser star to draw the wandering eye and direct the sinner on the road to Bethlehem. Scarcely a city or town in any Christian country but has raised up in it at intervals one who speaks the whole counsel of God with a power that comes only of the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Such as these are lights of the world, the salt of the earth, the centre of waves of influence whose sweep is ever widening.

For years past the great work accomplished here by Jerry McAuley has been spreading, till indeed Jerry's name has became a household word in evangelistic circles. The good man, a converted pugilist, passed to his rest on September 18. Some particulars regarding Jerry's career and character may not be without interest to our readers. They were chiefly gathered from a recent conversation between the writer and Mr. McBurney, Secretary of the New York Y.M.C.A.

The secret of Jerry's power was that he spoke that which he did know and had experienced. He was frankness itself as to the unutterable depths from which the Gospel of Christ had saved him. At one of the last meetings which he addressed, for instance, this was his testimony: "I was a brute; I was one of the worst devils ever let loose on society, but the glorious Gospel contained in that blessed Bible civilised me. There is no power like it. It made me a man and a Christian, and a good citizen."

Jerry was brought up indeed amid the lowest and most degraded surroundings. Born in Ireland, his family emigrated to America when he was thirteen years of age. His father was a counterfeiter, and he himself unfortunately followed in his footsteps. He was a river thief, a prize-fighter, and, in fact, a marked man in the police books for his connection with all kinds of criminality. Finally he was arrested, convicted of highway robbery, and sent to prison for fifteen years. During this long imprisonment he heard the testimony of Orville Gardiner, who, himself a prisoner of the worst class, had been converted during his sentence. Gardiner, it may be noted, nobly redeemed the late years of his life by devoting himself with the greatest success to Mission work after his release. He absolutely used himself up in his rescue mission on the New York streets.

The light which Gardiner was instrumental in kindling in Jerry's soul did not burn brightly for some time after his leaving the prison. He had more than one relapse into evil courses, but at last he took a decided stand for Christ. His first honest employment was given him by Mr. A. S. Hatch, one of the bankers of New York. Jerry went to him, and told him that he was in want of something to do. Mr. Hatch had just got a new yacht, and, prior to selling his old one, wanted some one on board to take care of it. "Jerry," said he, "I want some one to take care of my yacht." "Are you in earnest?" said Jerry; "will you trust me?" Mr. Hatch did trust him; and Jerry was so full of the new sense of responsibility that he hardly allowed himself to sleep during his care-taking. This beginning of an honest career was the firstfruit of Jerry's Christianity. He developed rapidly into a ripe Christian character, and his work for Christ kept pace with his development. In Water-street, one of the worst districts of the city, he began on a humble scale a mission which soon proved its usefulness by the results accomplished. "The Helping Hand for Men," as Jerry named his mission, had the field all to itself among the vilest dregs of sin and vice. To his meetings he managed to attract profligates and prostitutes, thieves, burglars, drunken sailors, land-sharks of all kinds, and, says Mr. McBurney, "The Helping Hand" became a Bethel and a birthplace to hundreds. Then new work thrust itself in upon him. Another mission was opened at 106, East Thirty-second-street. Jerry raised 6000 dollars to fit up the building, and, among a low population, he carried on his work there with extraordinary success. Up till his death he was the central figure of the work both at the Water-street and the Cremorne missions; and thousands looked with tearful eyes on his coffin who traced the dawn of their spiritual life to the lamp lighted by Jerry McAuley in these dark places.

He was only forty-five years of age when he died. He had long been in the grip of consumption, but his death came at last with a startling suddenness. In his life, however, he had done more for the evangelising of the slums of New York than any other man.

He had no external advantages to assist him, nothing but an indomitable will and a double portion of the Holy Spirit upon him. His face was rather repelling than otherwise; of a low phrenological type, with small eyes, very receding forehead, and with hardly any top to his head. But he was all on fire with Christian energy. He was outspoken and honest in his utterances, hating shams, and denouncing them with uncommon vigour. He was a good judge of character, and could see through "a fraud" as quickly as any man in New York. In his Water-street Mission he instituted a "penitent form," where he would encourage the converts to pray their first petitions; "teaching his chickens to chirp," the rowdies called it; but Jerry was never afraid of a sarcasm. The prayers offered at that penitent form were models of all that prayer should be—straight from the heart to God, and dealing with real wants.

Jerry was quick to detect merely conventional phrasing, and was equally quick at condemning it. One night, for instance, a convert began in a drawling way, "Lord, we thank thee for thy goodness and mercies." Jerry instantly called out at the top of his voice, "Pray to the Lord to forgive your sins; tell Him you're a sinner."

Though appearing in many things rough as a bear, he was yet as tender-hearted as a woman. A notorious character who kept a bad house close to Cremorne Mission, annoyed him very much by making noises during the services. Jerry went to him and remonstrated. The man only insulted him. The old Adam got the better of Jerry, and he lost his temper. But he got an official to return with him almost immediately afterwards and apologised. That apology won the day. The man could make nothing of this new method of treatment, and his interruptions were discontinued.

His meetings were conducted with great vigour and "go," so as to be thoroughly attractive to the rough people whom he aimed at. He had always excellent singing, "no better singing in town," said Mr. McBurney. In his talks there was a mixture of the melodramatic, the pathetic, and the mimic, that irresistibly caught the attention. He could not expound a text; but out of the depths of his own experience and the fulness of the Gospel salvation, he preached such sermons as few ministers could have done.

His funeral was a unique event in the history of evangelism in New York. The coffin was placed in the Broadway Tabernacle, and a deeply-affecting service was conducted by Dr. Irenæus Prime and others. Never have I witnessed a more remarkable spectacle than that burial presented. T. S.

THE FISK JUBILEE SINGERS

NOTHING could exceed the greatness and grandeur of the reception given to the Jubilee Singers by the Earl and Countess of Tankerville on Saturday and Sunday week. Their coming to Chillingham had been looked forward to with great interest by the regular attenders at the weekly evangelistic meetings, but the invitation "all free and free to all" spread, and many who had no other opportunity readily embraced the invitation. Everything was arranged so as to make the sable vocalists feel at home, and the visit to themselves was a most enjoyable one. In such a spirit they met every engagement.

Special invitations were issued for Saturday afternoon, and at three p.m. a large company of resident gentry and farmers assembled in the Dining Room to meet Lord and Lady Tankerville and listen to the songs of the Jubilee Singers. At this gathering Mr. Stevenson Blackwood delivered a most appropriate address. The spacious apartment was fitted up for the occasion. Tea was afterwards served to the company who had come from a distance. At seven o'clock the workpeople and families on the estate, with the parishioners, were invited to see and hear these famed minstrels sing the songs of their captivity. The room was beautifully lighted up, and the company saw to great advantage the magnificent paintings that adorn its walls. Behind and over the platform where the Jubilee Singers were seated hung the grand painting by Landseer of the Wild Cattle. The following programme of music was gone through:—"Steal away to Jesus" and "The Lord's Prayer," "Don't grieve for me," "Brothers, are you getting ready?" "Judgment Day," "March on," "Good Lord," "Wait a little longer," and "We'll sing a new song." After the concert Rev. Hudson Taylor addressed the meeting on China. The company frequently testified unmistakably their high appreciation of the rich treat so richly and kindly provided for them.

For Sunday's services, in which the Jubilee Singers were to take the choral parts, every preparation was made to ensure safety and comfort. In the castle court yard a large and commodious covered platform was substantially erected, on which the harmonium, singers, and speakers were accommodated. The area was closely seated. After every seat and standing room was densely packed, Earl Tankerville handsomely threw open the rooms of the castle, from the windows of which (a double tier four square) a good view was had. The balconies and roof of the castle all round were crowded by an attentive and most orderly company. The sight now presented was one of impressive grandeur, and will long be remembered. Parties were there from the slopes of the Cheviots to the fishing villages on the coast, from Alnwick and Rothbury, to Lowick, Belford, and Wooler, brought in every description of conveyance.

Considerably over two thousand were assembled when the proceedings began by the singing of two of Mr. Sankey's well known hymns, led by Mr. Blackwood, accompanied on the harmonium by Lady Hilda Beauchamp. The Jubilee Singers then began by sweetly rendering "Steal away to Jesus," and the Lord's Prayer. Rev. Hudson Taylor conducted devotional exercises, and afterwards came the hymns by the Jubilee Singers, "Sinner, don't stay away," "I've read of a world of beauty." Mr. Blackwood addressed the multitude in an earnest and telling address from Rev. v. 9, which was listened to with rapt attention. After this the Jubilee Singers sang, "I've been redeemed," and the Benediction, "The Lord bless thee," &c. In response to a request by Lord Tankerville, they afterwards gave "The bridegroom came." All the pieces were as distinctly heard in their softest and sweetest parts as in a room. The large company slowly dispersed, some to wander through the flower garden, while others remained to an after prayer-meeting; all seemed grateful and gratified.—Berwick Advertiser.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

THIS year Mr. Russell Hurditch summoned his friends to meet for the anniversary of this Mission, in the new Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, in the South-west of London. A number of workers and other well-wishers gathered in the afternoon of Tuesday week for prayer. This was followed by tea and a season of social converse.

In the evening the large hall was tolerably well filled, and there was a strong muster of sympathising friends on the platform. Lord Shaftesbury had pledged himself to preside if the state of his health permitted. At the commencement of the proceedings, however, a letter from his lordship was read by Mr. Hurditch, regretting his inability to carry out this purpose. The venerable Earl said: "I am so terribly oppressed by pain and lassitude that I can hardly write this letter. I am not sure that I shall be able to come to town for the opening of Parliament." The increasing burden of years is beginning to tell on the good old man, and it pains us to think that his noble and eminently useful life may be drawing near its earthly close. Failing his presence on this occasion, Dr. Eccles, a tried friend of the Mission, took the chair at the request of Mr. Hurditch. After a song of praise, earnest prayer was offered by Mr. E. H. Glenny and Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe.

THE DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT.

Mr. Hurditch, having referred to letters, regretting their absence, from Mr. Samuel Morley, Mr. Denham Smith, Mr. Stevenson Blackwood, the Lord Mayor, Dr. Donald Fraser, and others, made his customary statement of the work for the past year. In all its departments, he said, it has been signally owned of God, and there is abundant cause to praise Him for the spiritual blessing conferred. At Kilburn Hall the numbers attending the services have been larger than ever, and souls have been saved. The various branches of the work there seem to be in the most encouraging and prosperous condition. It was there that the Mission was started some nineteen years ago, in a tent, in which Mr. Moody gave the first address he ever delivered in England. The friends working at Malden Hall have also found the cup of blessing to run over; they have never had so much blessing as of late. Last Sunday they witnessed a renewal of God's grace both morning and evening. A variety of methods is employed, and these are sustained at the expense of the friends who have been associated there—for the most part, the converts of the work in past years. A little while since Mr. Colman undertook the care of the Mission, and we hoped to be released in future from any responsibility. Our brother has, however, been called home, and this has necessitated the work returning to the care of the Evangelistic Mission. We are looking to the Lord to raise up others to assume the oversight of it. The work continues to prosper at Bignold Hall, Forest Gate. Mr. A. Wallis, through whom I was induced to take it up a few years back, will say something to us about its progress. At Mornington Hall, Hampstead-road, we have not been so successful as elsewhere. We have therefore disposed of it to friends who have taken charge of the work, and will shepherd those who have been gathered there as a congregation. The lease of Dalston Hall having expired, the site was purchased for a church in connection with the parish. We had to look for another building, which we found just opposite Dalston Junction. God has greatly blessed the work there. The place is now too strait for us, and a larger building is very much required. This, I may say, is also the case at Malden Hall. There are signs of a revived work of grace at Hammersmith, but we have not yet, for lack of funds, renewed the Sunday services at the Theatre of Varieties. The same has to be said of The Oxford Music Hall, where in former years we have witnessed great blessing. I had a letter only the other day from a young man now at the Antipodes, who wrote that he was converted at the Oxford. Ever since he has been serving the Lord, both in this country and on the other side of the globe. He has now formed a band of workers, who have linked themselves with the Salvation Army, and over whom he is "Captain." I have just had another letter from a young man who had heard that the building was not likely to be opened for Gospel services this winter. He writes in a very encouraging strain, and encloses a donation from himself, besides one from a fellow-servant; both these were converted in connection with the Mission, one of them at the Oxford. We know of hundreds of cases of conversion there.

During the past summer ten or eleven Gospel Tents, belonging to the Mission, have been erected in different parts of the country, several of them being stationed in London. Great blessing has followed the preaching of the word, and in some cases the accommodation has been much too small. The work has been somewhat trying in the tent erected at West Kensington, almost adjoining the site of the hall where Messrs. Moody and Sankey's services were held. Notwithstanding the blessed work then carried on there, it is amazing to find the indifference and even opposition that have been shown in connection with the tent services. The tent at Fulham was placed under the care of the local missionary, who reports that sixty or seventy persons have united themselves to various churches as a fruit of the work. There has also been large blessing in the tent at Walthamstow. A meeting of converts was held in Mr. McAll's grounds on Bank Holiday, when close on 200 persons were present, and there was an uninterrupted stream of blessing. In the country there has been still more encouragement in connection with the tent work. At Stretham, in Cambridgeshire, the work has been so prospered in past years that friends have defrayed the cost of a hall, which is now opened, and is crowded for Gospel meetings on the Lord's Day. In connection with it there are a reading-room, library, coffee stall, &c., and it is just such a place as the writer of the recent letters in The Daily News about village needs ought to have seen.

At Swindon there has been a constant stream of blessing through the services held by the friends of the Mission. Many railway men have been brought to a knowledge of Christ. All the churches have received accessions, and there are about 300 associated in fellowship at the Mission hall. These go out into the villages round about with the message of life. A baker in the town has arranged his business premises so that he can divide part of them off for a hall. Our friends have started a Mission at Chippenham, and one of the largest chapels in the town is filled every night; and many are now rejoicing with the joy of a new-found salvation. Several evangelists have been at work at Margate during the past summer at tent meetings and on the sands, with decided spiritual blessing. The Missionary says there is not a house that has not been visited, and on the walls of every lodging-house there have been placed copies of our sheet Almanack, which sets forth the Gospel message. This Distribution of Literature is another important part of our work. At all the stations on the London and North-western Railway between Euston and Watford, framed copies of the almanack have been placed, giving announcements of the Mission rooms along the line, while many hundreds of thousands of Mission Gospel papers have been circulated. At Bushey we sadly need a resident evangelist. Mr. C. S. Thorpe, who formerly had charge of the work, is making a special appeal for it, and there is the promise of much encouragement. The Bible Carriage has visited, during the season, Brighton, Eastbourne, Margate, Ramsgate, Canterbury Fair, and all the towns and villages between. The Scriptures are sold, tracts distributed, and the Gospel preached. Other branches of the Mission work are free teas, home visitation, relief of the distressed, the circulation of Gospel papers, &c.

Mr. Hurditch closed his interesting statement by saying that the balance-sheet showed a total income of £4552 15s. 2d., with an expenditure of £4740 19s. 9d. The deficit had been met out of the purchase-money of Mornington Hall. The exchequer of the Mission is now virtually empty, and besides the ordinary claims of the work, special help is needed for the enlargement of Bignold Hall, and for the expense of the Oxford Music Hall services. He asked for continued prayer and support, and looked forward to greater manifestations of blessing than ever they had seen in the past.

THE CHAIRMAN'S ADDRESS.

Having read from Romans xi. and xii. about the duty of "distributing to the necessities of the saints," Dr. Eccles said that the necessities of the Mission, both in rent of buildings and the support of workers, ought to be freely met. We are passing through a time of commercial depression, and this should really nerve us more to see that we supply that which is lacking. Referring to the Director's statement, he said that he felt very much grieved at hearing of the non-use this season of the Oxford for want of means to meet the expense. During the week it is one of the devil's great places for dragging down men and women to hell, and many will go to it on the Sundays to hear the Gospel preached who will not be persuaded to go elsewhere. It is greatly to be desired that the friends may be able to open it throughout the winter.* As to tent work, he believed it came as near in character as we could go, in this climate, to the public ministrations of our Lord. It deserved the heartiest support. Dr. Eccles said he was greatly interested in hearing of the Mission hall at Stretham (Cambs.), where the building was used on week-days for various purposes. He only wished that every church and chapel in the country were so built that they could be used every day in the week for some good object. It is something fearful to see the sums of money spent in church buildings that are so little used. Many thousands of pounds are expended on a building that is not in use more than four or five hours a week! Speaking of the need of supervising the converts, he said that many of these were domestic servants, and he would be strongly in favour of the appointment of "women bishops" for the visitation and spiritual oversight of these young believers.

Mr. Abraham Wallis, of Forest-gate, E., gave some details of the work in that locality. He supposed many of those present did not even know where Forest-gate was. Thirteen years ago it was a mere name; two trains a day stopped at the station. Now there are 132 trains per day passing the station, carrying 10,000 people. Four years ago there was a little Mission hall in the place, holding some eighty people. They had to build a larger place, and it was very shortly filled. The Lord gave wonderful blessing, and now the hall had to be enlarged again. The new building would be opened in the first week of November. Mr. Wallis told of several in-

* Since this report was written, we have been informed by Mr. Hurditch that a sufficient sum has been provided to meet the expenses of the Sunday services at the Oxford for at least two months. These services will, therefore, be commenced on Sunday next, Nov. 2, at 7 p.m. Christian friends are invited to help.

teresting cases of conversion through the Gospel meetings at Bignold Hall, and closed by asking the prayers of Christian friends, "and some of your money, too; for we have not quite finished yet."

DR. SINCLAIR PATERSON ON GIVING.

I count it a privilege to attend a meeting like this, to express my cordial and entire sympathy with the work, and to acknowledge my personal esteem for Mr. Hurditch. I have been surprised, while listening to his lucid statement, at the extent and variety of the operations. I was more surprised than ever on learning from the balance-sheet that it is all done for about £5000 a year. I know some churches that have a much larger income, and do no work at all in comparison with this Mission. Indeed, considering the work and the income, I think it will compare favourably with almost any work I know. Those who invest in the stock of this Mission will be laying up treasure in heaven. Giving to Christian work is often esteemed a grief; in Scripture it is spoken of as a grace. In the olden time they used to bleed people in the spring, that they might have good health all the year! I do not recommend that, but I think bleeding of the kind that this and similar good works seek to do, is good for the Christian. Covetousness is a greater and more prevalent sin than many people think. There is no better preventive, and no better remedy for it, than giving of our silver and gold largely and freely to the service of God. We must, of course, give wisely—to the work that is best and most effectively done, and where the largest returns are to be expected. I remember, when visiting Denmark some twenty years ago, I learned a little incident in the history of a great Danish admiral. On one occasion, when commanding a little sloop—it was before he was admiral—he had the audacity to engage an English frigate in battle. They both fired away, but after a little time the captain of the frigate noticed that the firing from the sloop ceased. A flag of truce was hoisted; a boat was lowered, and the Danish captain came alongside. Addressing his opponent, he said, "Sir, our powder is all done, and we have come to borrow some from you!" The devil has been using money against the cause of God for many years; let us take it from him, and turn his guns against himself. The love of money is the root of all evil, but the right giving of money is the root of a great deal of good. God has blessed it over and over again. We are to give our prayers and our labours, but we must give something more. Dr. Norman MacLeod and another minister were visiting an island on the west coast of Scotland, and they were overtaken on one occasion by a very violent storm. They were in danger of being swamped, and some one in the boat proposed that one of the ministers should pray. Dr. MacLeod was a strong, large man, and the other was of small stature. Said the boatman, "The little one may pray, but the big one must take an oar." There must be work as well as prayer. In the passage of Scripture read by the chairman (Rom. xii.) we are exhorted to give "with simplicity"—that is, honestly, frankly, freely. Some one was asked, "When are you going to cease giving to the cause of God?" The reply was, "When God ceases giving to me."

As to the spiritual part of the work, I think we are waking up a little. I remember the time when nobody was expected to work except the minister, and perhaps a few elders and deacons. Now we are beginning to find out that the duty and privilege of working for the salvation of others belong to every individual Christian. At the same time, desultory work does not accomplish much—it must be disciplined, and hearty, and thorough. And let us be assured that there is not a weakling in the Church if the Divine strength belongs to him. We need not fear any duty, however vast, or any difficulty, however great. Let us begin at home, where work for Christ is most difficult; then we shall find all other work easy. Nothing is impossible to faith. If we have experienced the power of God in our own hearts we may be certain that God can save the worst. Only in proportion as we ourselves grow in the knowledge of Christ, are we able to do anything to win others to the like precious knowledge.

MR. R. C. MORGAN ON UNITY.

Nothing in the proceedings of the evening has gratified me more than the large-heartedness of the prayer with which our brother opened the meeting, and the equal large-heartedness that ran through Mr. Hurditch's report. I was glad he made that reference to the Salvation Army. I think it is a good thing for us to speak kindly about things on which we may differ. The Apostle says we are to love "without dissimulation," and to be "kindly affectioned one to another." One thing in the report that took hold of me was the statement as to the increased spirit of hearing among the people. I am sure if there is an increased spirit of hearing among sinners, it is because there is a greater spirit of love among saints. This unity was expressly mentioned by our Lord as a sign to the world. He prayed that his disciples might be one, "that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me."

We have all read the story of Uzzah—how he was punished by God for putting his hand to the ark when the oxen stumbled. Perhaps we have thought it was rather hard on Uzzah. But one cannot help feeling that God would not have done it if He had not meant to teach his people an important lesson. Very often we act like Uzzah; we think the Lord is not able to take care of his own cause. Some worker has stumbled, or we think he has, and we put forth our hands to save the ark. In the case of Uzzah the oxen did stumble; and in our own day they stumble frequently. But we too often forget what we are. We are not so much keepers of the ark as witnesses for God. "Ye are MY witnesses" A body of witnesses in court are sometimes a very odd-looking lot of people—as unlike each other as possible. But if they can all practically testify to the same thing, each giving his own little bit of evidence in his own way, their united testimony will be good and useful. The great thing for us to see is that we bear our own witness well, rather than be over-anxious to set others right. Then, I think, we would not have to say much about money. "With great power gave the Apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and great grace was upon them all, neither was there any among them that lacked." We say the Lord is coming, but we can only prepare for his coming in proportion as we are of one accord, of one mind. It has been said, with regard to prophetic truth, that it would be a good thing if we were to come together and speak about what we are agreed on, rather than that on which we differ. The same thing is also true, I think, with respect to Gospel doctrine. There would not be a great deal left on which we did not agree. What we agreed about would be like the dinner, and the things we disagreed about would be like the nuts we sometimes crack after dinner. We make a great deal more noise in cracking the nuts than in eating the dinner. Let us try to love one another, and bear with one another. There are those who, we think, are in great error, and make great mistakes; and yet, somehow, the Lord uses them. I know a man who, in my opinion, is not half so sound in doctrine as I am, but he gets people to come to Christ and be saved. If the ten men take hold of the skirts of him that is a Christian, and say, "We will go with you, for we have heard that God is with you," they will bring their purses with them. God help us to love one another, and be faithful witnesses to Him, and we shall silence the taunt of those who ask, "Where is their God?"

MR. RADCLIFFE'S MISSIONARY APPEAL.

What the Lord sent me to London about specially at this time, was the heathen, and the people living in darkness on the Continent: with them I include the Jews. Wherever I have been I have felt constrained to speak on this one subject. If I speak about it to you to-night, you will find it is quite to the point. The Lord's dying command was, Go, and carry the Gospel to every creature. That is what we have not done in London. We have not even carried it to our own immediate neighbours. I suppose if we brought up Atheists to this platform to-night, they would point to us professing Christians—to us true Christians, who are really converted, and say: "You cannot be Christians, because you are not fulfilling the dying request of your Lord and Master." You know that for 200 years after we had the great Reformation we refused to carry the Gospel to anybody but our native Englishmen. It is only recently that we have begun to obey our Lord's command. Therefore the infidels would be right in saying that we cannot be the true followers of Jesus Christ, because we are not obeying the most important of his commands. Let us take one of the countries almost close to us — Russia, with its 100,000,000 of people. They are hungering and thirsting for the Gospel, but we are not sending it to them. It is much easier for Englishmen to do it than for their own countrymen, because the police would at once pounce upon a Russian if he were found proclaiming the good news of salvation. What has this to do with your special work to-night? I believe the Lord will raise up a great army from among you to go to these needy places of the earth. We met nine of them this morning—all young women—who are going to China. Lord Radstock, as you know, is going out soon to India. Yesterday I was seeing a colonel in the army who is going out to Russia, and another friend, a Stockholm man, is going at his own expense. Presently there will be such a cry for men and women to go out to all the lands and speak of Christ. In the Western States of America they cannot supply the demand for ministers. Much prayer is going up for the dark places of the world—far darker than London. I have written to a pastor in St. Petersburg, asking if he can find me room for six railway men accustomed to make locomotives. We want converted workmen who can support themselves to go forth and tell of Christ. In Glasgow they told me lately that they had been sending out a good number of such men. Now we shall have to go for these men and women to where they have been well tried and educated, in your university. There is no college for such training that I know of in Great Britain, that I would rather go to, than this blessed Gospel Mission which has been going for these eighteen years or more. Some of the workers are necessarily paid, but there are many others who have been giving their spare hours and days free of any cost, and hanging upon God by faith. These are the people we want for China and Africa, and the dark places of the Continent. By and by we shall come down to you asking if you can spare fifty such working men and women to go abroad as the servants of Christ. You have been giving to the people at home the simple Gospel, but we will want you for the darker places. At first Mr. Hurditch will be staggered, it may be, but presently he will see the places of those who go filled up with many more of those at home. You will find there will be such a spirit of prayer going up, that a mighty blessing will fall upon those who go and those who stay. Glasgow is the richer to-day for all those young men and young women that have gone forth. If God will pour out his Spirit upon the Christian pastors and the people, we may have an awakening amongst us this winter such as shall spread from London to the uttermost places of the earth, where the heathen are groping in thick darkness. Oh, that we would join in prayer, and cry to God for such a mighty awakening. We have proposed that there should be a three days' fast in Scotland from one end of the country to the other. Might we not have a day's fasting and prayer throughout London and England, that we may get on our faces before the Lord, and ask Him to forgive us because we have not been obeying Christ's command?

It was subsequently stated by Mr. Hurditch that several of the converts were much exercised about giving themselves to work in the foreign mission field, and were waiting on God for guidance in the matter.

After some brief but earnest words of exhortation, Dr. MacKilliam led in prayer, and, having sung the Doxology, the large gathering dispersed.

Notes and Comments.

WE have heard with deep regret that there has been a visitation of serious illness among the children under Miss Sharman's care at the Orphan Home, West-square, Southwark. It would cheer the heart of our devoted sister if she were to receive some practical expression of sympathy from our readers in this time of trial.

We request special notice to the report of the anniversary of the Evangelistic Mission, in our present issue. So extensive and valuable a work ought to be well sustained. Especially it is to be hoped that funds will come in for the continuance of the Gospel services on Sunday evenings at the Oxford Music Hall.

With reference to our brief comment last week on the article in The Pall Mall Gazette, describing the work of the Y.M.C.A. Association, Mr. Robert Burn, Secretary of the Aldersgate-street branch, writes to say that in the "copy" sent to that paper, the words "186, Aldersgate-street," formed part of the title. The omission of these words, therefore, to which we referred, was the act of the conductors of our evening contemporary, and not of the friends at Aldersgate-street.

Among the later attractions of the International Health Exhibition has been the instruction of a deaf and dumb class in the art of speaking. The Ealing Society for training teachers of the deaf, and for the diffusion of the German system throughout the United Kingdom, has given daily illustrations of the possibility of this heavily afflicted portion of the community being taught to speak, and so saved from the entire isolation which the silent system of signs involves. By a process of imitation, analogous to that employed by the mother and the nurse, the teacher of a deaf child utters again and again the same sound, the pupil imitates, and gradually acquires the power to utter similar sounds, and so to take part in social intercourse. The result, as seen in the class examined at the Exhibition, is certainly remarkably convincing as to the possibilities and advantages of this system over finger speech.

There are already eight classes established on this system in connection with the London School Board; and in the interests of the numerous deaf pupils to be found in our population, we may hope their number will increase. The prevalence of the plan on the Continent, and its successful working there, make it eminently desirable to extend its operations in our own land, where it is comparatively little known.

Professor Tyndall, in his address at the opening of the new session of the Birkbeck Institution, on Wednesday evening last week, gave a very practical résumé of his past experiences in the battle of life. Referring to the fact that there was a time when his salary was under twenty shillings a week, he said that he has often wondered since at the amount of genuine happiness a young man of regular habits, not caring for either pipe or mug, may extract even from pay like that. He eloquently enforced the importance of loyalty to principle and duty, representing this as vastly superior to mere glory or renown as a motive force in life.

Remembering the materialistic theories connected with Professor Tyndall's name and labours, it is not a little striking to find him speaking of God as the personal source of blessing in any direction. He said: "We bless God for our able journalists, our orderly Parliament, and our free press; but we bless Him still more for the 'hardy English root' from which these things spring." Notwithstanding all their independence of theological and spiritual truths, modern scientists and philosophers cannot help sometimes going beyond the limits of their own reasonings, and recognising the Supreme power. Mr. Froude tells us, in the closing volumes of his "Life of Carlyle," how that celebrated writer cried out, in one of his seasons of trouble, "Oh that I had faith; oh, that I had! Then were nothing too hard or too heavy for me."

By the kind permission of the Lady Mayoress, Mrs. Fisher, of Cross Keys-square, will give an account at the Mansion House of the work in which she and her fellow-labourers are engaged among young working women in the city. The meeting will be held in the Long room of the Mayoral residence to-morrow (Friday), at 3 p.m. The attendance of employers and ladies interested in this class is earnestly invited.

Dr. B. W. Richardson, in the course of his address at the St. Pancras Hall last week, as president of the Temperance Association assembled there, said that temperance advocates should not only abstain from drink, but should also display moderation as regards eating. It was the popular notion that those who did not take alcoholic liquors must make up for their abstinence by eating more than the rest of mankind; but nothing could be more contrary to truth. The laws of health, and those of morality also, demand that the body shall be preserved from abuse of all kinds. Abstinence in one direction is neutralised physically and morally by excess in another. The apostolic precept puts the subject tersely and fully, "Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

Dr. Monro Gibson will commence, at the Young Men's Christian Association, 186, Aldersgate-street, on Monday evening next, November 3, a course of lectures, entitled "Truth for the Times, in a Book 3000 years old." The great success with which Dr. Gibson lectured last season on "Rock and Sand," will doubtless secure good audiences for the present series.

French movements in China have resulted in grave danger to foreigners and native Christians resident in that Empire. An official proclamation offering rewards for the heads of Frenchmen, varying from two thousand pounds for the head of an admiral to twenty-five pounds for that of a common soldier, has so excited the cupidity of the common people that the life of all foreigners is endangered. Native Christians are looked upon as siding with the foreign element, and so are hated by their countrymen. Mandarins refuse protection to those who appear before them under circumstances of persecution and wrongs, saying that all Christians deserve to be killed. The present aspect of affairs calls for much prayerful sympathy with all in China who espouse the cause of Christ, as also for earnest prayer that our various missionary societies may have wisdom and grace to guide aright their several organisations.

Letters are reaching this country from missionaries in China which tell sad tidings of excitement and danger, owing to the hostilities with the French. The native Christians are, in some cases, having a hard time. The conduct of the French authorities is described as being unspeakably bad. The following opinion of the recent warlike exploits of our neighbours is from an American contemporary; it expresses the views of many observant persons at the present time:—

"The late exploits of France, in the murder and pillage of the defenceless in Madagascar, Tonquin, and in China, are simply astounding. It would seem as if, in mortification at its consciousness of being but the weak shadow of its former self in the arena of nations, the ghost of the last great Papal power, it had decided to raise the pirate flag, and ruin the nascent civilisations which it cannot rule. With such nations Providence never fails to have a reckoning day."

Last Friday, amid the rejoicings of his fellow-townsmen at Ramsgate, and multitudes of his co-religionists elsewhere, the veteran Sir Moses Montefiore completed his hundredth year. Philanthropy has had no more ardent and practical exponent than this worthy son of Abraham, during the whole century of his existence. His labours and sacrifices in the cause of Jewish liberty, and on behalf of the general welfare of his race, have been incessant and nobly self-denying, and his memory will be handed down to posterity with undying gratitude and affection. His great desire has been the restoration of Israel to its ancient polity as a nation. His words on this subject as coming from a Jew of Sir Moses Montefiore's standing and culture are worthy of special note:—

"I do not expect that all Israelites will quit the lands in which they are happy, even as there are Englishmen in all parts of the world; but that Jerusalem is destined to become the seat of a Jewish Empire is the dream of my life, which will be fulfilled when I am no more."

A very firm and decided stand was taken at the annual meeting of the United Kingdom Alliance, held at Manchester last week, in reference to the political aspects of Temperance reform. A general feeling was expressed that Government had not dealt fairly with this question, and Mr. Benjamin Whitworth, M.P., declared his readiness to join any number of members of Parliament in refusing to support the Premier unless he changed his attitude on the subject of Temperance legislation. A resolution was moved by Sir Wilfrid Lawson, and seconded by Canon Wilberforce, protesting against the continuance of laws sanctioning the injustice, folly, and cruelty of thrusting into or maintaining within any locality, contrary to the will of the inhabitants, a system essentially evil. Anything like truce or quarter is evidently far from the minds of "Alliance" men in relation to the drink traffic.

Mr. Charles Hill, writing in the interests of the "Lord's Day Rest Association," calls attention to a subject which involves many other points beside that for which he contends. He urges the importance of Christian ratepayers using all the influence they have at command to secure the return of safe men as members of the town councils. The cause of religion, temperance, and public morality, is greatly concerned in this matter. Irreligious men holding such positions have power to seriously hinder the advancement of purity and righteousness. A vote, whether at municipal or parliamentary elections, ought always to be regarded as a stewardship which involves moral responsibility as to the way in which it is employed.

November 20 will be observed as a day of special prayer at Mildmay Conference Hall.

Mr. Ruskin, in his first lecture as Slade Professor, before the University of Oxford, on "The Pleasures of Learning," gave a good hint to those who desire to study the history of religion in its influence upon the world, when he said that every fairly educated European boy or girl ought to learn the history of five cities—Athens, Rome, Venice, Florence, and London; this would teach all that need be known of Greek religion and arts, of the victory of Christianity over Paganism, of some of the essential facts respecting the Christian arts of painting, sculpture, and music, and the development of Christian chivalry and philosophy, with their exponent art of Gothic architecture. Many of our young readers who want a guide to useful historical reading during the long winter evenings now at hand, would find no little profit and pleasure from following Professor Ruskin's suggested course.

A Bible-class is held for German young women on Sunday afternoons at 3.30, at the Foreign Women Servants' Institute, 36, Hart-street, Bloomsbury, W.C. The young friends who attend are welcomed to tea after the meeting. Germans residing in London would do well to mention this to their friends.

Captain Key, honorary superintendent of Bethesda Town Mission, Portsmouth, writes to us to the effect that he is compelled, as far as he can see, to leave Southsea very shortly, owing to the severe and continued agricultural depression. He is extremely desirous that some Christian friend of independent means should come to reside in Southsea or Portsmouth, to take over the work and fill his post. The superintendent should be one who is established in the deeper truths of God's sovereign grace, and has also a loving zeal for the conversions of souls. The sphere is very important and extensive, and to one who loves the Master and desires to live for Him is full of bright prospect and encouragement. Captain Key's address is Downham, St. Edwards-road, Southsea.

A conference has been held at Manchester, in connection with the Evangelical Protestant Union, which consists of the Episcopal bodies in England and Ireland. Earnest witness was borne in defence of Reformation Doctrine, and the Romanising tendencies of certain teachings and practices in the State church were vigorously condemned. In these days of Popish activity, it is more than ever needful to maintain the testimony for which many of our forefathers suffered and died. At the same time we do well to remember that the truth is most effectual when spoken in a spirit of love and forbearance towards those who oppose it.

Dr. Barnardo is now on his return voyage from Canada. With such a work as that he carries on at his "Homes," there can be no funds laid up in store, but a continual dependence on God to lead his people to liberality in their support. It would be a kindly thing to let him find on his arrival a replenished exchequer. It would greatly cheer his heart in resuming the arduous labours to which his life has been devoted. The finances have suffered from his absence, and we heartily commend the need of this invaluable institution to the generous sympathies of the Lord's stewards.

We would direct attention to the important and satisfactory letter of Pastor Vernier, respecting the Salvation Army in France, page 19.

A fresh effort has been made to overcome the great difficulty of bringing together employers and employed in the needlework industries of England. A Needlework Registry has been opened in Westminster, where workers of all classes may enter their names and terms as seeking employment on payment of 3d. (by post 4d.). Employers can apply and take their choice of books of classified workers, which are kept at the office, 8, Great Queen-street, Westminster, S.W.; Louisa Gordon, Secretary.

At a meeting recently held in Edinburgh, to form a Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, Mrs. Duncan McLaren rose in the body of the hall, and called attention to an important feature of the general question of improving the condition of gutter children and street Arabs. She asserted that no real improvement could be made until laws had been obtained to force men to do their duty to their wives and families. The Lord Provost, in reply, stated that one object of the new Association would be to obtain a change in the laws in this respect. This is a subject to which all social reformers would do well to turn their attention and concentrate their efforts. For lack of legislation in the matter, shameful neglect and injury are inflicted on thousands of helpless ones.

In his letter to the Bishop of St. Asaph on the Disestablishment question, the Premier puts in a strong plea for unity among representatives of varying schools of thought within the Church. He asks if each one should not remember that his antagonist has something to say, and urges that "the great charity which is a bounden duty everywhere in these matters, should here be accompanied and upheld by two ever-striving handmaidens of a great reverence and a great patience." Instead of the bitterness, almost savagery, which have too often characterised church controversies, Mr. Gladstone contends they ought, on every ground of reason and history, to be marked by moderation, mildness, and reserve, by thinking no evil, by hoping all things, and by kindly and favourable interpretations.

So far as these words could be construed into an advocacy of tolerating or sanctioning positive error, we should have no sympathy with them, but in application to all matters upon which lawful differences of opinion may exist, they are worthy of the highest praise. Binding on us at all times, and under all circumstances, Christian charity, as Mr. Gladstone says, "is eminently rational at a time when the deepest and widest questions of belief in a Saviour, in a Deity, and in a moral law, are everywhere coming to issue on a scale hitherto without example."

We learn with much pleasure that Mr. Robert McCann, the highly-esteemed and efficient Secretary of the Belfast Y.M.C.A., has been chosen as the Travelling Secretary for the Irish Associations. During his three years' term of office in Belfast he has done splendid service in the cause, and we feel sure that by God's blessing the new appointment will prove most beneficial to the Association throughout Ireland. Mr. McCann enters on his duties as Travelling Secretary on the 1st January next.

Mildmay illuminations, Dutch pottery, and various articles, ornamental and useful, will be sold at a stall in Soho Bazaar, which has been engaged, from Monday next, by the Countess of Tankerville, for the benefit of the Mildmay Missions. The stall is on the left-hand side, close to the Soho-square entrance.

Mr. Stanley made some revelations as to the slave trade in Africa, at the Jubilee Meeting held in the Manchester Free Trade Hall last week, which ought to be widely known and considered. The Portuguese proceed on the principle that the best thing possible for the negro is to catch him, sell him to severe taskmasters, and force him to work; the Mohammedans of Africa also adopt the same idea. The consequence is that slavery of the most abhorrent type is common. The following statement made by Mr. Stanley speaks for itself:—

"A slave trade was a great blight which clung to Africa like an aggravated pest, destroying men faster than children could be born. He overtook a party of Arab marauders on the Congo in November of last year, over 1200 miles from the sea. They had utterly desolated a number of villages, massacred the adult males who had not at once fled, and carried off the women and children. He never saw such a sight before. In a small camp 300 fighting men kept in manacles and fetters, 2300 naked women and children, their poor bodies encrusted with dirt, all emaciated and weary through much misery. It was like ravening human kennels—a sight to make angels weep, cruel enough to make strong men curse and cry 'vengeance on the murderers.' Here was the net result of the burning of 118 villages and the devastation of 43 districts to glut the avaricious soul of a man who had constituted himself chief of a district some 200 miles higher up Though over seventy-five years old, here he was prosecuting his murderous business, having shed so much human blood in three months that, if collected into a tank, it might have sufficed to drown him and all his thirty wives and concubines. Those 2300 slaves would have to be transported over 200 miles in canoes, and such as could not be fed would die, and perhaps 800—perhaps 900—of all the number would ever reach their destination. This was the latest story of the slave trade in Africa."

Mr. Stanley says that after seeing some millions of natives and talking with thousands of them, he is convinced of their readiness to engage in honest toil if it be put before them. For fair money he invariably found that he could get fair work. It was true that for some years no native went to the station and offered to work, but now nearly 1000 natives voluntarily marched many miles seeking for work from the International Association every month. So long as the Portuguese rule fills the land with terror and dread, cruelty and injustice, the development of the finer features of the negro character must be repressed.

Mission stations formed the subject of a vigorous discussion at the quarterly meeting of the London Baptist Association, held recently at Hackney. It was introduced by Dr. Underhill, who appealed earnestly for an extension of such work in connection with the churches. Out of the 153 churches belonging to the Association, only 34 had any outside mission work, a very small proportion, and surely revealing a lack of concern for the outcast, which ought to be remedied. His plea that the mission hall should be preeminently set apart for Gospel teaching, and not used for political or polemical discussions, is a wise one, and worthy of serious attention. So, also, was the Doctor's further contention that such stations should be the centre of practical work, such as feeding the little ones, helping to good employment, bringing fallen women to Homes, Gospel Temperance work, and the establishment in poor districts of Crêches and Training Schools for ragged children.

THE BIBLE FOR IRELAND.

At the recent Christian Convention in Dublin Mr. Hamilton Magee stated, as an encouraging feature in the present aspect of Irish affairs, that the Scriptures are being more and more distributed and read through the country. It is one of the most deplorable characteristics of the Romish system, which prevails so extensively in the sister island, that the masses of the people are absolutely forbidden by the priests to study the Bible for themselves. Little wonder that in most cases the peasantry, and the humble classes generally, are in such dense spiritual darkness. Popery has much to answer for in having thus kept the people in ignorance of the saving truths of Christianity. The Irish are naturally reverent and religiously disposed, and if they had a fair chance of gaining a practical knowledge of these truths, they would readily respond to the claims of the Gospel, and would receive it as God's message to sinful men.

Such, at least, is the experience of the good and earnest Christian men who are scattered through the island as agents of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland. During a recent visit to Dublin it was the good fortune of the writer to meet some of these Scripture Readers, around the hospitable board of Captain James Kearney White, the worthy Secretary of the Society. Captain White is gifted with an unusual share of the enthusiasm and fervour peculiar to his countrymen, and he has succeeded in imbuing his fellow-workers with the same spirit. It is a circumstance worthy of note that two of the men who served under Captain White, when he was on coastguard duty in the West of Ireland, are serving under him still, but in a different capacity.

On the occasion of the little gathering to which we refer, there was also present a very estimable Irish clergyman, Rev. W. D. Austin, rector of Castlecomer, co. Kilkenny. He had just returned from the Clifton Conference, which he had attended as a deputation on behalf of the Scripture Readers' Society, and where he had very effectually pleaded its claims to the hearty support of the English people. Before the Readers gave their testimony, Mr. Austin addressed to the little company some very practical and helpful exhortations, dwelling mainly on the comfort and strength that are to be derived, in daily Christian life and work, from the hope of the glorious appearing of our Lord and Saviour. Mr. Austin was able from ample personal knowledge to say that Romanists throughout Ireland—even the priests themselves—are perfectly accessible and ready to converse on spiritual matters, if they are kindly and properly approached.

This was also the burden of the testimony given by the Scripture Readers. Several of them said that they could not do much good, if any, when the people were gathered in groups, as controversy was almost sure to arise. When they could talk to the people singly and alone there was great willingness to hear the truth and to welcome it. One reader declared that he had travelled over all parts of Ireland, and he found that the Roman Catholics listened to the reading of the Scriptures and the simple declaration of the way of salvation as attentively as any Protestant could. In the wild and remote regions of Galway he entered houses which he had visited twelve months before. The people welcomed him again very cordially, and he had proofs that his former efforts had not been in vain. In one house he visited he noticed a very old lady standing at the door of an inner room while he read the Scriptures and exhorted the other inmates of the house. She spoke to him before he left, and declared that though she was 95 years of age, that was the first time she had heard anyone telling the sweet story of Jesus and his love. It was touching to hear some of the incidents related by these good men, showing the deep reverential love that the Irishwomen express for Jaysus, as, in their vernacular, they pronounce the Saviour's name.

Mr. Quarrier, another friend who was present, and who has had a long experience of evangelistic work in all parts of Ireland, had the same story to tell. He related one incident in his experience which is so striking as to be well worth preservation. He was then stationed in co. Kerry, and was going to his home from Bantry by way of Glengariff. He was driving, and was accompanied by a friend. When he was about a quarter of a mile past a certain place where there were cross-roads, something seemed to tell him that he ought to have gone by the other road. He accordingly turned about, and did so. By and by he stopped to feed his pony. While walking up and down the road with his friend, as the pony was feeding, he saw an old man, with long grey hair, approaching. As soon as he saw the man he knew that God had sent him to him. When the man came up he addressed him in Irish. After some general conversation, Mr. Quarrier said to him, "You have been a long time in the world now." "Over eighty years." "Have you made any preparation for leaving it?" "Not a bit, sir. My soul has been a trouble to me for years. I went down to Killarney to see if the holy fathers could help me, and I gave them a lot of money. When I came home it was not a bit of good—no use at all. I went to the priest and gave him money again and again, but I have not got this burden off my soul yet." I began to tell the old man simply what the Lord had done for him. He dropped down on the road on his knees and said, "Tell me these words again, for God's sake." I told him again as simply as I could; then I knelt down and prayed for him. "Glory be to God!" he exclaimed, "now I know why I was sent out of the house to-day. I was sitting by the fireside, and all the rest were away off on the hill. I have not been so far as this for two years. As I sat by the fire I heard a voice in the room below: 'John, go out and go up the road.' There was no one in the house and I felt nervous at hearing the voice, but I sat down again. Once more the voice sounded, 'John, go out and go up the road.' I started and got more nervous still, but again I sat down. The third time I heard the voice, 'John, go out and go up the road.' So I came out and walked thus far, and as sure as you are here God sent me to you and you to me." He grasped my hand, and his eyes filled with tears as he said, "Now I will die easy; I have lost that burden. But there is one thing I want to speak to you about. I have laid by £200 for a sacred purpose — to have masses said for my soul after I die. What will I do with it?" I told him to give it to God in some way or other; were there no poor people in the neighbourhood? "No; they are all comfortable farmers like myself. Will I give it to the priest?" I said: "Do not give him a penny of it. The Lord will direct you what to do with it." We said good-bye, and he went away. I never saw or heard of him again, and I do not know what he did with the money. I could give ever so many instances of that sort. My dear men (addressing the Scripture Readers), go on sowing the seed; but avoid controversy as you would avoid a serpent. If you get Christ into the hearts of the people, everything else will go out.

"Let me give you another bit of my experience," said Mr. Quarrier, "with a priest. I was in a car, and the priest wished to get up. There was only one empty seat, and that was beside me. I looked at him, and offered him my hand. He turned round and went to the other side of the car. He could not get up there, so he came back and got up beside me. 'Are you a missionary?' he said. 'I am a minister of the Gospel.' 'Because,' said he, if you are, you are one of the most civil I ever met. Do you know why I objected to come up beside you at first?' 'No, but I thought there must be some reason for it. I never saw an Irishman act as you acted.' 'Well,' said he, the reason was this: when I have got up beside these church missionaries, they have bothered the life out of me with controversy, and exposed me before the people, when I could not reply to them." We talked about various things, and I took the opportunity of speaking to him about his soul. When we parted he told me where he lived, and asked me to call on him any time I was that way.

Captain Kearney White followed up this narrative with a case from his experience when travelling by rail. He went past his station in order to prolong the conversation, and when they bade each other good-bye the priest said, "We have had a most profitable conversation, and I trust in God we shall meet in heaven."

We were sorry to hear that though there is no lack of openings for this blessed Scripture reading in Ireland, there is a lack of capable, devoted, judicious workers. We trust this need may soon be supplied. Any friends who can in any way help on the good cause, should communicate with Captain Kearney White, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin.

ALDERSHOT MISSION.

Just twenty-one years ago, on Saturday, 10th October, 1863, in faith and prayer and thanksgiving, the first opening service was held beneath the roof of the Aldershot Mission Hall and Soldiers' Home—a place whose memory is sacred in hundreds of hearts all the world over, and amongst the ransomed blood-washed throng in the upper sanctuary. Twenty-one years afterwards, on Friday, 10th October, 1884, in adoring gratitude and praise, its majority was celebrated by the first of a series of special services.

It is delightful to look back over the twenty-two years since, "in weakness and fear and much trembling," God's honoured servant, Mrs. Daniell, first came to the camp, where at that time not a reading room, recreation room, or any other place was provided for the troops, except the canteen, public-house, and dancing saloon. When Mrs. Daniell first designed the Soldiers' Home, some considered her scheme to be on too extensive a scale, but events have more than justified her wisdom, for within a few years of its opening, the attendance at the nightly meeting had become so large that a beautiful classroom had to be added. Since then one improvement after another has become necessary. The Home, which has only now attained its majority, is already the mother of the large and flourishing Homes at Colchester, Chatham, and Portsmouth, besides one on a small scale at Manchester; it has also been the precursor of the numerous Soldiers' Homes and Institutes originated and maintained by other workers in England, Scotland, Ireland, Gibraltar, Barbadoes, the Cape, Egypt, and indeed in some form or other wherever the flag of England waves.

On the anniversary of the opening day, by Miss Daniell's invitation, the large hall, the coffee-room, and the boys' room were crowded by a series of brilliant tea parties. Scarlet coats and Highlanders' white jackets, the blue and gold of the Royal Artillery and the Hussar regiments, the sombre green of the "sweeps" (the soubriquet by which the distinguished Rifle Brigade is familiarly known in the service) the small Geneva red cross of the Army Hospital Corps, and the little-loved and much-abused "kharkee" of one or two unfortunate regiments, were mingled together in satisfactory confusion. Every corps in camp was well represented, and the bright faces and perfect behaviour made it a sight worth seeing. After the tables had been taken away, the hall was filled to listen to Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke, who, himself once in the army, was well fitted to speak to an audience of soldiers. Many earnest talks were held that night and on the succeeding evenings. Indeed, at times, in addition to those who were spoken to in the hall, in every room in the house where it was possible to be alone quiet, some awakened soul was being helped to understand the way of God more perfectly. None but those who are familiar with such work can enter into its value and necessity, or realise how slowly and with how many explanations, illustrations, and references to texts, some souls unlearn their false views of God and of themselves, and become willing to receive as sinners the unspeakable gift. The blessing seemed so manifest that Mrs. Daniell arranged with Major Graves, 20th Hussars, who together with his wife found Christ in the Home several years ago, to carry on the services for another week.

FROM THE FAR WEST.

DEAR SIR,—Ten years ago (in the summer of 1874) I sent you a letter. At that time I was pastor of the Macon Circuit, Memphis Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Now I am pastor of the Hernando-street Church, in the city of Memphis. For the sake of some of your readers who may not know, let me say that Memphis is on the Mississippi River, in the south-western corner of the State of Tennessee. It is an enterprising, prosperous city, having a population of about 60,000. We have had several yellow-fever epidemics, the last two, in 1878-9, having almost depopulated the city. But we have had no fever for five years, public confidence is being restored, and evidences of prosperity are all around us. The presence of yellow fever was due to the very unsatisfactory sanitary condition of the city. But now we have got so near perfection, from a sanitary point of view, that the President of the National Board of Health recently pronounced Memphis to be "one of the healthiest cities in the Union."

As regards the spiritual aspect of affairs, I will say that last winter we had a Union series of evangelistic services, in which all the Protestant churches took part. The preaching was done by Rev. Sam. P. Jones, of Georgia, a most remarkable man, and specially fitted for evangelistic work. There were 500 professed conversions, besides large numbers of Christians in all the churches whose spiritual life was greatly revived. Since then we had arranged for Rev. Thomas Harrison, a Northern evangelist, to hold services in our city; but as his other engagements prevented him coming till June, and as large numbers leave the city at that time for health resorts, it was deemed advisable to postpone his visit. But we expect him some time in the near future.

You have had a long loan of Mr. Moody. Now, however, we hope that he will be divinely directed to come down here and visit us. I believe he would receive an enthusiastic welcome from tens of thousands of Christians in all the cities of the Southern Sates. We would be glad to see an extensive work of grace, begun and carried on through his instrumentality and that of Mr. Sankey.

I have, for five weeks past, preached every day at protracted meetings; I have engagements for five weeks to come. Country brethren draw largely on the city pastors for help. At these meetings the Holy Spirit is present in convincing and converting power, and great good is done.

It wants a good deal of physical strength to preach every day for ten weeks during the hottest season of the year, but my health is good. This has been our hottest month. Occasionally the heat registers 100° in the shade. But we never have any cases of sunstroke, although New York city, with far less heat than we, had fourteen deaths in one day this season from this cause.

I wish some of my English or Scotch friends (I am a Scotsman) would send me a copy of THE CHRISTIAN. I have not had one for several years.—Yours fraternally, DAVID LEITH.

Memphis, Tennessee, U.S.

MR. J. RENNIE, the indefatigable agent for the Hitchin District Colportage Association, has sold during the past year nearly £800 worth of Bibles, Testaments, Prayer-books, tracts, and other good literature. Since the close of his report he has also sold 1000 copies of the new penny Testament. Some thousands of tracts have been gratuitously distributed.

THE RAGGED SCHOOL MISSION, PONTYMOIL.—The report of this good work contains encouraging accounts of the year's labours. The efforts connected with the various departments have all been attended with God's blessing. The work among the factory girls is described as an arduous one. Few know the temptations which beset them. Many of them serve in tinworks, brickyards, blast-furnaces, &c., and are surrounded by unprincipled men. Evangelistic labour at the Mission-hall has been greatly blessed. The Temperance meetings are crowded, and hundreds have signed the pledge. The superintendent, Mr. Wintle, thanks God and takes courage.

JOHN HAMBLETON at the ANTIPODES.

DOUBTLESS you have been long and patiently waiting to hear of our welfare in this far-off land, and I have also been anxious to write, but thought fit to let the Lord lead, and things develop, so that it might be seen that his hand was guiding and controlling all and every incident and experience, for his own glory and my instruction for future work.

From Naples I wrote to several friends, showing the Lord's leading through storm and calm so far, but the preaching Christ on board that ship, after leaving Naples, taught me to hold my life at little cost, for during the thirty-three years' service in the Gospel, where enemies on land have raged and persecuted, I never knew what it was to be so hemmed in by a circle of demons possessing men, and to suffer in fellowship with a rejected and hated Lord. Out of five hundred on board, at least half were bigoted Papists, led to mass every Sunday morning by three Christ-hating priests officiating in Romish robes. Nuns were going out with them as a band organised to plant Popery all over these colonies. Then there were about a hundred blaspheming infidels, who attacked me for preaching and confessing Christ.

It seems to have been agreed before crossing the line to have a victim, and one leading infidel announced that there would be a death on board when crossing the line. They intended it to be the old preacher who denounced sin and preached Christ. The whole crowd of God's enemies seemed to express delight at the anticipation, but God, who knew their purpose, gave them a victim, and delivered me. A sick man, who had seen God's way of salvation, was taken in soul to heaven while crossing the line, and his body thrown overboard the next day. The Lord had given to my wife—the only companion and sufferer with me on board—the third chapter of Mark, where the chief priests and Herodians sought to catch Him in his words that they might accuse Him. And "Jesus withdrew Himself." "Come," said the Spirit, "let us read together the third chapter of Mark." When she drew my attention to this, I saw it was the Lord's mind to withdraw from preaching while crossing the line, for they had agreed together to seize me while preaching, and play death and destruction to my body. My wife and myself locked ourselves in our cabin, and were all night in prayer. Crossing the line that night the sick man died, and on the morrow the body was thrown overboard; and I told them they had a victim—a death on board, as the infidel had publicly announced—like the ram caught in the thicket. Isaac was delivered from the knife, but my wife and myself were boycotted till we reached Adelaide, where God sent an unknown man to take us ashore, leaving the ship to go on to Melbourne.

There the Lord gave us a fortnight of blessed Christian fellowship and power in the Gospel, so that souls were saved and God's people built up in the faith. The next ship of the Orient line took us on to Melbourne, our destination, to wait for the ships bringing the books and Bible carriage. There we did not find much rest for the soles of our feet, for carnal strife had been going on for over twelve months, and after a month's stay the Fort George arrived from Liverpool, bringing the books and furniture.

The Lord opened the door for the Gospel at Geelong, where in my unconverted days I had a theatre built, and even then, though unconverted, battled with an infidel who preached Tom Paine and ran down the Bible, I having from a child been taught the letter of the Word. Now after thirty-seven years the door opened to preach Christ.

Ballarat is an inland town, the finest in all the colonies, and a great centre for the mining districts, a hundred miles up to Sandhurst. Here the Lord had ready a cottage with one large room, where, while I am writing, the boxes are being opened. Round the walls there is a very large garden full of splendid fruit trees and vegetables. A large hall is opened for me to preach the Gospel, and souls have already been saved. There is a Chinese camp within a quarter of a mile, and my wife and myself are sitting at a fine fire, with every comfort in the present rainy season that this life can give. Christian friends come in to buy tracts for distribution. Bibles and Testaments, and some of Mrs. Shipton's books have already been disposed of. The ship, Thyatira, from London, has arrived, and brought out the Bible-carriage, which is to be sent by steamer to Geelong, forty-five miles from Melbourne, and opened out for Gospel work and the sale of Bibles and books. Frank Brewster and a dear brother at Geelong will work it for a month there and in the surrounding small towns. Then we bring it on to Ballarat, where there is the widest street I ever saw, with great crowds on Saturdays shopping, who will carry Bibles and books away to their various homes. And this is the beginning of that great work which has pressed upon my heart since the time God brought me to Himself, giving me the first intimation, after, in my ignorant unconverted days, I fought with the infidel for the scriptures of truth, and the Lord spoke to me in the night season in Geelong in the year 1847.

The democratic element is rampant here, and to keep down Popery and sham Christianity the Government have prohibited the Bible in all the State schools. We have Bibles, Testaments, and Scripture texts which will get into the houses of thousands from the Bible-carriage. Truly the Lord is good, to give such a field for work, and so much precious seed to scatter broadcast on this extraordinary new world, for the town of Melbourne of itself, a city sprung into existence since I saw its infancy, is now as busy as London, growing in size and commerce. There is a lifetime's work for true labourers here alone, but we hope to work the up-country districts first, and, as the Lord shall prosper and increase the depôt, so Sydney, Adelaide, Queensland, Tasmania, and other places will yet feel the running streams of living water which shall flow out until rivers among the rocks shall refresh the barren wastes, and these uttermost parts of the earth shall blossom and bear fruit to the praise of his glory who saves first and sends his redeemed ones to sow by all waters. JOHN HAMBLETON.

THE CHURCH ARMY.

AN influential gathering assembled at the Mansion House on Tuesday afternoon, last week, by invitation of the Lord Mayor, to hear brief accounts as to the work of the Church Army. Rev. J. F. Andrews, vicar of Roxeth, said that if General Booth had made provision for some kind of association with local churches where their converts could be trained and established in the faith, there would have been no need for the Church Army. At Roxeth it had worked well, and was self-supporting. Rev. W. Carlile made a stirring appeal for sympathy and help. There are now fifty-seven Army stations, at which 30,000 meetings are annually held. There are about 4000 converts, and about the same number of regular communicant members. The annual income of the Society is £6000. Two converts were introduced and spoke well, one who is a chimney-sweeper, saying that whenever he sweeps a chimney now he always speaks to the people of salvation.

Mr. T. A. Denny, in the course of a lively speech, said only the Holy Ghost could produce the change he had seen wrought through such an agency. Foreign Missions have native agents, and the Salvation and Church Armies are simply going on the same principles. A brief address from Mr. Robert Barclay was followed by words of cordial sympathy from the Lord Mayor; he believed the Army was doing God's work, and heartily wished it Godspeed.

MRS. REANEY has lately issued the first report of her Convalescent Home at Folkestone. Altogether about 250 persons enjoyed a fortnight at the Home during the year, of whom eighty-seven were free patients. Applications for admission, or for collecting cards, &c., are to be addressed to Mrs. G. S. Reaney, Stepney House, East India-road, Stepney, by whom help will be gratefully received.

Messrs. MOODY and SANKEY in BROOKLYN.

IN its issue of Monday, October 13, the New York Tribune has the following account of "a crowded revival meeting":—

"Hundreds of people were refused admittance to the Brooklyn Academy of Music last evening for the reason that the building was crowded to its utmost capacity. One man, accompanied by three little children, said that he had come twenty-five miles to hear Messrs. Moody and Sankey. He waited for an hour or more, and then went home unsatisfied. Services were held during the afternoon and evening under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association. The large audience of the afternoon was discounted by that of the evening. In the galleries the people stood twenty deep. On the main floor the aisles were packed. Over 500 people sat on the stage. The singing, led by Mr. Sankey, was of the most fervid character. The vast audience sang from its heart. Mr. Moody told his congregation that the Brooklyn Young Men's Christian Association wanted $150,000 before January for building and other purposes. He asked each one present to give his mite with all his might. The collection-basket was then sent around. The subject of Mr. Moody's sermon was Christ's first meeting with his disciples. The latter were actuated by curiosity, just as some people are to-day, the speaker said. To illustrate this, he said one man attended one of their meetings in London because he wanted to see the crowd and be hustled by it. He liked that sort of thing. He came again, and was converted. Mr. Moody made a powerful appeal in his earnest way to his hearers to grasp eternal life while it was within reach."

The New York Independent says:—"Messrs. Moody and Sankey have been holding meetings in Brooklyn for two or three days, in Dr. Cuyler's church, and have given many Christian workers an inspiration and new ideas." We hope to give some details in our next.

MR. J. M. SCROGGIE IN BRISTOL.

A FIFTEEN-DAYS' Mission in this city has been held by Mr. J. M. Scroggie, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. The meetings were held in the large and well-appointed new hall, erected mainly as the outcome of Mr. Moody's Mission, in which Mr. Scroggie so acceptably took part two years ago. The spacious building was well filled each evening, as the Gospel of Christ was faithfully and fervently declared and listened to by the people with great interest.

For some time previously much prayer had been offered for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and his seal has been most manifest. The still moments of the after-meetings were felt to be very solemn times; many remained behind each evening, and not a few went away rejoicing in conscious acceptance of the Saviour. During the three Sunday afternoons the meetings were chiefly for men. The addresses were stimulating, elevating, and full of point; the joy of the people was exceeding great as the riches of Christ were brought out. On Sunday morning Mr. Scroggie gave an earnest address to Christian workers; his subject, "Love," was beautifully dealt with.

The last meeting on Sunday night, for non-church-goers, was one long to be remembered. The hall was crowded to excess. As the Prodigal was depicted, and the Lord's redeeming love proclaimed, we had the joy of seeing many return that evening to the Father's heart and home.

At the close of one of the meetings, a Christian lady had the unspeakable joy of seeing her husband, a son, and a daughter, all sitting in deep contrition, and willing to be instructed in the ways of the Lord. This seemed to be God's time for answering the prayers of many years. We were favoured with a large staff of well-instructed workers, most of whom found something to do "every night." The Sacred Song Association heartily led the singing. The Mission will be followed with Saturday evening Evangelistic Meetings weekly.

LADY MISSIONARIES TO THE FRONT.

FIVE FOR INDIA.

AT Mildmay Conference Hall, on Monday week, five lady missionaries going to India under the auspices of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission were commended to God. Miss Abraham goes to Patna; Miss Cole to Nassau; Miss Dickinson (formerly an artist) to Benares; Miss Kimmins to assist in the schools at Allahabad; the fifth is Miss Scott. Mr. W. T. Paton said the Committee had great joy in announcing a recent donation of £1000, but they still needed help, as they had been compelled to purchase the Mission premises at Allahabad at a cost of £1200.

Rev. John Bennett addressed the missionaries, forewarning them of the difficulties they would have to encounter from the circulation of Popish and atheistical literature among the natives. Rev. W. Budden, of the London Missionary Society, said that as the Syrophœnecian woman pleaded with the Saviour on behalf of her daughter, so the missionaries must cry to God for India. He thought they might gain help from the British residents, whose wives and daughters could be brought much more into service if rightly approached. Deep and earnest feeling pervaded both addresses, which were supplemented by a few words from Sir W. Muir and Mr. J. E. Matheson. Mr. Paton stated that a sale of work would shortly be held to raise more funds for the Society.

NINE FOR CHINA.

Another band of sisters has gone forth to swell the ranks of the quickly growing army of workers in China, in connection with the Inland Mission. Their names are—Miss McFarlane, Miss A. Drake, Miss A. Gibson, Miss McIntosh, Miss Jeannie Gray, Miss C. K. Murray, Miss M. Murray, Miss E. Webb, and Miss E. Marston. Their last "valedictory" was given at the Central Noon Prayer Meeting, Aldersgate-street, on Tuesday week, when there was a large gathering of friends. Each of the outgoing party told in brief but pathetic words how the Lord had led them in the past, and what confidence for the future they had in his love and his power to use and keep them in distant China. Said one, and her language may be taken as an expression of the feelings of all, "How good the Lord has been to me during the past years. My heart is full of joy and thankfulness at the prospect of going to China. If all the world were offered me to stay in England, I would not accept it."

Mr. Hudson Taylor said he had a letter that morning from his daughter, dated Colombo, on the voyage out. She and those who went with her were due in China on Friday last. She said in her letter that the journey had been a real treat, and they had felt the presence of the Master with them. The night before he had received a letter from Miss Gertrude Broomhall, who said she could not conceive of a happier party than they were. Even when they were so sick that they could do nothing, they had experienced much joy deep down in the heart. A letter from the friends who were commended to God a fortnight ago told the same story.

Mr. Morgan prayed that the work might be carried on rather by multiplication than by addition, and other friends commended the departing sisters to God, during the voyage, and in their far-off field of labour.

SOCIETY FOR DISTRIBUTING SCRIPTURE TRUTH.—We have commenced an issue of our "Scripture Truths" in India, translated into the native Hindu language. Besides our usual spheres of usefulness, we have other fresh fields among the fishing fleets of Labrador and Newfoundland, and in the gaols and hospitals of the Cape Settlement, South Africa. May the Lord vouchsafe a rich increase.—Yours very faithfully,

F. Woodhouse, Superintendent.

THE "MOODY and SANKEY" CHOIRS.

IT was a happy thought to arrange for a Service of Praise to be rendered by the united choirs who assisted at Messrs. Moody and Sankey's London meetings. It was equally fitting that the Mildmay Conference Hall, declared by Mr. Moody to represent the grandest institution in all London, should have been selected as the place. This spacious hall was filled on Thursday evening with an eager and expectant audience, whose presence in such large numbers not only showed that sacred "music hath charms," but was designed as a hearty expression of their grateful appreciation of the disinterested service rendered by those who sang for Jesus in the late Mission.

No less cordial a welcome to the choirs was given by Mr. J. E. Matheson, who assured them of the pleasure it gave the Mildmay friends to place the hall at their disposal. He announced that a collection would be made at the close, to help in the purchase of books for Mr. Moody's Northfield Libraries, and for the Young Men's Christian Association of Mr. Sankey's native town (Newcastle, Pa.). The idea that each member of the choirs should subscribe a shilling toward this fund originated, we believe, with a working man, who suggested it to Mr. Farley, who is well known at Mildmay. He mentioned it to others, and the suggestion was heartily approved.

The musical programme for the evening included selections from Sacred Songs and Solos, The Christian Choir, and The Gospel Male Chorus Book. It is not our purpose to criticise the arrangements as a musical performance; the meeting was designed to be "a service of praise," and as such it was an unmistakable success.

The addresses, too, were in perfect harmony with the spirit and intent of the meeting, Mr. Marcus Rainsford, jun., and Rev. Dr. Paterson being the selected speakers. Nothing could be more timely than the words of counsel and of caution that were submitted to the choirs by both these gentlemen. The danger of gliding into Christian service without having first become recipients of spiritual life was pointed out. The subject of "Praise" was fittingly chosen as an appropriate theme in each of the addresses, thus adding greatly to the value of the meeting. Mr. Rainsford showed how fascinating a thing is Christian joy, and how it wins worldly men to view religion with favour.

Dr. Paterson said: The revival of solo-singing seems to be in harmony with the practice of the early Church, and was common two hundred years ago. There is a danger, however, lest our love of music should overbear spiritual life and worship. We need as much to be in communion with God when we sing as when we pray or preach. I do not believe in unconverted persons singing the Gospel any more than preaching it. Not only conversion but consecration, whole-hearted and entire, is necessary for effective service in singing.

A statement by Mr. Godfrey showed that representatives of all the London choirs were present, and that the choir-work was likely to be the most permanent, visible sign of the late London Mission. They were holding together in unity, and intended to do so for evangelistic work. They had only one aim, viz., to sing the Gospel. They had never before met all together. So long as these musical friends continue to keep in view the excellent words of counsel and caution uttered by Dr. Paterson and Mr. Rainsford they will not fail to be used of God, as they have hitherto been, in alluring many to the Saviour by means of sacred song.

ZENANA MISSIONS.—A sale of work is to be held on December 2-4, at Kensington Town Hall, in aid of the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society. During the past four years the Society has sent out 25 lady missionaries. During the same period it has taken up the important stations of Allahabad, Fyzabad, and Ferozepore, and is now making arrangements to occupy Patna. Contributions of goods should be sent to the office, 2, Adelphi-terrace, W.C.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—We are daily obliged to refuse invitations to hold Gospel Missions for railway-men, in different parts of England, for lack of means to meet the few necessary expenses. One lady, being told of this, has recently sent £5. We should be thankful if others will follow her example. This sum would enable us to go to two places for a week's Mission at each. That these Missions are blessed of God we have abundant proof. A letter just received from Doncaster, where a three days' Mission was lately held, says: "The work has indeed been glorious; all the Christians seem to have been quickened, and large numbers have been led to Jesus, of whom we did not know during the meetings."

Will your readers kindly enable us to respond to the urgent calls in this direction that we constantly receive? £10 will pay for three different Missions of a week each.—Yours in the work,

GEORGE CLARKE,
186, Aldersgate-street, E.C. Gen. Secretary.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

MR. GEORGE BLAIKLOCK has conducted a nine days' Gospel Temperance Mission at Brecon. This week he is in Chesterfield.

GREENWICH.—A weekly meeting is held for adults in a poor part of this suburb. There is a Band of Hope, consisting of 400 members, and one connected with the Ragged-school of 120 members. The library for the latter requires strengthening, and Temperance literature is needed for the older people. Help may be sent to Rev. F. S Clark, St. Peter's Vicarage, The Circus, Greenwich.

DRUNKEN WIVES.—Several letters from the husbands of drunken wives have appeared in the Daily Chronicle. One writes: "I am a man, and can bear and endure it personally; but oh, my heart aches, and I mourn and grieve for my dear children; and all I can do is to plead to the great God of all to overrule the evil training of six days, and so bless the cheering and godly teaching which I try to give them on the seventh, that they may yet grow up sober, honest, God-fearing men and women."

MR. NOBLE IN BIRMINGHAM.—The series of meetings which commenced on Sunday week in the Town Hall were continued throughout the week with great success. On Tuesday evening Rev. C. G. Baskerville gave a short address. Mr. Noble followed with a stirring appeal to working men, using arguments based on his own experience and that of many others with whom he had come in contact throughout the country. His address created much enthusiasm, and nearly 300 pledges were taken at the close, making a total of more than 1000 since Saturday night. The Blue Ribbon choir of 300 voices led the singing at each meeting.

MODERATE DRINKING.—The National Temperance League recently invited medical men of known authority to lay before an Exeter Hall audience their views on Moderate Drinking. Dr Alfred Carpenter, Dr. B. W. Richardson, and Mr. J. J. Ritchie, M.R.C.S., did so at considerable length. Other medical men were on the platform. The Bishop of Exeter, who presided, was very emphatic on the duty of weighing the matter. Dr. A. Carpenter, in an able argument, contended for the entire disuse of alcoholic stimulants in ordinary life. He asked the meeting to stand by those professional men who had the courage to be honest on the subject, and who set their face against the so-called "moderate drinking" of the day. Mr. J. J. Ritchie gave a powerful testimony as a medical man who for over forty years had been identified with total abstinence. Dr. B. W. Richardson sketched the pros and cons. in reference to alcohol. Some people speak of it, he said, as a good friend, whom they receive into their house, welcome at their table, but who, nevertheless, sometimes turns round and knocks them down in return. The addresses were well considered, weighty, valuable. They were reported in full in The Temperance Record of last week.

THE MILLWALL JUVENILE MISSION is situated in the heart of a very populous and poor district, and is, we understand, doing a good work. The need is greatly felt for the help of one or more Christian women. We hope the lack may soon be supplied. The secretary of the Mission is Mr. H. White, 14, Pierhead, Millwall Docks, E.

THE AMERICAN PRESIDENTIAL STRUGGLE.

WE have received the following communications from experienced and much esteemed Christian friends in the United States, with respect to the present position of affairs political in that country. One writes:—"You good British Christians misapprehend the political position over here, to some degree at least. The word 'Republican' in America seems to have the reverse application of the same party word in Europe. The Republican party here is the reform party. It contains the elements of the anti-slavery power. It struggled many years for victory over the Slaveocracy, and victoriously, in God's providence, overthrew that power. Nine-tenths of the ministers and live Christians of the United States are in the Republican party. Rum and ruin characterise the Democratic party. It is a common saying that 'not all Democrats are bad men; but bad men seek the Democratic party.'

"British politicians must know this line of facts. They favour to some extent the Democratic party, because that party professes to favour the removal of the tariffs. Why didn't it do that when it was in power? It has no new principles to advocate in defence of such removal. Whoever trusts the Democratic party to look after his money interests, trusts a hungry dog with his dinner. The Democrats bait their hidden hook with 'Free Trade,' and catch foreign sympathy, before the emigrant reaches our shores. Sounding brass.

"Of course all political parties advocate some correct principles, and some in common with other parties. So does the Democratic party. But it is the party which holds the drinking men and whiskey interests in its ranks, and has a record which is as sure to kill it as are our common schools to educate our youth in morality and virtue."

Another friend says:—"The ex-slaveholders, the Mormons, and the whiskey and gambling ring of the country, are united and unanimous in endeavouring to elect a notoriously corrupt and licentious man to the presidency. The only hope of defeating them is to unite upon Mr. Blaine, the candidate of the party who supported Lincoln, Grant, and Garfield. He is a professed Christian man, a member of an Independent Church, and the head of a Christian household, and in private life respected as a pure and upright man. His public life has been as consistent and free from wrong as that of the better class of our public men, as much as Garfield for instance. The overwhelming majority of ministers and Christian men of the north have confidence in and heartily support him. There is every prospect that he will be elected, and elected by this support given him by the Christian people of the country."

ROTHERHITHE.—Mr. S. Trevor Francis, who has long been freely labouring in the Gospel at Rotherhithe, and who is surrounded by an earnest band of Christian workers, is making an effort to build a new chapel, the cost of which, including everything, will be £1000. Mr. Samuel Morley has subscribed £200, and other contributions raise the sum in hand or promised to nearly £500. The neighbourhood is very poor, and this has proved during nine years past to be a work which God has blessed to the salvation of many. We heartily commend this, and hope soon to hear that the needful accommodation has been obtained.

THE BATTERSBY MEMORIAL COFFEE ROOM.—The late Miss Eleanor Dundas Harford Battersby, of Lilleshall, Salop, knowing well the wants of the adjoining mining parish of Wrockwardine Wood, generously bequeathed the sum of £20 to aid in providing a coffee and reading-room. Wrockwardine Wood Parish has a working-class population of over 3000, and although there are nineteen public and beer-houses, it is yet without a public room in which workmen can meet together for social and mutual improvement. An appeal is made to those outside of our district who knew her work, for help to erect a Memorial Room. Such help will be gratefully received by Rev. Gilbert Todd, Wrockwardine Wood Rectory, Wellington, Salop.

YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

BRIGHTON.

A WEEK'S Mission in the Royal Pavilion has concluded here. Many have been greatly strengthened in their spiritual life, and several have been brought out of darkness into light. Mrs. Legg's earnest, simple declaration of the Gospel message went home to many a heart. The meetings of the new Institute, Victoria House, 51, Old Steine, were also crowded.

YOUNG WOMEN IN IRELAND.

A deeply interesting and successful Conference of the Y.W.C.A. was held in Dublin on Friday, October 17. It was largely attended by branch secretaries and friends from all parts of Ireland. At 10 a.m. the Conference opened by a few words from Mrs. W. Hatt Noble, President, and Mrs. E. W. Moore (London) took the subject of the anointing oil as a type of the Holy Spirit from Ps. xcii. 10, and spoke of its consecrating, strengthening, gladdening, fragrant properties, and of God's willingness to anoint with fresh power all who were willing to receive it. Much prayer was offered for blessing upon the Association and the proceedings of the day.

The President gave an address of welcome to the delegates, telling of the rapid growth and progress of the Association, the openings for work in connection with it—that there are 105 branches and nearly 5000 members in Ireland. The reports which followed from the various secretaries fully endorsed these encouragements, and hearts were filled with thankfulness as we heard of the work amongst young women in Queenstown, Cahir, Kingstown, Waterford, Limerick, Clontary, Portstewart, Dundalk, Drogheda, Tramore, Dunmore East, Sandford, Belfast (where there are five branches. Much interest was awakened by addresses from Mrs. R. Stewart, lately returned from Foochow, China, and Miss Simpson, from Rome, as they told of members of the Association brought from darkness into light. There are twenty-four native Bible-women now being trained in Foochow, and more than thirty have passed out to tell the glad tidings in their own land. Mrs. Elliott reported of the work and blessing of the Monthly Packet department, and the morning Conference broke up.

The afternoon meeting was still more crowded, and the interesting subjects were as follows:—"New Department for Evangelistic Work," "Finance," "Missionary Character of the Y.W.C.A.," Consecration of Time and Talent," and "Our Sisters who Need our Help, and How to Reach Them." The addresses were given by Mrs. Noble, Mrs. Menzies (Liverpool), Mrs. Moon (London), Miss Reynolds, Miss O'Hara, Mrs. M. Eustace, Mrs. Smyly, and Miss Ewart. Miss Marrable read a paper kindly contributed by Miss Alcock.

At the evening meeting Colonel Hatt Noble, R.E., presided. After prayer from Rev. Dr. Marrable, earnest and practical addresses were given by Mr. Hind Smith (London), Mrs. Menzies, and Rev. H. Dening. Many young women joined the Association afterwards.

OFF TO CHINA.—DEAR SIR,—I am expecting to sail from London in the P. and O. Co.'s steamer Nepaul, on November 5, for China. May I ask the prayers of the Lord's people that He may give a safe and prosperous voyage, and spiritual power and much blessing in the work while I am in China, and that the dear wife and children remaining in England may also receive special blessing from the Lord. There is an urgent call at this time for earnest, believing prayer on behalf of all Missions and Mission workers in China. I would take this opportunity of thanking many kind friends throughout the country who have so cheerfully promoted the writer's efforts to make known to the Lord's people at home the spiritual needs and claims of the great China Empire. May the Lord abundantly reward them for their efforts to help forward his work.—Yours faithfully,

J. MCCARTHY.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Sudbury.—At Friars-street Chapel a week's Mission has been conducted by the Rev. J. Calvert, of Beccles. The services deepened in interest and impressiveness throughout.

Mr Charles Inglis has been holding services at Brinscombe. Numbers have remained to the after-meetings, to be spoken with about their souls, and some have professed conversion.

Plymouth.—A report has reached us of Mr. Aitken's Mission here, referred to in our last. We regret we have not space for it. At the thanksgiving meeting nearly 600 joined in the observance of the Lord's Supper. Mr. Aitken is now holding a Mission at Newport (Mon.).

Mr. Henry Thorne conducted Mission services from October 5 to 19 at Birmingham. Of the many hundreds who came, a large proportion received a blessing. Many have given testimony to having found the Saviour. On the two Saturday nights services of song were held, which were attended by about 5000 people each. The Bible readings were increasingly attended and highly appreciated.

Brierley Hill.—I have taken a large malt-room in Brierley-hill, and have fitted it up with seats and platform, to be used for Gospel and Temperance meetings. I have taken the responsibility of the expenses, and would appeal to the Lord's stewards to help me in this work. Thos. Whitehouse, Minister.

Amblecote-bank, Brierley-hill.

Westcott.—The open-air services on Westcott-green on Sunday afternoons in connection with the Wescott Gospel and Open-air Mission has been much blessed, both in the faithful preaching of the Gospel by Mr. William Ansell, of Dorking, and the distribution of tracts. The meetings are now held on Sunday-afternoons in our cottage during the winter.

E. S. Millett.

Cow Cross Mission.—On Sunday evening, the 19th inst., Mr. G. Kirkham preached in Sadler's Wells Theatre, which Mr. Catlin has taken for the winter for Sunday-evening Gospel services. At the close some anxious souls were dealt with. On the following Sunday the Lord Mayor and Captain Seton Churchill were the preachers. Prior to the service in the theatre was a "march out" for an hour, led by the Milton Temperance brass band. Some of the streets passed through were narrow and crowded, but there was no disturbance, nor was a policeman once required during the entire route.

Mr. Josiah Spiers at Swansea.—At the close of the Summer Seaside Mission at Langland Bay, Mr. Spiers accepted an invitation to Swansea. Services were held for a fortnight, commencing Oct. 6, in the Presbyterian Church, St. Helen's-road. Night after night from 400 to 700 children gathered, listening with ever-deepening interest to the words of eternal life. At the after-meeting 100 often remained. Large gatherings of teachers and parents were held on two Sunday evenings, when all were vividly and earnestly shown the importance of leading the very little ones to the Lord Jesus.

Bucks Evangelistic Mission.—We have had great blessing again this summer in our tent work in this county. Several fresh places have been visited where we have no Mission halls. "The Gipsy Family" have been with us all the summer, going from place to place with the tent, singing and preaching the Gospel. Large numbers of people have thus been brought together, and great blessing has been the result. Many other preachers also took part. We are now beginning our winter work, and will be holding special services most nights all through the season. We have two good colporteurs and missionaries, working the whole neighbourhood and doing a splendid work among the people; they visit every house, giving away books and tracts, speaking to all about salvation, and selling Bibles and Christian books, visiting all the sick, &c. We should like to place many more in the field. We would ask prayer for the various efforts we are now making. A report of the Mission for the past year will be sent to any friends who wish for it.

Aylesbury. J. E. Taylor, Hon. Manager.

Mr. J. Grinnell has removed to 7, Denbigh-street, Bordesley-green, Small-heath, Birmingham. He is now helping Rev. C. Joseph in various pastoral duties in connection with Small-heath Baptist Church, but chiefly in visitation. Mr. Grinnell will be glad to receive tracts, books, or magazines, suitable for visitation.

Mr. Price Hughes at Norwich.—This earnest and gifted preacher has been taking a leading part in a united Mission in St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich. The Eastern Daily Press of Monday week, describing the first service conducted by Mr. Hughes, says:—"There is little doubt, from the circumstance of this, the first assembly, that the success of the Mission is assured. In the evening another very successful meeting was held. The Mission will last ten days, during which time meetings for the young and other gatherings of a special character will take place."

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

LYNN.

THE Association here has been reorganised. At the inaugural meeting Mr. Hind Smith gave an address and offered suggestions for further work.

NORTH MIDLAND CONFERENCE.

This Conference was held last week at Derby, and was well attended by the delegates from the associations of the district. The report of progress read by Mr. H. Thorne were of a most encouraging kind, and showed a large increase of membership during the year Papers on various aspects of the work were read.

EXETER HALL.

At a meeting held in the gymnasium on Friday week, under the presidency of Mr. E. J. Kennedy, a football club was formed, with the title of the Exeter Hall Football Club (Rugby Union rules). It is open to members and associates of the Y.M.C.A. Mr. Jas Hill was appointed hon. secretary.

DUNMURRY.

This town is one of four others in the Northern Irish District, where a branch has been recently formed. Mr. Hind Smith paid a visit to this place on Wednesday, 22nd instant, met the Committee, and addressed two meetings. We should be glad if every town of its size had such a real, living Association.

SHEFFIELD.

Excellent progress is being made in this revived branch of the Association. An interesting and largely attended social evening was lately held, when an inaugural address was delivered by Mr. Emerson Bainbridge, the president. Early in the year it is proposed to have a special Mission to young men in the town.

THE GRACECHURCH-STREET BRANCH.

By a wise and happy arrangement this branch has been enabled on several recent occasions to hold its monthly meetings in the homes of Christian friends in and around London. Not the least enjoyable was that held at the Conference Hall, Mildmay, on Saturday week, when nearly one hundred Christian young men met at the kind invitation of Mr. Sydney Bevan, and of Mr. James E. Mathieson, who presided.

In his opening remarks Mr. Mathieson spoke of his twenty-five years' experience of City life. It should be our prayer that by faithfulness to God England's prosperity might be restored and increased. Dr. Ziemann, in words which must have thrilled every heart, spoke of the joy of the new life lived through faith in the Son of God. Mr. A. A. Head bore testimony to the blessing received at these meetings, and how he was led to Christ at the first Mission held in London by Mr. Moody. Mr. Montague Beauchamp spoke earnestly against lukewarmness in the Master's service. After some remarks on consecration by Mr. H. Hutchinson, the Secretary (Mr. N. R. Hughman) announced the names of sixteen new members who would receive their cards at the close of the meeting. The concluding remarks by Mr. Stanley were very impressive. He urged his young brethren to wait on the Lord with the prayer, "What wilt thou have me to do?"

BERLIN.

The Association here is taking a deep interest in the spiritual well-being of the waiters in the city, whose occupation precludes them from attending the usual religious services. Meetings are held for them shortly after midnight, when Gospel addresses are delivered and other means employed to lead them to a knowledge of the Saviour. This is a movement which our English Associations might well imitate.

READING.

The annual report of this Association shows progress in all departments. Sixty-eight new members have joined during the year, and two have devoted their whole time to Christian work. Increased room became necessary, and has been secured. The evangelistic work has considerably developed, and has been greatly blessed. Many letters testify to salvation received in the various meetings, including cottage services to the number of 118.

LISBURN.

A meeting for Conference was held in this town on Tuesday, 21st instant, to discuss the formation of a branch of the Y.M.C.A., Mr. John Stephens in the chair. There was a very representative gathering, no fewer than seven ministers of the Gospel being present. Mr. Hind Smith spoke at length on the purpose and work of the Association, and was followed by Messrs. Anderson and McCann, of Belfast. A resolution was passed to form a Branch at the Association.

BALLYMENA.

An Association has recently been formed in this important Irish town, in which much blessing was experienced during the revival of 1859. On Monday, 20th instant, a meeting was held in the Protestant Hall, presided over by Mr. J. Simpson, when addresses were delivered by Messrs. Hind Smith, London, and R. McCann, Belfast. The members of this Association sustain no fewer than eighteen cottage meetings—a good example for our English Y.M.C.A.'s

CONVERSAZIONE AT THE MANSION HOUSE.

On Monday evening, October 20, the Lord Mayor kindly received a large number of friends of the London Young Men's Christian Association at the Mansion House. Owing to circumstances which could hardly have been foreseen by any one, the attendance was larger than the appointed accommodation. In the course of the proceedings Mr. Robert Buen, Secretary of the Aldersgate-street Branch, gave a succinct account of the organisation of the Association in its individual, national, and international relations. He cited some illustrations of its usefulness in the salvation of young men, and in training them for home and foreign service, and concluded with an appeal for hearty support.

The chief address of the evening was delivered by Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, who spoke on "Christian Manliness." He warmly commended the work of the Association to the sympathy of all the churches. Mr. Richard Searle, President of the Adelaide Association, South Australia, spoke very earnestly about the work of the Association in the Colonies. He was succeeded by Mr. Richard Cory, of Cardiff, who, with his brother, is a warm supporter of the work. Sir William Charley, the Common Serjeant, as representing the Church of England Young Men's Society, uttered words of hearty sympathy with the sister society; after which Mr. George Williams spoke with his characteristic enthusiasm.

OBITUARY.

COLONEL BROCKMAN.

AN aged disciple, a good soldier of Jesus Christ, Lieut.-Colonel H. J. Brockman, was called home on Monday, October 20, after a pilgrimage of 76 years. He was buried at Brompton, on Friday last. A short service, conducted by his friend and pastor, Mr. Frank White, was held in the Talbot Tabernacle, where our honoured friend had so long worshipped. Col. Brockman must have been known to many of our readers as an unflinching witness to the faith of the Gospel for more than a half century. Of a gentle and affectionate spirit, he was nevertheless bold and uncompromising in his defence of Protestant doctrine and practice.

Letters to the Editor.

NAPOLEON ROUSSEL'S TRACTS.

Dear Sir,—In reply to the letter of "T." in a recent issue, I beg to say that I believe the late Napoleon Roussel's tracts can still be had at his publisher's, Grassart, 2, Rue de la Paix, Paris. I was looking over some of those tracts, now in my possession, a few days ago, and thinking how suited they were to the French tone of thought. If your correspondent has any wish to promote their circulation, I shall be most happy to assist in the work.—Faithfully yours, Unit.

[If the friend who made the inquiry will communicate with us, we shall forward the address of the writer of the above.]

THE SALVATION ARMY IN FRANCE.

Dear Sir,—As a disciple of the Saviour, I deeply regret to find in a recent number of your excellent paper a letter misrepresenting the work of the Salvation Army in France. Allow me to give faithfully, in the presence of God, my experience as to the Army. I have been thoroughly acquainted with it ever since it came to France, and can bear testimony to the immense spiritual good which our friends have done in bringing hundreds of sinners to Christ, and hundreds of Christians to a closer fellowship with Him. I may state, without the least hesitation, that almost every true revival which has occurred within the past few years in France was produced directly or indirectly by the instrumentality of the Salvation Army. Dear M. Sainton, whom God has used for the salvation of many souls in several of our Protestant churches, had been immediately before that an officer of the Salvation Army. May I humbly state that in the course of a ministry of twenty-seven years, I never was enabled by the Lord to bring so many souls to Him as since I attended an all-night prayer-meeting in the Clapton Congress Hall. I may also mention that my own son, a divinity student, went out quite transformed from a similar meeting in Geneva. Shortly after, in those meetings at home, he brought to Christ over thirty souls, who have persevered ever since. A schoolmaster, simply by attending a meeting of the Army at Valence (Drôme), returned to his mountains so filled with the Holy Spirit that he has been there a powerful instrument in the hands of God. A Christian, who like many others had fallen asleep, similarly awakened, commenced holding meetings which have aroused all his village. A grocer, who had always kept his shop open on the Lord's day, shut it ever since he met the Salvation Army, and is greatly blessed in his neighbourhood.

I could fill several numbers of The Christian with such blessed facts. Travelling constantly throughout France to work for Christ, in accord with Christians of all denominations, I am able to testify to the great work accomplished by that handful of faithful and courageous disciples of Christ who are indeed a Salvation Army. These last days, in the Cevennes (Gard) I visited some villages where I met several souls recently awakened by the same agency. They told me of several conversions, namely, those of two shoemakers who formerly were swearers and blasphemers, never attending any place of worship, and who are now faithful soldiers of the Cross.

I can also testify of many souls brought to the Lord by the reading of the paper En Avant, whose weekly circulation is now 11,000. My firm belief is that the Salvation Army is going to spread the glad tidings of great joy everywhere in France.

I have no time to criticise what has been called their eccentricities, their enthusiasm, their optimist views. I find it far more blessed to me and to others, to pray for them, to encourage them, to love them, to help them in their noble enterprise. I know their work in Paris is specially hard, being accomplished in the worst part of the city, with too little help from the Christians; but I know of many converted there who have returned to the provinces and remained faithful to Christ. Their Paris Training Home has already produced blessed fruits. Two officers, well known to me, have just come out in the field, and brought to Jesus a large number of sinners in the North-east of France.

Though two lieutenants felt bound personally to go to Marseilles during the cholera epidemic, the head-quarters did not intend to establish a corps there. The earnest desire of the two young officers had been to help in the hospitals, but they were not allowed to come in. The town of Crest (Drome) has been very favourably impressed by the fact of two officers saving a choleric from death by using friction for hours and hours, asking God to bring him to life again, for his glory. A sister of mine received recently letters from Marseilles Christians. In one I read this: "The stay of our Salvation friends has been blessed to us. All those who were able to meet them do now love them, and earnestly desire to see a station open in our city."

May all the true disciples of Christ love each other more than ever, and go at once to the help of the Lord against the mighty.—I am very truly, yours in Him, Elie Vernier, Anduze, Gard, France. Itinerating Pastor.

THE MODERN BETHESDA.

WHATEVER may be said for or against the "faith-healing" doctrine, no one can deny that it is making progress. It may seem strange and mysterious to some that such a precious boon to humanity should have lain dormant and undiscovered all these centuries, like the diamond in Golconda's mines. Anyhow, it is rapidly developing now, as all those who last Thursday visited No. 10, Drayton Park, Highbury, better known as "Bethshan," must have confessed. It was on that day that a new place of meeting was formally opened, by an afternoon and an evening assembly. This new hall has been built in the garden at the rear of the house, the ground being excavated somewhat in order to conserve the daylight for the house and its neighbours. The hall is a cosy structure, with gallery and sloping platform.

Our reporter was not present at the afternoon meeting, but he gathered from various sources that it was a deeply interesting one, and that some remarkable testimonies were given of personal healing, through simple faith in God. This was certainly true of the evening assembly, over which Rev. W. E. Boardman presided. After devotional exercises, Mrs. Michael Baxter, who, as many of our readers know, is the chief prophetess of the movement, read Mark xvi. 15—18, wherein it is recorded that the risen Christ commanded his disciples to preach the Gospel to every creature, and told them of certain signs which should follow them that believe We may remark, parenthetically, that these verses, with some of those preceding, according to modern Biblical critics (see Revised Version N. T.) do not appear in the earliest Greek MSS., and have been interpolated in the apostolic autographs. If that be so, Mrs. Baxter's exposition was like a house with no foundation; this, however, is only "by the way." Having shown that it is the same Divine power that raised up Jesus from the dead which now works in them that believe, she referred to the "signs" mentioned in the passage. The first is, "In my name shall they cast out devils." This sign she passed by with a mere repetition of it: why, we could not tell. Probably, because no Christian disputes that this is being done every day—that the demons of passion, hatred, avarice, cruelty, uncleanness, and so forth, are continually being exorcised by the mighty power of God, through the agency of them that believe. "They shall speak with new tongues." "People ask," said the speaker, "if we believe in healing, why we do not believe in the gift of tongues. Thank God, I do. I believe we shall have missionaries speaking with new tongues—in a year's time, I was going to say. I see signs of it." At a later stage of the meeting Mrs. Baxter told how some time since on the Continent the Lord enabled herself to preach the Gospel in the German language, though she had only acquired a few words and phrases of it. Trusting to God, she uttered the sounds that came to her, without knowing anything of their meaning, and was able to declare the message of the Gospel, not only in correct German, but in good grammar. This was the substance of her truly remarkable narrative. "They shall take up serpents." Many are afraid of these venomous creatures, but the Lord is able to deliver from them. There have been glorious instances of this in missionary journals, and there shall be more. Paul did it, and we have the same power as he had. "If they drink any deadly thing it shall nowise hurt them." Mrs. Baxter said, with respect to this sign, that until Miss Sisson mentioned it in the afternoon meeting, her eyes had been blinded to it. Yet she knew a dear friend of her own who once drank poison by mistake, and received no harm from it. Missionaries would drink in the deadly fever atmosphere of heathen lands, and it should not hurt them. "They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." We see a little of this. As we are linked by faith to God's almightiness, we shall be above, not beneath, the things which would overcome and crush us. When we fully realise this, then the era of pentecostal power will begin, and will sweep thousands of heathen into the fold.

Next to speak was Dr. McKilliam, who was introduced by Rev. W. E. Boardman as "one who loves to pray his patients well." He said the conviction had been growing upon him for some years that we have come to a very special crisis in the history of the Church. As we see more and more that we are to be witnesses for God, He is showing us more and more the marvellous resources we have in Him. If we will but obey his command to go forth with the Gospel to every creature, He will so increase our faith as to make us grasp these resources. Then we shall see marvellous things which at present we have not the slightest idea of. Even this wonderful doctrine of healing by faith is only touching the very hem of Christ's garment. Incidentally Dr. McKilliam remarked that he was sure even Mr. Boardman, though seventy-four years of age, would be ready at God's call to go to China, or Africa, or India. "With all my heart!" exclaimed Mr. Boardman.

In the course of an energetic address, Captain Denis, of Barnet, propounded the somewhat remarkable doctrine that when any one has prayed to God for healing, he must believe that he is healed, whatever may be the evidence of all his senses to the contrary. Christ was the Lamb slain before the foundation of the world, though He was not manifested as the Redeemer for centuries after that. So the sick and suppliant believer must not doubt that he is healed, though for some cause he may have to wait indefinitely for its manifestation.

After a few words from Mrs. Boardman about the necessity of honouring the Holy Spirit, Mr. Boardman said he saw around him in the room instances of the power of Christ in doing the very things contained in every one of those Pentecostal gifts—one dispossessed of a devil and brought out of an asylum, another cured of cancer, another of lameness, and so on. He saw there in its cradle one of the greatest works that God has ever done in the world. Then, in response to his request, testimonies were given. Miss Bailey, of the Liverpool "Bethshan," told how the Lord had wondrously cured her of consumption and paralysis, and also of wonderful cures wrought upon other persons in Liverpool—one who was lame and now walks, another who was deaf and dumb and now hears and speaks. Mrs. Fooks spoke of somewhat similar things that had happened at Worthing. Last of all, and most striking of all, was the witness of Miss Hopwood, who detailed with much circumstantiality how she had been healed of lung disease, of a terrible spinal infirmity, and how, later on, her power of sight had been marvellously increased, all in response to simple trust in the power of God.

SOLDIERS AND SEAMEN IN GOSPORT.—The reopening of the Soldiers' Home, reading and coffee rooms, connected with the Gosport Seamen's Mission, took place on October 23. A goodly number of military men, with other friends, partook of tea, after which Colonel Urmston and other friends addressed the meeting. It was, indeed, a very happy occasion. The Home has been almost entirely rebuilt for the use of the military of the garrison in the town and forts surrounding. The Gospel ketch Annie is now at Trouville, in France. We have news that much blessing has been the result of her visit. The schooner Mystery is being much used for Gospel work in the various ports at home. A very blessed two weeks' Mission has just closed at Fareham. Seamen's book-bags 8 in. by 7 in., will be gratefully received.
Bellevue-place, Stoke, Gosport. Henry Cook.

WHEN THE GLOOM IS FALLING.

WHEN the clouds of trouble gather
O'er the clear and sunny sky,
When the golden light is darkened,
When no human help is nigh:
Saviour, when the gloom is falling,
Hear my cry.

When depressions cold and dreary
Fill my heart with needless fear,
Oh forgive my foolish terror,
Let me still thy whisper hear:
Saviour, when the gloom is falling,
Be Thou near.

When temptation's awful shadow
Falls upon my trembling soul,
Thou, who bidst Egyptian midnight
Back to its deep caverns roll,
Show the mighty Prince of Darkness
Thy control.

When the evening shades are closing,
Heralds of approaching night;
When the sun of life is setting,
Let the eventide be bright:
Saviour, when the gloom is falling,
Give me light.

Thou, who in the densest darkness,
Hanging on the cursèd tree,
With a word didst rend the heavens,
Let me thy bright glory see:
Saviour, when the gloom is falling,
Come for me.

THE MEDICAL AID SOCIETY.—This Society is designed to provide necessitous gentlewomen with medical and surgical aid, and medicines, gratuitously, during illness. Its headquarters are at No. 2, East India-avenue, Leadenhall-street. The surgeon in ordinary, Mr. Ford, has during the past year consented to forego a portion of his salary. For the same reason—the lack of funds—Captain Hamilton, the secretary, has consented to act in an honorary capacity. While the sufferings of the lower classes force themselves upon the public notice at every turn, the trials of poor gentlewomen are borne in silence and obscurity until they are dragged to light, when they are often found to have been ten times more terrible than those of the poorer classes. The society has had 500 patients since its foundation.

A DISGUSTED SMOKER.—A well-known revenue agent, late of Chicago, where millions of cigarettes are manufactured, was spoken to on the subject of cigarettes. "I used to be a confirmed cigarette smoker, but now you could not induce me to touch one of them," he said. "Why, how's that?" "Well, it's because I went into a large manufacturing place in Chicago, and what I saw there sickened me of the imitation smokers. How are they made, and of what? Of all that is vile, and injurious, and mean. Cigar butts, picked up from the streets, barks of cer ain kinds, tobacco stems and refuse, are heaped together in one filthy pile, and then saturated with opium, which gives the cigarette that soothing effect desirable to all smokers. I tell you, sir, if all cigarette smokers could see as I have seen, how one of the greatest firms in Chicago manufacture cigarettes, the trade in the same would soon fall off or cease entirely."

SAVE THE LADS.

Dear Friends,

We are entering upon our Winter's Work with our London Branches quite full. We have 240 Boys depending upon us (under God) for everything they need in life. We had not a vacant bed yesterday when we admitted several boys from Manchester, Brighton, Lincoln, and San Francisco, &c., simply because if we turned them from our doors, they would have had no shelter at all, and perhaps be driven into crime by sheer want. We packed them in here and there rather than they should shiver and starve upon the streets.

At our Ramsgate Branch we have room for 60 Beds, and I propose to draft thither some of our smaller boys from Greenwich to make room for new cases, as funds received will allow me to gather them in. Several kind friends, who have for many years sympathised and co-operated with me in these efforts, have nobly strengthened my hands since my return from Canada, and I must not increase my liabilities without first enlisting fresh support.

Will you kindly consider the following list and subjoined notices, and see if you can, in some of the ways indicated, help us in rescuing this Winter from London streets and dens those who are ready to perish?

2/6 will give 10 Boys Dinner.
5/ will give 30 Boys Breakfast.
10/ will buy a New Iron Bedstead.
£1 will buy a Suit of Clothes, Shirts, &c.
£2 will give all the Boys Breakfast.
£5 will give a homeless lad shelter and training for the Winter.
£10 will cover the cost of Outfitting and Emigrating a Boy to Canada.
£20 An Old Friend (W.C.) offers £20, in the hope 24 others will do likewise.

I am, Dear Friends,

Yours faithfully,

J. W. C. Fegan

"MANNA CAKE."

Children take it readily; they do not suspect its properties; they like its sweet, strong flavour. Truly termed by an Agent, "The Children's Friend." Manna Cake is the mildest and yet the most certain in action of all aperients; it does not gripe, and leaves no after constipation. A singularly mild, pleasant, and efficacious substitute for Castor Oil.

From W. H. Hayward, Chemist, Trowbridge:—"A Physician in the West of England says he gave Calomel and Jalap in repeated doses without effect, but a Manna Cake acted almost immediately."

Ask for Manna Cake, price 1½d. per cake, or 1s. 3d. per doz. of any chemist or medicine vendor. Wholesale of Barclay's; Edwards; Hovenden's; Newbery's; May Roberts; Sanger & Sons; Sutton & Co.; &c., &c.

WOMAN'S MISSION TO WOMEN.

LONDON MISSION, 1884-5.

The Committee of the Female Mission to the Fallen are considerably increasing the accommodation at their Mission Houses, in view of the extra efforts that will be put forth to reclaim our Fallen Sisters during the Church Missions to be held during November and February in the Metropolis.

The Committee appeal for liberal Christian sympathy and support. About 900 cases are aided annually, at an expenditure of £4000. The annual subscriptions amount to only £1436.

Full particulars of the work are contained in the Annual Report, which will be forwarded on application to Arthur J. S. Maddison, Secretary, 32, Charing-cross, S.W.

"Moon's" Society for Embossing the Scriptures and other Books for the Blind.

Dr. Moon's simplified type, suitable for all ages and capacities of the blind, is of universal application. It has been adapted by him to 250 languages and dialects. More than 150,000 volumes of the Word of God, and other books, have been supplied to the blind of numerous countries.

Subscriptions and donations are urgently needed to carry on this daily increasing work, and will be gratefully received by Dr. W. Moon, 104, Queen's-road, Brighton (Acting Trustee); also by the Editors of The Christian.

HOMES OF HOPE, Nos. 4, 5 & 6, Regent-square, Gray's-inn-road, London, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

The applications are most distressing, and the funds are quite exhausted.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

"DISEASED RIGHT LUNG."—CASE of Mrs. GRIFFITHS, Kinsham, near Tewkesbury.

The first communication from this patient was by letter dated December 10, 1883. The symptoms were: "Severe pains in the right lung, great difficulty of breathing, hacking cough, palpitation, weakness and loss of flesh, utterly unable to attend to any household duties. Doctor reported 'upper half of righ. lung diseased.'" Medicine and advice were sent, and the patient continued under my treatment till May.

In three weeks from commencement the patient wrote: "I am thankful I am much better; pains and breathing easier (I use your Liniment well); the heart is quieter, and the cough relieved."

A slight relapse took place in January, through a cold taken in the severe weather: but there was soon amendment again. In April she wrote: "Better in every way. I feel your medicine has saved my life, by God's will."

The last communication was in July, when Mrs. Griffiths writes: "I shall require no more medicine; nothing the matter with my chest now, except occasional indigestion. I am better than I have been for years. I can do my household duties with pleasure and can walk for miles. I have had my chest examined. The doctor says, 'The lung is quite healed, and nothing the matter with it now.' There is not a doubt that your treatment has saved my life. Use this as you please."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

£500 URGENTLY NEEDED.

Who will help us, among the Readers of "The Christian," to clear off this Debt of £500, that we may carry on our Daily Rescue Work without let or hindrance?

HOW TO STUDY THE BIBLE.

Some Thoughts and Suggestions on Profitable Bible Reading.

Price 1d.; 7s. 6d. per 100.

"I don't think there is a book in the world we neglect so much as the Bible. Merely reading the Bible is no use at all without we study it thoroughly, and hunt it through as it were for some great truth. Read the Bible, my friends, as if you were seeking for something of value. It is a good deal better to take a single chapter and spend a month on it, than to read the Bible at random for a month."

SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT
NERVOUS AFFECTIONS.

We have been advocating the claims of Magnetic methods of healing for years, with a deepening conviction that it would be outside the argument altogether to specify any class of ailments for which it is especially adapted, because, as Dr. Sharp truly says, "a certain amount of these imponderable influences are necessary to the maintenance of life itself," and, therefore, it would be equal folly to suppose that we could ignore the value of pure air or sunlight, and be healthy, as to suppose that we could live apart from the influence of this universal law.

We naturally draw the conclusion that there is scarcely any known ailment which a due supply of Magnetic force could not materially relieve, because no existing form of Electricity could more readily ally itself with the vital force of the sufferer at any period of his life. For as Magnetism is a universal law, its effects must be unlimited, and it becomes our duty to inquire how far we are obeying this law to our advantage. To suppose we can ignore a natural law with impunity is folly, and without asserting that Magnetism will meet every emergency, we conclude that no other influence can come to our aid with such energising and life-inspiring qualities, and that it approaches more nearly to the life force, ever acting upon the nerves than any other known influence. Who, therefore, can fix the range of its action, or set bounds to its power for good?

The Rev. H. T. Brumwell, Middlewich, Cheshire, wrote to us in the spring of 1883 on behalf of a minister's daughter of middle age—sister to one of the most prominent ministers of the day—who suffered severely from epileptic seizures. Briefly, her case stood thus: In July, 1881, an attack of paralysis rendered the right side almost entirely useless; epilepsy also resulting, still further set at nought the best medical efforts to give the sufferer relief. Attacks occurred on an average every fortnight, leaving the patient quite prostrate.

Recognising the great uncertainty of the case, our advice was sought as a last resource, and upon receiving a favourable opinion, the treatment was at once adopted.

Just a year after this Mr. Brumwell writes:—

"The case is remarkable. For two years the patient had been subject to epileptic fits, occurring, more or less, every fortnight, resulting, it was supposed, from an attack of paralysis, which left one side comparatively useless. After adopting your treatment, which has been continued ever since, the fits ceased entirely after a short time, and there has been no return of them. She has not yet recovered the use of her arm, but her friends of late have seen her unconsciously raise it, and are full of hope that its power may eventually be restored.

Letters commendatory of Mr. Garratt's treatment by Magneto-Electricity have been received from hundreds of persons in all classes of society. A private list of 950 names as referees can be had on application. Consultation free, personally, or by letter. B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

CALL TO A SLUMBERING CHURCH.

By Dr. MURRAY MITCHELL.

[The following is the conclusion of the address ven by Dr. Mitchell at the recent Copenhagen nference; in a previous issue we gave an outline the first portion of it.]

VE have been taking a brief review of the position of some of the greatest Mission lds of the world. In the light of all that s been said, how loud is the call for an mense enlargement of missionary effort! Surely the goodness of God in so graciously knowledging our feeble efforts ought to en-ge our hearts with a holy gratitude and ve. He might have withdrawn Himself to e uttermost part of heaven, and there vered Himself with a cloud that our prayer ould not pass through, until the Church gan to put forth an effort corresponding to e solemnity of her position and the magni-le of her resources. But He most lovingly wards even our initial efforts; surely it in order that henceforth we may be ani-ted with fresh zeal, and be sweetly im-lled to run the way of his commandments. that holy warfare, then, in which we are riliaries of heaven, let our spirits be alted to the sublimity of the occasion, and "the people who know their God be ong and do exploits" in his cause!

How wonderfully is the Lord opening up way for Mission work! Japan, Corea, ina, the women of India, Africa: each of se names reminds us of changes on which e might dilate for hours. Doors closed, barred, from the beginning; they are w flying open on every hand. Are we nply to look on, and coldly chronicle the nge? No; we hear the same words ad-ssed to us as were spoken to the people of d of old, "Be strong, all ye people of the d, and work; for I am with you, saith the rd of Hosts." Yes, God is working, and calls for fellow-workers.

I fear we often speak of the extension of ssion work, and the number of our con-rts, until a feeling of self-complacency als in. But, alas! alas! look at what is done, not attempted, not thought of! en if there were nothing critical in the sent condition of the world, the duty of king a vast and speedy enlargement of ssionary zeal is imperative and pressing. India we always felt there was a great nger of acquiring a dreadful familiarity h idolatry, so that the horror which illed the whole frame when we first saw a ther-man bow down to a red-painted stone tained a gradual abatement, until it faded ost into indifference. Against this danger n the holiest men in India had to strive pray with tears. Ah! is there not the e danger to the whole Church? She has ome accustomed to the thought that there hundreds of millions of idolaters. She epts it as a fact; it seems the natural, the mal state of things; and the keen edge of horror which it ought to awaken is all worn off. The soul of the Church does not feel it to be a crushing load of grief, that Jehovah is mocked, and that countless souls are perishing—and this, humanly speaking, through her neglect.

A thousand millions of the human race are still ignorant of the work of Christ! Let us pause for a moment and try to realise the fearful truth. How does it affect us? The Shepherd who had ninety and nine sheep secure within the fold, went sorrowfully in quest of the straying one: how would his heart have been wrung if more than seventy of the flock had been wandering in the paths of the destroyer!

"Give me thy heart, O Christ, thy love untold,
That I like Thee may pity, like Thee preach!"

And the great sorrow is that not only the professing Church, but even converted men and women in all our congregations, pray so little and give so little, and care so little, for the propagation of the Gospel in heathen lands. The duty of helping Missions is probably admitted; but it is done coldly—the heart responds not to the appeal. It is startling to remember what a depth of darkness may rest on the mind even of a true Christian, in reference to the evangelisation of the world. We all remember the answer of Dr. Ryland to Carey, when he pleaded on behalf of Missions—"Young man, God will convert the heathen in his own time; it is not for you or me to do it." Yet that good man read his Bible and thought he understood and obeyed it. Read the commentary even of John Calvin on the Great Commission given in the end of St. Matthew's Gospel, and see how deplorably even his mind failed to penetrate to the meaning, or feel the inspiration of the glorious words: "Go into all the world; preach the Gospel to every creature;" and, "Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world." And the great Luther was on this point as ill-instructed as the great Calvin. "Put not your trust in princes."

But how deplorable are the consequences of this apathy, not only to the perishing heathen, but to the Church herself! Can an individual live in daily disregard of any one commandment of God and not reap the bitter fruit of disobedience? Surely no. Can the collective Church do so? Surely no. Deadness, divisions, disputes among Christians;—are not these the natural consequences? Is not the Holy Spirit grieved? and, though we cannot still the beatings of Christ's loving heart, do we not arrest the movements even of his wonder-working arm?

Would it not be the noblest apologetic—the most cogent of arguments in defence of the Gospel, in these days of much scepticism, if the Church were to march forth, as, in the might of her Living Head, she easily might do, for the evangelisation of the world? Et vera incessu patuit dea, says the Roman poet; "the true divinity stood revealed by her majestic walk." I lately saw in London a placard headed, "The Dying Creed." I thought I knew of a good many dying creeds in heathendom, and wondered which of them this might be. As I read on I saw that the dying creed was affirmed to be Christianity. Even so, a well known sceptical writer in England has been saying of late that religion itself is dead, and that we have only its ghost still lingering among us. Some men have a peculiar faculty for seeing ghosts. But let us show that if religion can in any sense be called a ghost, it is only because we may apply to it the words used in reference to the spirit of Hamlet's father:—

"We do it wrong, being so majestical
To offer it the show of violence,
For it is like the air, invulnerable,
And your vain blows malicious mockery."

Let, then, the Church of Christ go forth, strong in immortal youth, strong in the strength of her risen Lord; let her go forth on her high mission of mercy to the world; let her fixed aim be to obey the command of Jesus, "Preach the Gospel to every creature;" and then those signal triumphs which have been already granted in the Sandwich Islands, the Society Islands, the Feejee Islands, in Madagascar, at Ongole, in South India and elsewhere, will be repeated all over the world. And then if the gainsayer be not utterly shamed into silence, his paltry cavils will be drowned amid the shout of regenerated and rejoicing millions, when as Cowper says—

"One song employs all nations and all cry,
'Worthy the Lamb, for He was slain for us,'
Till nation after nation caught the strain,
Earth rolls the rapturous hosanna round."

The grand necessity, then, is that the slumbering mind of the Church be aroused to a far higher state both of thought and emotion in reference to the evangelisation of the heathen. Conversion is the work of God; but that of evangelisation is ours, even that of evangelising "every creature." Can this be done? and how can it be done? I earnestly wish this great Evangelical Alliance Conference had time fully to consider that practical question, for no matter that comes before it is of greater or of equal importance. The heathen perish, and the whole Church languishes, because we do not lay it to heart. For the sake of God and Christ; for the sake of heathendom; for the sake of Christendom;—let us solemnly ponder our duy and the means of fully performing it.

All that I have now said would hold good, even if the times were not critical. But the times are critical. The whole Mohammedan world—nearly 180 millions of men—is in a ferment, and a revival of the fiery fanaticism of the victorious Arabs of the seventh century seems far from improbable. We must meet it by the proclamation of a new and true crusade. Of Japan and China and India we have already spoken. Africa is shaken to her centre. No period in history will bear a comparison with the present in respect of affecting appeals to our Christian sympathies and magnificent openings for Christian work. Has the Church a mind to discern—has she a heart to feel the morally sublime? For the state of the world is, beyond expression, wonderful; beyond example, significant and arousing:—

"In such a cause 'tis impious to be calm; Passion is reason—transport temper here."

Of old, when the Lord was shaking the heavens and the earth and all nations, it was for "the removal of the things that were shaken," that "the things that could not be shaken might remain," and in preparation for the advent of the Son of God. It is surely, then, a most solemn, yet most animating thought, that we are now in the midst of convulsions, overturnings grander even than those which ushered in the first coming of the Lord Jesus. The Lord is shaking all nations now, to an extent that seems without a parallel in history, in order that the fleeting and the false may be shaken to pieces, and that the true and the eternal may have room to grow; yea, are we not justified in cherishing the blessed hope that this world-wide commotion is being overruled now—even as it was of old—in order that "the Desire of all nations" may come, and that the Lord of Hosts may "fill his house with glory"?

"The Christian" Pulpit.

CHRIST AND MIRACLES.*

By Rev. J. B. FIGGIS, Brighton.

"His name shall be called Wonderful."
Is. ix. 6.

A NAME is often a synonyom for the nature of any object, or of any being. It may be so with some at least of the names of Jesus Christ. Should it prove to be so, they will amply repay examination. We might in this way meditate on the "Bright and Morning Star," the "Faithful Witness," or "The Christ" itself. But let us look at five of these names, gathered for us in one garland, and make the basis of our thoughts that marvellous burst of eloquence in which the master spirit among the master minds of Israel—the Jewish prophets—cast his thoughts of the King, the Christ, who was to come.

I have called this the utterance of a master spirit, the spirit of the great Isaiah; but surely, however great he may be, a greater than Isaiah is here. Surely it must have been a greater than man who could describe the Lord Jesus with such accuracy of delineation that the picture is true to the very life; moreover, who could do this hundreds of years before He came. I ask you at the outset to ponder this fact. We know for a certainty that these words were written before Christ's coming, many centuries before, for people who rejected Him are the keepers of the records. We know with equal certainty that their description tallies to the least letter, with the description of the Son of God as He really was when He came—for we have both in our hands and can compare the two. And we know, or we might know, a third thing which ought to be known, I think—that the Jews themselves supposed that these words were intended for the Messiah, till they saw that Jesus of Nazareth so exactly answered to them that they set about searching for some other way to explain them. And a most clumsy way it was;—to apply all the expressions but the last to God in heaven, while this last was reserved for some deliverer on earth. Hezekiah was the favourite with them, and so he has been with many so-called Christian expositors. But Hezekiah does not answer the description. Much the same may be said of any other person proposed to be substituted for the Lord Jesus Christ. But it is no wonder such expositors are at fault, for the fact is, the words contain a paradox of majesty and lowliness such as was found but once in history, that once being "when Jesus was here among men."

THE WORKER.

Prophecy,—God's finger-mark on the leaves of the book—prepares us for miracles—God's footprints on the life of the world. But before we think of these it is most important that we should think of Him who wrought them; of Him of whom it was said, "His name shall be called Wonderful."

For was He not worthy of the name? Was not his Teaching wonderful? Whether you think of his pathos or of his piety; of the God He manifested, or of the men with whom He so kindly dealt. You have but to recall his first visit to the astonished temple magnates to learn it; his first visit to Nazareth, where He was brought up; his first sermon, or his first parable. Have you heard Him preach? Have you heard Him pray? But it is when He does neither, does nothing formal, but simply stands and talks, that He seems to me most to be admired. It is little to say there was no carpenter ever like Him. There was no man, I care not from what class you take him, no scholar, philosopher, or sage, who ever taught like Jesus Christ.

Was not his Character wonderful? I know not whether most to wonder at its sweetness or its strength, at the goodness of it or the beauty of it, each and all are so truly admirable. But perhaps the greatest wonder of all is, that, being so good, his goodness was yet so unlike all other goodness of all other men. His saintliness took a different character from all other saintliness. Jesus was never converted. Jesus was never penitent, never gave sign that he had anything to repent of. This is an anomaly, an enigma, a moral marvel.

Was not his Life wonderful? Wonderful in its purpose, and no less wonderful in its plan, and perhaps most wonderful of all in the self-suppression which kept that purpose secret, and that plan in abeyance, for the greater part of it? No, not most wonderful of all—for it was most wonderful in this, —its success; most wonderful, I say, in its wonderful success. For a man to dare to be a Reformer, still more a Legislator, most of all a Saviour, was, to say the least of it, a most daring thing. But this the Man of Nazareth has dared without adventitious aid; and He has succeeded in it. Not, I grant you, to the extent one could wish; not so as to rescue all men, and to cover the earth with a mantle white and new as the winter's snow; but yet He has exercised over the human mind an influence to which that of Buddha is infinitesmially small and that of Mahomet is incomparably weak, and which is as beneficent and benignant as heart can wish or mind can think.

THE WORKS.

After this rapid glance at the Worker, we may proceed to look at the works; we should hardly be able satisfactorily to look at them otherwise.

Some seem to deal with miracles in this way: suppose anybody were to come in any day, and tell you he had seen a lame man walk, and this without any surgical process; would you believe him? Or one who had been dead appear alive; would you believe him? They expect the answer, "No;" and further mean to convey that such cases would be like the miracles of Christ. My friends, hardly anything could be more unlike. The question is not whether these things could have been done at any time, by anybody; but whether they could have been done at such a time and by such a Person as the inauguration of a new religion by its founder. The founding of Christianity was such a time, and the Lord Jesus Christ was that very Person. That every trivial tale, told of or by any ordinary person, is to be greedily accepted, is not our allegation at all. Our allegation is this, that such a Person as Jesus Christ has in other ways shown Himself to be, appearing at such a crisis of human history, and for such a purpose in human life, was not so unlikely to be a worker of miracles as that we should doubt that miracles were wrought in Him, and by Him, if we have good evidence substantiating the assertion that they were so wrought.

There is, I grant, an antecedent improbability against the miraculous. It is not to be expected that every day will witness miracles, or even every age. That nature will be uniform is what experience teaches us to expect. But there is nothing violently improbable in an occasional suspension of some laws of nature in obedience to higher laws, the laws of grace. If God be a Creator, Father, Saviour, it is not unlikely that He will deign to communicate with his creatures, his children; and if so, neither is it unlikely that He will give some sign that the communication is from Him. Now a miracle is just such a sign. The evidence of an extraordinary communication,—and a revelation from God surely is that—cannot be an ordinary event; e.g., the idea of the Atonement might be communicated to some mind but this would be no proof that it was true. If Jesus came, declaring Himself the Son and Lamb of God, without miracles, the natural conclusion would be that his was a disordered mind.*

Again, if Jesus be the Friend and Benefactor of the race, as we all know He is, to say nothing of his being its Saviour; if He has contact with God, to say nothing of being his Son, then what more likely, more suitable, more appropriate every way, than that He should show the interest He has with heaven by exercising some of its powers upon earth?

The angel who appeared to Manoah said his name was "Secret;" the Hebrew is "Wonderful," and he showed it to be so, by putting forth his staff and bringing fire from heaven. Manoah knew that the angel was wonderful when he "did wondrously;" and so we know of Jesus. The word that Jesus preached was deliverance from evil; the deeds which he did effected this deliverance and did but prove Him to be the Deliverer indeed. So natural were they, that we may even say with Maurice, that it would have been more wonderful if Jesus, being what He evidently was, had done no miracle.

THE EVIDENCE.

Passing in the rapid way I must here from the antecedent probability or improbability of miracles, to the strength or weakness of the evidence for them, I can use no better argument than that of Dr. Newman, written, of course, before he entered the Church of Rome (but republished since) when speaking of Roman Catholic miracles—he says, "It has generally been observed that they were performed in Popish countries where they are least wanted; whereas, if real, they would be invaluable among Protestants;" and that, observe, was what must have been the case to make the parallel with the miracles of Christ. They were done in the enemy's country. Do you say we have them from the disciples? The men had to be made disciples first; naturally they were as hostile as anybody else. They had to be won over, and won over they were and (this is noteworthy) partly by the miracles. He "manifested forth his glory and his disciples believed on Him." That was the effect of them, showing that the previous state was unfavourable. This makes their evidence doubly valuable. Indeed, it even seems as though the miracles of Christ and the apostles were sometimes made the occasion of judicial investigation. John ix. and Acts iii. supply such examples. So that it does seem as though all means were used to test the truth of the statements.

But granting that our witnesses are not friends and not enemies; remember even so that they are friends in an enemy's country. They were surrounded, not only by scrutinising, but by persecuting foes. They give their evidence, so to speak, at the point ie sword. Yet still they gave it, gave it rmly, gave it constantly, without one sign f flinching, and without one witness ever ecanting. Such is no common evidence irely.

I want you to observe how quietly and et how grandly they gave it; how much nd yet how little they made of miracles; ow much, so that every history and almost very long letter refers to miracles, and verything shows that Christianity constantly cknowledges them: and yet, how little:— ohn makes Nicodemus say to Jesus, "No nan can do these miracles that Thou doest xcept God be with him," but he does not ell us what these miracles were. Again, in ohn ii. 23 we read that "many believed in is name when they saw the miracles which He did," but he does not take the trouble to ecount them; and again in chapter iv. 2, ve find a "multitude followed Jesus into Galilee; seeing the miracles which He did." So little show, so small desire to make a lisplay of miraculous power is there; no vord painting; no trying to charm or enlarge; nothing but the barest, baldest statement.

Two things more. They never gave any other account of the founding of Christianity; they never had any other account to give. It is just the opposite with other miracles, notably those of Loyola and Xavier.* No other account would be natural; imagine, if you can, a Gospel in which no miracles should appear; a life of Christ from which from first to last the miraculous was banished. He would be another Jesus. Certainly He would not be He whose Name is "Wonderful."

Mark xvi. 9—20.

WITH respect to the very questionable preference given to the two or three oldest Greek MSS., to the disregard of still older versions and other evidence for the genuineness of this passage, we quote the following remarks by Canon Cook in his book on the Revised Version:—"It is of the utmost importance, both as regards the teaching of Scripture and the evidence for its central fact, and also as regards the principles of Biblical criticism. I refer to the close of St. Mark's Gospel. For its genuineness we have the express and most decisive testimony of Irenæus, the highest authority on such a question, not to speak of Justin Martyr and other early Fathers, the testimony, in other words, of Christendom in its earliest representatives, supported by every ancient version, even those in which this Gospel is most incompletely preserved, and, with three exceptions, by the absolute totality of MSS., uncial and cursive. Against it the margin tells us that the passage is omitted by the two oldest MSS., a statement which ought to have been modified by the fact that one only obliterates all trace of its existence, while the other, B, that which the Revisers hold to be by far the more trustworthy, leaves a blank, contrary to its invariable use—a circumstance which proves beyond all question the existence of such a close in the original document."

DURHAM.—A series of Gospel services by Mr. Maxwell Wright was held in Durham, from October 12 to 28. They were very well attended, and have been blessed to the souls of many. By the kind invitation of Canon Tristram, Mr. Wright addressed a number of students, about fifty being present.

THE DISTRESS IN THE NORTH.

A SPECIAL Commissioner of the Pall Mall Gazette, in a sketch of what he calls "Starving Jarrow," gives a harrowing account of the state of things, owing to the stagnation in the shipping trade. Messrs. Palmer, of Jarrow, shipbuilders, employ, in good times, 12,000 men, and pay to artizans alone some £10,000 a week in wages. At present only 4,000 men are at work, and this at a dead loss to their employers. The consequence is a distress and misery heartrending to contemplate. According to the writer of the sketch in the Pall Mall, the tradesmen are being ruined, the resources of charity are strained, and unless the tide soon turns the town must be forsaken.

The worst of it is that this is not the only centre of industry thus distressed. The same article speaks of 60,000 starving workmen in Glasgow, and of similar distress in other great centres. The great want is, not charity, but work.

There is one aspect of the case to which the article calls attention, and which ought to be seriously considered. Much of the existing destitution, the writer asserts, is the fault of the people themselves, and can be directly traced to inordinate consumption of strong drink. In Jarrow alone five typical public-houses are referred to, where, when work was plentiful, the takings averaged from £65 to £70 a week. Out of the £10,000 per week paid by Messrs. Palmer in wages, not less than £4,000 was spent in drink. Many of their men, on every pay-day, had to wipe off a score of £1 10s. or £2. The awful improvidence of this, to say nothing else, calls for plain and outspoken condemnation. The misfortune is that the suffering is not confined to the men; wives and children suffer bitterly through this public-house infatuation.

Another source of mischief connected with the existing distress, is the slight causes for which strikes are often made. In Sunderland the present state of things is said to have begun about twelve months ago by a strike on the part of the engineers, not for wages, but on the ground that boys were receiving too much, and ought to be dismissed, so that their places could be filled by men. The masters refused to yield to this. The engineers have consequently been out on strike for a year, thereby causing calamity to all other branches of the trade.

Another evening contemporary says in reference to Sunderland what the Pall Mall Gazette has said of Jarrow: "It is astonishing to learn that some of the men now in receipt of relief have earned as much as £5 a week, in some cases ranging to £10. Yet now, when distress seizes upon them, they have nothing to rely upon. Betting and drinking are the two characteristics of the place, and while good wages lasted and work was plentiful the workmen never thought of the future." It is in the direction of remedying such evils philanthropy requires to put forward ever increasing energy and zeal.

AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND WOMEN.—A meeting for praise and thankegiving was held in connection with the North London Home in Hanley-road, to celebrate the extinction of a debt of £833, the cost of the new wing. This happy result was mainly due to a sale of useful and fancy work by the blind, which took place on Tuesday and Wednesday, October 28 and 29. The Superintendent, Rev. H. Bright, took as the subject of his address the word "Ebenezer," the word so fitly chosen as an inscription on the memorial-stone of the building. There are now twenty-six inmates, and other aged sufferers may be brought under the care of the institution.

EVENTS IN MADAGASCAR.

THE latest news from Madagascar shows that the spirit of true Christian patriotism glows in the hearts of the ill-used Malagasy race. At a great convention of the people held in the capital last July, the Queen attended, and addressed the multitude on the state of things in relation to France. After saying that she had done all in her power to bring the war to an end, it being extremely repugnant and grievous to her that blood should be shed, she thus nobly expressed her determination:—

"My duties as Sovereign in this affair I have hitherto fulfilled, and mean not to do otherwise in the future; for though I am a woman I have the heart of a man, and am ready to rise and lead you against those who come to steal our country from us; for it is 'God forbid' if we are required to be under foreigners. Is it not so, O soldiers? . . . I also inform you that there are no French among us now, and foreigners here are those only with whom we are on terms of friendship, so let every one take care not to injure either their property or their persons. Yet, O people, whatever be our strength, or however great our numbers, all will be in vain without the aid of God; so let each one of us ask Him to help and save us in this our just cause."

To these stirring words a reply was given by the Prime Minister, who said:—

"With regard to our friends, the foreigners who are now in the country, be confident, O Lady, for we shall duly respect them according to the law; for even though you had not said a word about them, we know very well they are friends. . . . O Lady, truth is like a single hair that can pull down a bull. When we think of it, how can Madagascar stand against France? Nevertheless, those who have justice on their side have God on their side. We know that God has blessed us and been merciful to us hitherto; therefore be confident, O Lady, for this war we have committed to God. . . ."

The correspondent who reports the proceedings states that although an immense concourse of people assembled, most of whom carried either gun or spear, not one single expression of disrespect or ill-nature was to be heard from any one. It is impossible not to sympathise warmly with a nation thus comporting itself under circumstances so unjust and provocation so great.

A GOOD WORK IN PERIL.

DEAR SIR,—As a worker in connection with the Refuge in Great Coram-street, for Deserted Mothers and their Infants, may I call the attention of the readers of The Christian to the urgent need that exists for funds? The work is a most useful and important one, and is of the greatest benefit to the numberless sad cases which claim admittance to the Institution.

"Nearly eighteen hundred women (I quote from the Report) have been placed out in service, of whom by far the greater number have done well, while many have become highly valued by their employers. . . . . The object is to lift them up, out of and away from the past, and all useless dwelling upon it—to encourage them to forget the things that are behind, and to press forward toward the prize set before them—the earthly prize of recovered independence and self-respect, as well as the heavenly prize of which this is the earnest and the type."

It may be seen from the above how necessary it is not to allow this good work to languish for lack of funds; but it must be given up, unless the exchequer, which is almost empty, is replenished. I lay the matter before your readers, praying them to send the needed help to Mrs. Andrew, at the Home, 35, Great Coram-street, Russell-square, W.C. Yours truly, 29, Pembridge-crescent, W. J. Tylor.

[We sincerely trust this appeal will meet with a ready and hearty response. This is certainly not the time to relax one fibre of effort for the rescue and help of our unhappy sisters, who are too often more sinned against than sinning.—Ed.]

For the Young.

TO THE BOYS AND GIRLS WHO THINK ABOUT FRANCE.

My Dear Young Friends,—I have been thinking about you lately, as I have read week by week in The Christian of the seaside services for children, and of the magic-lantern meetings, and so many ways of interesting the young. Certainly it seems to me as if by and by there ought not to be any English children left unconverted! How I wish French Protestant children could have a quarter of your privileges! Have you thought much of the French children and prayed for them? If this letter induces some of you to pray more for us in France, it will indeed have been worth while writing.

Perhaps some of you were interested in the account of the terrible hail that fell here, and may like to hear a little about what is going on here now. There have been no long days in the harvest field, for there was no harvest. Here, at least, there will be no long evenings spent in cracking and sorting the walnuts for making oil, because there are none. And now everyone is longing for rain, for if the rain do not come soon the wheat for next year will be spoiled. I never understood before what a Séchésesse was. Here, for long, long weeks, not a drop of rain has fallen. The torrent beds have been long dry, and the Gerrone, at Beaufort, is utterly dry too. The ground is so hard that ploughing is almost impossible. The miller fears his mill must stop for want of water. All the time we see the clouds hang above the southern mountains as if they longed to empty themselves upon the parched fields. Then the wind sweeps down from the northern mountains and chases away the clouds, and we have bright cloudless days again, and day by day there is less and less water.

At Montclar the fountain is dry, the deep well is nearly empty, and what water is left in it is unfit to drink. The fountain below the village does little more than drop, and men go at two in the morning, because then it runs a little faster. There is a great pool of dark-brown, bad-smelling water, which is never dry. The mules drink it and the oxen, but it would be death to human beings, I think. As I passed the other day it seemed to me like a great sad parable of the world. There was the great fountain empty; and almost side by side was the stagnant pool full, and beside it was a fig-tree laden with fruit, unfit to eat, they say. The fig-tree was hanging over the dark-brown water, and two children were there, one a tall boy of ten or twelve, bending over the dangerous pool, and risking his life for the worthless fruit, and near him his tiny brother eager for the fruit which his brother was reaching him. I think you can understand the lesson without explanation.

How thankful we are that beside our cottage there is a spring which never fails. It makes no noise, it is only a small spring, but we can depend on it. People often ask us, "Is not your fountain diminishing?" and how glad we are to say, "No, we see no difference; it is always clear and cold and unfailing." How glad the people of Montclar would be if they had an unfailing spring! Have you ever thanked God for a supply of good water—if not, won't you begin to-day? Will you at the same time pray that God will send the rain, so that the hopes of the next harvest may not be destroyed?

It is curious to remark here how beautiful the flowers are when all is so dry around. I don't understand the reason, but I think the flowers are more brilliant than usual at this time of the year. Great bunches of harebells and blue scabions abound on banks so bare and dry that their beauty seems a marvel.

The children here are busy taking care of the sheep and goats. Did you ever wonder why God's people are compared to sheep and the wicked to goats? I think you would understand it if you watched them together, as they are almost always here. One day I asked why a little shepherdess did not take her knitting with her. "Oh," said some one, "it is the goats that wander. The sheep keep near the shepherd; the goats are never quiet, always wandering off somewhere." One morning I saw our little neighbour, Charlotte, sitting under a walnut-tree with the sheep feeding round her. Suddenly she started up, for her two goats had crossed the road and were climbing a rocky bank to reach a bramble. There were plenty of brambles on the level ground, but, as Charlotte said, "the goats like always to seek their pasture in bad places." Then they always want something they have not got. I have held out two handfuls of salt to two goats, and each one after tasting its own handful left it to take that of its neighbour. I am leaving you still to find out the moral of all this.

One day a man explained the habits of the goat, by saying, "It all depends on the position of their eyes; their eyes are placed so high they always see something above or beyond them." If you saw them leave a clover field, to climb some rock in search of a thorn bush, or leap a wall and stand on their hind legs to reach some branch of mulberry or fig tree, you would understand how like they are to those of whom the prophet says, "they cannot rest." I think I know why David says, "my eyes are not lofty."

I saw a young shepherd one day on the high road. There were no goats in his flock. He was walking backwards and holding out his hand towards his little flock of sheep. One group pressed close to him, but another group followed at a distance, stopping every now and then, as if they had not made up their minds to follow wherever he should lead. Then he gave a call, which I cannot write; they followed a little while and then stopped. Then one of the groups close to the shepherd left the rest and went back to the doubtful followers. This time the shepherd stopped gave a loud shrill call; the runaway hesitated a moment, and then ran back at full speed to her old place, and the rest followed her. When last I saw them it was a compact little flock, pressing closely in the shepherd's footsteps; still he was going before them, holding out his hand, and repeating his low call of invitation.

I fear my letter is too long already, but as I said before, you must find out the moral of all this yourselves.—Your sincere friend,

Sarah R. Geldard.

MANSION HOUSE MISSION.

The fourth anniversary of Mr. Linnecar's settlement as pastor of this church and Mission was held on Sunday, October 26. On the following day a tea and public meeting took place. Rev. T. Ray, D.D., presided. Mr. Linnecar, known as the sailor evangelist, stated that eighty-eight new members had been added during the past year, which had been one of greater blessing that ever before. Great success has attended the regular preaching services on Sundays and other occasions. The total amount raised for all purposes during the year was about £550, of which sum £165 was raised by collections at the Sunday services. There appears to be also a very encouraging state of things in the Sabbath-school, where a good work is being done.

The Chairman delivered an excellent address, rejoicing in the success of the cause, and wishing both pastor and people continued blessing. The meeting was further addressed by Revs. W. K. Rowe, Dr. Wickson, and S. H. Akehurst. A strong feeling of unity appears to prevail among the people, and great attachment towards the pastor, who certainly has accomplished great things during the four years of his ministry at Camberwell. The meeting was a cheerful one, and the anniversary generally very satisfactory. Larger collections were taken, and more persons present, than on any former occasion.

A TOUR IN THE SOUTH OF IRELAND.

THE following account of a short tour through the south of Ireland, undertaken for the purpose of distributing books, Testaments, &c., amongst the poor Romanists, may perhaps interest the readers of The Christian, and excite the increased sympathy and prayers of God's people on behalf of these poor priest-ridden people in the sister island.

Having collected together a goodly number of books and Testaments, we set out one fine day in September for the purpose of scattering them wherever the Lord might see fit to direct us. Our first halt was at a small village in the county of Kilkenny. Here a drive to the beautiful woods of Iustioge and Woodstock gave us an opportunity of a long talk with our car driver. While seeking to place before him the simple plan of salvation through Christ, as revealed to us in the Word of God, he said, "But what about those who never read the Bible?" My friend told him it was a plain command of God to search the Scriptures, and that for herself she could not risk her soul on the word of another. I added that the Bible was God's letter to us, that in it He had revealed his will, and that therefore He would hold us responsible for not knowing that will, and that at the judgment-day it would not be asked what this one had told us, or that one, but whether we had read his own word, and believed in the name of his Son. On parting we gave him a story* exposing some of the errors of Romanism, and a little Testament which he seemed willing to accept. Having scattered books and leaflets in the village and its vicinity, and also visited the chapel, for the purpose of leaving some there, we left, and journeyed southward.

Our next stopping-place was in one of the large cities, where abundant opportunity was afforded for distribution. After visiting one of the watering-places on the south coast—here, I may just say, we met with the first refusal to accept a book—we turned and went westward. Chapels, cottages, &c., were visited, books were placed in the very "confessional box" itself, and occasionally, when opportunity offered, a word was spoken for the Master.

On one occasion we interrupted a poor woman at her devotions. I asked her if she did not get tired of saying so many prayers. She replied, "Oh! I don't say half enough." I continued talking to her, and every now and then she responded to me by saying, "It's all true what you say, it's all true what you say." At length I was ordered out of the place by some unknown individual. I found my friend busy in conversation with a recent worshipper outside the building. A casual inquiry made by the latter, respecting the death of some father of the Church, for whom "High Mass" had just been said, had opened the way for my friend to unfold to her God's plan of salvation. When she spoke of the comfort of being ready for death, and the consciousness of forgiven sin, her companion grasping her by the shoulder exclaimed, looking up into her face with eager, longing eyes, "But how did you get to know that?" My friend replied, "By simply believing God's Word."

This happened one Sunday morning. In the evening, very glad to escape for a short time at least from the weary ritual of mere outward observances, we betook ourselves to a church where we believed we would hear the Gospel preached. Nor were we disappointed. And never in my life did I so much enjoy a plain and simple service. Great indeed was the relief after all the mummery and show we had lately witnessed in Roman Catholic chapels.

One of the sights which touched us most was that of little children coming into the chapels to say their prayers. On one occasion three little ones—the youngest might be about four years old—entered a chapel where we were, and after sprinkling, or rather dashing themselves with "holy water," an elder one performing this function for the youngest who was too small to reach the font herself, they proceeded up the aisle, and kneeling by one of the forms began their gesticulations, imitating their elders as they best could. We went up to them and spoke to them. I told them the incident of the little girl of six, whose face beamed with happiness, and when an old lady enquired of her—"Kitty, what makes you so happy?" replied, "Because Jesus has taken away all my sins, and I can't help being happy." The movements of a man in the gallery, who I felt had his eye on me, and who, I believed, might be a priest, prevented me speaking as freely and fully to the children as I should like to have done. Poor little misguided things! How forcibly it brought the well-known saying of the priest to my mind, "Give me a child till he is seven years old, and you may have him after that."

As we entered one chapel after another and gazed on the numerous pictures and crucifixes, the latter, in so many instances surmounted by a flaming sun, reminding one of the Babylonian worship of the sun-god: as we gazed on these, and then on the poor deluded devotees of Romanism, some apparently wrapt in devotion, others again mechanically telling their prayers upon their beads, one was irresistibly reminded of an expression applied by an able exponent of its errors to one of its principal doctrines, "Purely Pagan." Never indeed has the profoundly idolatrous nature of the Romish religion been so strikingly manifest to us as it has during the last few weeks.

Many of our books were given to working men. In a very few instances we were refused, and on just one occasion two men muttered curses on my friend as she offered them books, one of them saying he "had something else to do than to read those." For the most part, however, they were willingly, and in some cases, eagerly received. Twice or three times the inquiry was made, "Are these Catholic or Protestant books?" One man said, "If I read this shall I go to heaven?" On one occasion a book was taken, but when opened and looked at, was handed back again. However, on second thoughts, just as I was leaving the group of men, this one stepped up to me saying he would take one. A few kind words spoken seemed to have the effect of somewhat disarming him and lessening his prejudice.

Addressing one poor careworn-looking woman in one of the chapels, engaged as usual at the weary and endless task of "saying prayers," I told her how unhappy I had noticed many of the faces were. She replied by reminding me of their varied cares and troubles. "Oh, but cares and troubles," I said, "in themselves don't make us unhappy; it is sin only that can do that, the burden of unforgiven sin." Again and again was that well-known passage of Holy Scripture quoted to these poor dark souls: "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin."

We visited a monastery, or at least that part of it which they called the "lodge," for into the monastery itself ladies were not admitted; and were courteously received by one of the monks, who invited us to remain for dinner. Many of the monks there, we learnt, were under a vow of "perpetual silence." We left behind us some books, and a Testament. We also made our way to one of the convents, and were graciously escorted by the "Mother Abbess" over the place. There, too, we left a copy of the Word of God, &c.

Time and space will not allow me to speak of the squalor and wretchedness witnessed by us on all hands. At one railway-station we were obliged to get into the train without our tickets, owing to the intoxication and the rough noisy character of the applicants for tickets. They shouted, and jostled one another until at length the train moved away from the platform, leaving some behind. One man in particular might be heard swearing at the officials, and raving like a madman at being left.

As we gazed upon the groups of idle men standing at all hours in the streets of the towns and cities as we passed through them, unable, as they told us, to obtain anything to do, we could not refrain from asking ourselves the question, "Is this what Romanism does for her children?" Why is it that, whether here or on the Continent, we so often find her worshippers an idle and degraded people? Statesmen may debate, and politicians may discuss, as to the probable nature and character of the best remedy for poor Ireland's woes, but give her an open Bible, let the pure, unadulterated Gospel find its way alike into the noble's mansion and the peasant's hut, and we confidently predict that disloyalty and bloodshed, will, comparatively speaking, cease, and the Ireland of to-day be hardly recognised in the Ireland of a few years hence.

Thus we journeyed onward, scattering the precious seed in the cottage and the convent, the chapel and the monastery, in the railway-carriage and by the wayside, whenever and wherever the Master gave us opportunity. May He who alone can "give the increase," bless this effort for his glory. And may the time be not far distant when a blaze of Gospel light shall flood the hearts and homes of these poor votaries of a mind-enthralling and soul-destroying system.

I may just add that we think it probable that ere long the Lord may bid us return, and in the same cities and towns, perhaps, that we have already visited, carry the truth to the people in the form of Gospel meetings. Our souls are fired with the longing to see them released from a bondage engendered by ignorance and superstitution, and the desire is intense that the light of the glorious Gospel of Jesus Christ may shine into hearts accustomed to a darkness which must ever accompany a closed Bible and an enslaved will. Earnestly would we ask the prayers of all who may read the above little sketch that the Lord will bestow upon us all needed wisdom and guidance, thereby making us successful soul-winners for Him in this part of his vineyard.

A GOOD WORK IN WEST LONDON.

DEAR SIR,—I desire to make known the needs of a Mission work in a poor West London neighbourhood—Kensal New Town, near Westbourne-park Station. A lady has for some years devoted herself to labours of love for the people there, latterly living entirely among them, which means a great deal.

The work has increased so rapidly that it now includes Gospel meetings, Mothers' meetings, Crèche, night school, evenings for girls, men's Bible-class, children's meetings, laundry visiting, Gospel Temperance, and open-air work, &c.; also (in prospect) a soup-kitchen, and penny dinners for children. To carry on these agencies, money, clothes old or new, material, books for the library, and above all, whole-hearted workers are needed.

If any possible helpers would like to hear more of the work, or to see it for themselves, I should be very glad to give particulars, believing that it would, on further acquaintance, gain the fullest sympathy of others, as it has mine.—Faithfully yours, Florence E. Jameson.
44, Clanricarde-gardens, W.

P.S.—Letters for St. Mary's and Queen Charlotte's Hospitals would be very acceptable; also gifts of rice, sugar, lentils, &c. All parcels should be sent to Miss Thompson, 11, Adair-road, Kensal New Town, W.

BATH Y.W.C.A.—A fortnight's Mission, conducted by Mr. W. Spencer Walton, of the Church Parochial Mission Society, has just been held here. The meetings were well attended, and much blessed. The full Gospel of Christ was faithfully and fervently declared, and listened to by the people with deep interest. Great spirituality and originality of thought characterised the Bible-readings, while the power of the Spirit was manifestly blessing the deep and earnest appeals made to Christians to consecration and holiness of life. Morning, afternoon, and evening meetings were held. On the last day the concluding service of praise took place in the Guildhall. About 500 were present. Many were touched at the sight of numbers rising to testify that they had received blessing. J. Spence, Hon. Sec.

RESCUE WORK IN RATCLIFF.

LAST Thursday was a red-letter day with those who are seeking the good of the poor in Ratcliff-highway. Miss Steer had invited her friends and helpers to rejoice with her in the extension of her work of love among fallen and falling girls and children, by the addition of three houses in Betts-street, which two years ago was one of the worst in the East of London. In the morning the Bishop of Bedford addressed a company of workers and friends who had gathered in St. George's Church. He afterwards spoke to the inmates. In the evening a public meeting was held in what was formerly the dancing saloon, while the room set apart for prayer was the tap of a low and vicious public-house.

Mr. SAMUEL MORLEY, M.P., who presided, and who arrived in time to make an inspection of the premises, called upon the Rev. Mr. STEER, who read Psalm lxvii. and offered prayer and thanksgiving.

Miss STEER said: Five years ago Miss Macpherson used to come into the Highway and invite some of the women to tea, and then speak to them. A work grew out of this, too much for Miss Macpherson to attend to, and I took a small house and fitted up six beds. People said it was impossible to keep girls in this neighbourhood, close to a street in which there were then thirty-five bad houses. But through prayer and work these houses have all been shut up. They have been empty for three years, and three of them form these Mission premises. Other ladies came and helped us in visiting the bad houses, and inviting the girls to meetings. Rescue work necessarily led to preventive work. Last winter our sewing-class averaged forty to fifty, while our children's meetings filled the Bethel, which was kindly lent us. Lady Ashburton kindly lent a house for a Preventive Home in Mile End. Many have been emigrated, some have gone back to their homes, situations have been found for others; children got hold of four years ago have continued under our influence. We watch for the girls from 13 to 16 leaving the Board schools, and get influence over them. Mothers' meetings are a valuable preventive agency. One poor fallen one brought her lovely child of six, that she might not grow up in the same life of shame. Nearly 800 cases have passed through our hands. We have many disappointments and failures, but also much encouragement. We shall now have accommodation for thirty-two girls. Miss Steer concluded by inviting ladies to come to the East-end for three or four months; it would be a valuable experience for them. She had one room set apart for visitors. She and her helpers were a very loving and happy band indeed.

Mr. LEWIS, accountant, read the financial statement. The alterations (Mr. Whittaker, architect) cost about £1000, of which £200 was still required. The transformation of the place from what it was a few weeks ago must have delighted any one.

Mr. MORLEY said he was most thankful as an Englishman and as a Christian to see, not only what was being done, but also what was thus being suggested to others. Our great want is personal devotion to the good of others. So many living in luxury is an absolute danger. As one of the Parliamentary Committee for considering the Housing of the Poor, he had gained recently some important and terrible information. But at the bottom of the enormous misery was drink. Everyone who came in contact with the people to help them found they must themselves abstain. A grievous proportion of the people are never found in a place of worship. We must go to them, and we must multiply Mission halls, to which they will more readily come than to more imposing places. The moral effect of overcrowding—a whole family, of all ages, living and sleeping in one room—is awful to contemplate. Yet some of these people might be out of those lodgings in a fortnight were it not for drink. It might not seem a very attractive thing to come from a nice home to spend three or four months with Miss Steer, but the people must be visited more, and this would tell on the happiness and well-being of England. Mr. Morley would be glad to contribute £50 (in addition, as Miss Steer explained, to a previous £100). He hoped more houses would be added out of Betts-street, and he should be happy to be called upon again.

Rev. J. W. HORSLEY, chaplain of Clerkenwell Prison, liked this work, for there was in it no cant and no gush, both of which he hated. No one who is not an optimist at heart could possibly work amidst the awful condition of things around us. He had been saying at a Temperance meeting at Rev. Thain Davidson's that the apprehensions for drunkenness in the streets had increased in four years from 172,000 to 190,000. Mr. Davidson said hopefully, "But what would it have been if there had been no Temperance work?" When prowling about and seeing the music saloons, the street violence, the family quarrels, the many and terrible forms of sin, he asked himself what would it be but for the beneficent Christian work which is being done? Considering as one of the causes the force of heredity, the wonder is not that so few, but that any at all are rescued. If you inquire concerning the reformatories, you find that those who go home from them go wrong, and those who have no home do well in far greater proportion — the home influences are so bad. The tone of ordinary conversation among the depraved classes is unspeakably shocking. He had that day seen in prison a girl of seventeen, and the things she said in giving an account of herself were such as he could not repeat in that, or, indeed, in any company. Yet she thought nothing of it, and would probably say it openly in court without hesitation. Of six women who had just attempted suicide the ages of four were 14, 15, 16, 17. What can be expected when the commonest endearment of the mother to a child who offends in some little thing is, "I'll break every bone in your body"? We are preparing trouble for ourselves—a great upheaval, if things go on as they are. These poor lost women don't die; one could almost wish they did. It is a mistake to suppose they die off after six or seven years. They don't drink themselves to death. The drunkards are kept alive by frequent imprisonments. A magistrate told one she had been in prison 400 times; she corrected him—Only 350. They become living corpses putrefying others.

Our women are getting worse in everything except violence. There used to be seven men imprisoned to one woman, now only three to one. You here may at least congratulate yourselves that the women are not so bad as on the south side of the river. If in Middlesex we have fallen humanity, in Surrey we have degraded animalism; if we have beasts at the East-end, we have devils at the West. In dealing with them we must lay great emphasis on following up, and after care. Classify, classify, classify.

As a practical business man, I observe that only one-tenth of the income of this work goes in salaries; in contrast with one-sixth in a similar institution, and one well accredited. We go upon the great scientific principle—the preservation of force. When we see a jet of gas, and know it comes from a black lump of coal, in which the sunlight was stored ages ago, is it not a still grander thing to draw out the light of love from these dark lumps of humanity? God wastes nothing. Every dead leaf is utilised in producing other forms of life. It is a noble work to utilise these wasted lives, these wasted affections and wills. Physical science must not be allowed to claim all the field. Any money and effort given to work like this will yield far richer results. Do not only pray. The Saviour bid the disciples pray the Lord of the harvest for more labourers, but his feet had scarcely touched the sands again before he said, "Go ye." Do not merely pray that others may do something, but ask, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

Rev. Mr. TURNER, rector of the parish, was glad that there would be room in this house for sick cases. He hoped visitors would come from the West-end. No place was so dear as East London to those who were working there. But let them come not merely to look on. The classes of society must be brought together, and the wealthier show kindness and sympathy and be neighbourly to their poorer neighbours.

Mr. MORLEY called attention to the report of a meeting of Relieving Officers presided over by Mr. Arthur Pease, M.P., at which it was agreed by all that drink causes three-fourths of the pauperism.

Miss MACPHERSON said this house was much needed. She had come there when every board was covered with an inmate. Only men and women of power could do such work—power which came from God—power of the Holy Ghost. For a mile or more around this locality these poor girls understood what was meant when asked if they would not go to 26, Princes-square. Besides heredity, one of the chief feeders of the street is dire poverty. One bright gleam shone thus. A white-haired old man and his daughter of 17 went out to sing on the street. A sailor saw the girl and told me of her. She must be saved from evil. He supported her and her father while away on his voyage, and when he came back he married her. Said one of these sailors to whom we were telling the good news, "Why don't you do something for these poor girls?" Said one of the girls themselves, "If you talked to us as you do to the sailors, we should be converted and saved as well as they. Six of us have died this week." They can't live without the drink. They throw themselves over the Suicide Bridge when they are driven to despair and madness. One girl came here who had three times attempted to poison herself. Nine out of twelve come to the streets from domestic service —many from over-work. One servant, up early and late, several lodgers, never out to a place of worship—anything is better than such slavery as that, they say.

Mr. R. C. MORGAN knew an architect who made his own house a preventive home by building it so that the servants' entrance was visible from the parlour window. He knew of one milkman who led astray three young servants at different houses. Mistresses could do much, and ought to do more, in watching over their young servants. Besides the causes that had been mentioned, the streets were furnished by girls who came from the country to service being allowed a monthly holiday, without any supervision. One such he had just heard of. She fell in with another girl. After spending some time together, she was persuaded to go home for an hour or two with her new friend; taken to Ship Alley, drugged, ruined, ashamed to return, has never sent word to mistress or parents—had got into this, and would stop in it; has now dropped out of sight altogether. In the East we find vice in its coarseness and hideousness; but for refined devilism, for vice elevated or reduced to a fine art, you must go to the West. Light must be let in upon it. The presidential election in America has elicited a loud demand for purity of morals in those who rule. We must raise that cry in England. We must demand domestic purity from our Houses of Parliament, and higher up than them. We must let the light of publicity on dark deeds in high places; for it is by those above that the tone of morals is given. If the West were not what it is, the East would be also different.

Rev. Mr. MUNRO, working in connection with the Congregational Union, had become acquainted with yet other awful ways in which the streets were supplied with victims. He had met with one poor girl of fourteen whose father was determined she should go upon the streets to keep him in laziness—a father sweeping his child into the vortex of infamy and shame. But she had been got into a Preventive Home and had learned to love Jesus. Besides this hideous wickedness of some parents, if you watch the railway stations you will find girls, who have themselves become depraved, on the look-out for others coming up from the country. A girl who has never seen London before, comes to seek employment. She is accosted, got into conversation, told of lodgings for ninepence a night; takes it with her newly-found friend, and her first few days in London seal her doom. Another cause is the one-room life. Think of father and mother, son of seventeen, girl of sixteen, and other children all sleeping upon one mat of straw. Then the factories supply their quota. They must have their evenings; they go to the music-halls; they stand or play about the streets; and their liberty leads them to sin and shame. I could take you to streets where there are not three moral families from end to end. Last Friday, eighty poor fallen ones were gathered in, and after supper they sang, "There is a fountain filled with blood." In Parker-street, Drury-lane, we had such a meeting, and I said many of these girls will remember at the Sunday-school singing, "There is a happy land, far, far away." They began to sing, but there was a general break-down, and the missionary and I sang the second verse by ourselves. Three gave in their names, and were rescued that night.

Mr. GEORGE HOLLAND testified to the great difference in the neighbourhood since Miss Steer's work began. He liked to begin with the very youngest children; he liked to gain influence over them from the cradle. He knew a servant-girl having twelve rooms to attend to, and in twelve weeks only getting one opportunity to go to the house of God. What wonder if then she did not go, and that the next time he met her was on Oxford-street? Some factory-girls are miserably paid, and go at night to Ratcliff-highway. Poor little children, suffering from disease, when taken to the doctor he asks about the parents, and says it is caused by sin. It is the greatest delusion that the people cannot be reached with God's good news. We have Mission-rooms which are too small for those who come, and they have to go away fifty at a time.

Rev. Mr. STEER said he opened the meeting with prayer, and he felt God had been in the midst. A lady had wondered at himself and Mrs Steer permitting their daughter to take up this work. He replied, "I did not say Yes, but I dared not say No."

Mr. Holland concluded this most interesting meeting with prayer and the benediction.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.

NEARLY 150 members and friends of the Open-air Mission assembled at the Y.M.C.A. Rooms in Aldersgate-street, at the last quarterly meeting on the 27th ult. to talk over their "Summer Trips."

Colonel Robert Wilmot Brooke, who presided, told of his visit to Copenhagen during the recent Conference of the Evangelical Alliance. That gathering had done much to cement Christians in brotherly love. He also went to Stockholm, where he had spoken at several meetings by interpretation. The work was so deeply interesting that he had accepted an invitation to visit Finland and other places, starting on this journey on the following day, commending himself to the brethren and entreating their prayers.

Mr. Graham Brooke, the chairman's son, charmed his audience by his beautifully simple and concise narrative of a recent visit to Algeria, having spent some days in the great Sahara Desert and among the Kabyles.

Mr. Richard Turner and Mr. Gawin Kirkham added their recollections of Sweden and Denmark, both having taken part in preaching by interpretation in the open-air with the Court-yard Mission in Copenhagen.

Mr. John Girling detailed a visit to Holland. Then three of the brethren told of work in the hop-gardens; and others spoke of work by the sea and in county towns and hamlets. The holidays of these brethren had mostly been spent in work for the Master.

Not the least interesting item was a statement by the secretary of the departure for America of Mr. John Moore Pamment, who for nearly five years had acted as office assistant to the Mission. Responding, as he believed, to a Divine call, he sailed for Baltimore on the 23rd September to offer himself to the American Home Missionary Society; and in his latest communication stated that he was being sent by that Society to Fargo, in Dakota. Prior to his departure from England, the members and friends of the Mission had given him £58 as a token of their esteem.

EVANGELISING IN NATAL.

DEAR SIR,—We had our usual annual gathering in June, at the breaking-up of the school for the harvesting. The attendance and enthusiasm were quite equal to that of last year. A few days previous, while some European friends were with us, we had an examination of the school. The pupils showed very creditable progress in the various subjects taught. Our white friends were agreeably surprised to see what can be done amongst heathen children who have no home influence to help or encourage them in the right way, only a few hours daily in the school.

The New Testaments we give as prizes are always carried home with great delight, and in this way God's Word is circulated and read to the heathen at their own kraals by their own children. It is deeply interesting to go to a native village and find one of our children sitting on the sheltered side of the hut, or cattle kraal, men and women gathered round, snuffing or decorating their woolly heads, listening to the third chapter of John's Gospel, the Parable of the Prodigal Son, or some other portion. The greatest hindrance to the circulation of the Scriptures in these parts is the ignorance of the people—so few can read. But if our day-schools can only go on and increase, in a few years, we have reason to believe, that with God's blessing this evil will be visibly lessened.

In the early morning of the day of the "meeting" the Christians came together for prayer. The earnest petitions offered, showed the intelligent grasp most of them had of the object of this fête day. We had had an ox killed, and about 9 a.m. several women assembled with their pots to cook the meat and help to prepare the coffee. Our meeting this year was remarkable for the larger number of old men present, some of whom gave short speeches, saying what they thought of the work, and mentioning two other places where schools are much desired.

A man from a kraal where we have been holding service once a month for some time past, said, "I am not Boswan (a petty chief), but I am his brother, and the words that are in his heart are in mine also, and in my mouth to-day. You have done well in sending and coming to tell us about God at our place, but you must not stop and think no more is wanted, for we want you to open a school, and send a teacher to teach our children, so that they may be able to read for themselves. My brother is sick and could not come here to-day, so asked me to come and tell you what was in his heart." At this kraal we always find a hut prepared for us, and an attentive congregation. If the Gospel of the Kingdom is not preached, it is surely not for want of open doors, and we are often made sad to hear so many cries for help, while we have not the means to give it

If there is one thing more than another that gives us joy in a people only just learning the first principles of the doctrine of Christ, it is their deep anxiety to carry the message of salvation to others who know it not. They are not content to stay at home and "eat the fat and drink the sweet," without taking a portion to those less favoured. A number go out every Saturday to take services at different kraals. At the prayer-meeting, on the Monday morning following, we hear accounts of where they were, and what they have been doing. A few weeks ago they went to a kraal where the head man is noted for his stout opposition to the Gospel. On their arrival they found him repairing his hut. As it was a cold day, he said, he must have it finished, and could not listen; but they entered into conversation with him, and the work was stopped. Others gradually gathered round and listened to a short address, prayer, and some hymns. Since then one of his wives has died (he had four), and he sent for two of the Christians to go to the burial, and to have prayer with him and his people, for he said that "None can speak to us in sorrow like these Christians; the great and unseen God listens to them."

I will not attempt to describe this annual gathering to Christian friends at home. But I only wish many of them had seen and felt what we have experienced during the six or seven years we have been amongst these people. In the four schools now in operation, in connection with this Mission, we have about 75 heathen children, besides 20 half-caste (Griqua) children. Each of these schools can be maintained with a native teacher for £40 a year. The last two schools are being held in huts belonging to the chief of each tribe, as we have not yet been able to put up suitable schoolrooms. If some of the Lord's stewards interested in Missions would feel it laid upon their hearts to send us £40 a year for each of the schools, it would relieve us from much anxiety, and lighten our work greatly. Besides the teaching there are Gospel services held at each of these branches every Lord's Day.

To give us the joy of carrying on the Lord's work as it is at present, we require about £500 this year. We ask for continual prayer that all the needs of the work will be supplied, and that we may be made wise to win souls.—Yours sincerely, S. AITCHISON.

SCHOOLS AND ORPHANAGES AT URUMIAH, PERSIA.

A LARGE audience gathered at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, last Thursday evening to hear an address from our Nestorian brother, Deacon Abraham, concerning those Eastern countries around which clustered the early history of our race, and the great events with which we have been familiarised by Bible narrative. The address was intensified in interest by the lecturer and his son, Simon, appearing in their Oriental dresses; twelve other volunteers were arrayed in Eastern garb in order further to illustrate the manners and customs of the various races referred to by the lecturer. A Koordish chief, an Arab Sheik, an Israelite, a Persian merchant, a Persian scholar or preacher, ladies in bridal and ordinary attire, imparted vividness and reality to the descriptions of domestic life and religious peculiarities which characterise the Koords, Persian, Arab, and Jewish tribes, who surround, or we might say hem in the Nestorian Christians in the mountains of Persia.

The Chairman (Mr. J. E. Mathieson), in introducing the lecturer, referred to the analogy between these steadfast people, surrounded by the Mohammedan hordes of that part of Asia, and the Waldensians in the valleys of Piedmont, encircled by the power of Popery and its intolerant oppression, yet never vanquished, nor the light of truth extinguished which God had given them to keep burning.

Towards the close of the address many remained to witness Deacon Abraham's practical illustrations of Eastern shepherd life: the sheep following the shepherd, recognising his voice; his seeking the lost sheep; the return of the prodigal son, and the father meeting him. This part of the evening's instruction was intensely real, and the children present and the grown-up people alike evinced the deepest interest, and seemed unwilling to go at a late hour in the evening. We heartily recommend pastors to secure our friend for an evening this winter, and to deepen thus in the minds of young and old some of the most touching lessons of Bible story.

Deacon Abraham desires to raise a sum of money for the support of his orphanage (commenced in the sore famine time in Persia a few years ago). We trust London Christians will help—in the manner indicated—to complete the amount required; that our brother may be enabled to return to Urumiah and resume his labours there among the children. His present address is 36, Gloucester-street, Queen-square, W.C. Mrs. Francis, Stoke Newington-green, N., receives donations for the orphanage and schools.

"AN EARNEST WORKER IN EGYPT."—In the notice of the work of Herr Peter Rudolph, Alexandria, that recently appeared in THE CHRISTIAN, it should have been stated that the writer of the article, Mr. S. Gillespie Prout, Northfield, Ilfracombe, will be glad to receive and forward to Herr Rudolph any help our readers may be moved to render him. He is a man of extraordinary self-denial and devotedness.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN CHICAGO.—I.

SOME details of the Christian work which is being carried on in this great city may interest your readers.

Chicago lies about 900 miles west of New York; this distance takes the fastest train which runs on this Continent twenty-six hours to accomplish, and it conveys some idea of the magnitude of North America when you are told on arrival here that you are not yet nearly half way across the land which divides the Atlantic from the Pacific Ocean! To a visitor from England there is much that is new here, and life and its surroundings differ greatly from that in the Old Country, but the Christian man will soon discover that distance has not changed human nature. Sin is everywhere the same, and the misery and suffering it entails are just as appalling and heartrending in the New World as in the Old.

Chicago is a striking example of this truth. Only fifty years have passed since the time when it consisted of but some half-dozen wooden houses, with prairie all around. In 1871 a fire destroyed more than three-fourths of the city, yet to-day it has a population of over 600,000 souls, increasing at the average rate of 30,000 each year! It is the home of men of vast wealth, for fortunes have been made here in a single year which in England it would take a lifetime to achieve. These and thousands of others live in luxury in beautiful houses in the best quarters of the city, but it is also the home of thousands of men and women who live in poverty and vice and misery as great as any that this world can show.

If sin and its consequences are still the same, the love and grace of God our Father remain unchanged also, and Christian men and women are to be found here telling out this good news in all parts of Chicago. Many centres of work and usefulness are the result of the self-denying efforts of such as these, and one of the foremost is the

of which the Hon J. V. Farwell, of this city, is president, Mr. T. W. Harvey treasurer, and Mr. J. S. Smithson, late of Dublin, the secretary. This committee was organised, and controls the State-street Mission and the Adelphi Theatre Mission. The State-street Mission has for its district a central part of Chicago, which includes some 150,000 people with only one organised church in its limits. This district may be termed a vast hotel, where the guests stay for the day, the week, or the month. If longer, they shift from house to house. Of 100 converts or workers in this part, 50 may stay in the neighbourhood for a week or less, twenty-five for a month, and ten or fifteen for a year. A room capable of containing some 200 people, situate at 377, State-street, forms the headquarters of the Mission. Here Mr. John Morrison voluntarily superintends the labours of a paid evangelist who visits in the worst neighbourhoods from house to house during the day, and gives an evangelistic address at the Mission-room each night. During the year 1883-4 the average attendance at these week-evening services has been thirty-five, and on Sunday evenings eighty. A band of some fifty or sixty converts has been formed; these meet for Christian fellowship on Sundays, at 10.30 a.m. and 2.30 p.m. The following extracts from the annual report will give some idea of the class of people whom these meetings attract, and to whom the Gospel is being preached.

The Adelphi Mission has a district composed of about 150 blocks (each block measures about 170 yards square). It is situated in the most desperate part of the west side of the city. In it there are at least 150 saloons, 15 pawn-shops, 3 theatres, and houses of prostitution (open and disguised), pool rooms, gambling hells, and opium "joints" without number! Into one of these saloons (for drinking) a worker, delegated for the purpose, counted 416 persons entering between 9.30 and 10.30 a.m., and again, between 7.30 and 8.30 p.m., 365 persons. There is not a single Gospel service conducted in this district, if you exclude those under the auspices of the Evangelistic Committee! The old Adelphi Theatre (as the name indicates) is the site of the headquarters of this work. It was for many years the vilest resort in the whole city, every description of evil being encouraged within its precincts, but the President of the Committee has leased the premises in the name of another "Master," and the "Prince of this World" has given place to the "Prince of Peace."

I must not dwell upon the numerous meetings held in connection with this centre. There is a Gospel service every night of the week, preceded by an open-air meeting whenever the weather permits, the attendance, almost entirely of men, averaging 100 on week-day evenings and 200 on Sundays. Converts meet at three on Tuesday afternoons. A women's meeting is held on Thursdays at three o'clock, and a band of ladies from Dr. Kittridge's Church, after spending some time in prayer, go forth into the houses of ill-fame to tell the inmates that Jesus loves them. The Bible is read and prayer offered when permitted, and then the inmates are invited to the meeting to be held.

On Sundays a free breakfast and Gospel service begin the day, and at 2.30 p.m. a waggon, bearing an organ and band of workers, starts from the Mission-hall to minister to thousands who never see the inside of a church, and the "good tidings" are sung and preached to them. In all about twenty meetings are conducted each week by the Rev. A. H. Kirkland, the zealous evangelist who manages this Mission for the Committee. Only ten months has this most difficult but greatly blessed work been going on, yet much fruit has already been gathered. Four hundred men have professed conversion, and there are from three to twenty inquirers every night. Three women have abandoned lives of deepest sin, and scores of persons have given up the use of intoxicating liquors. A few illustrations of results may here be given.

About two months ago a man was brought to the Saviour at one of these meetings in the Mission-hall, whose that I feel compelled to narrate it at length. His name is McGuinness, and though only about twenty-five years of age, he was a noted criminal. He belonged to a band of desperate thieves and burglars, who had their headquarters at St. Louis, about 250 miles south-west of Chicago. They went by the name of the "Forty Thieves" as the gang, well organised and drilled, while seldom below that number, was never allowed to exceed it. They were, and still are, the terror of the neighbourhood in which they live. This man, who had never earned an honest "cent" in his life, was chosen as one of a delegation from the band to visit and "work" Chicago during a political convention, and, on the day when the Adelphi Theatre first saw him, had completed arrangements for a series of burglaries at one end of the city. While strolling about waiting for the hour which would bring all together at a given rendezvous, he was arrested by the singing at one of the open-air meetings, and followed the crowd into the hall. Here he sat till the end, and on leaving was spoken to by a worker at the door. In response, shaking his fist in the worker's face, he declared that he believed in neither God, devil, or man, and quickly took his departure. His stay at the "Adelphi" had, however, been too long, for he found he had delayed past the time appointed. The burglaries were put off that night in consequence. All his ready cash had gone in the hire of a "hack car," from which he had inspected the premises to be broken into, so he slept in a goods waggon of one of the railroad companies.

But the hours which the devil had intended to monopolise were used by the mighty Spirit of the Living God, and remorse and guilty fear filled the man's soul. Rising next day, he went straight to the other members of his band, and told them he dared not and would not commit the intended burglaries, and that same evening saw him again at the theatre. Here he was utterly broken down under a sense of sin, and in deep repentance sought and found Him who came to save the lost. Since that day, and up to the present time, he has been a changed man, a new creature in Christ Jesus. He has worked steadily for his living, first in one of the great coal wharves of the city, and latterly in the goods yards of a railway company.

But the hard manual labour is telling on him, and just now he is suffering from hæmorrhage of the lung resulting from a bullet-wound received some years ago in one of his marauding expeditions. His conversion has broken up the "Chicago Delegation," as the forty thieves call it; and only the other day he produced at the Sunday breakfast meeting an unusually heavy bored revolver which he had taken from one of his old "pals," whom he had accosted and found in a semi-drunken condition. On Sunday evening last I saw this man sitting with his mother and his wife (who had left him for three years on account of his vicious ways) at the Gospel meeting, and heard him testify to the power of "Jesus, the Son of God," and implore the prayers of Christians present that he might be "kept from falling."

I cannot conclude my notes of this interesting Mission without mentioning the fact that the Mission premises are and opposite to the entrance to both is a Gospel lamp; one side tells of the blessing, the other of the curse. John iii. 16 is written on one glass, and strongly illuminated by gas, while the other bears the words, "The wicked shall be turned into hell." These texts were a sad trouble to the man who owned the saloon when the Mission was commenced, and often did he beg Mr. Kirkland to remove them; but the answer was always, "You are dragging souls to hell, its your business. It is ours to try and keep them from it." His persistency was owned of God in the saloon-keeper's conversion. A new owner came. Still the objectionable lamp shone on all the visitors of the saloon, and still remonstrances were uttered in vain. One day this man's barkeeper came to him, and gave him notice to leave. All the reason he would give was that he "could not stay in that house." He left, but has since given his heart to the Lord, and now the second owner finds that it is his best policy to close his saloon during all night meetings, which he invariably does. Christians there are praying that a closed saloon may be followed by an opened heart.

CHINESE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

There are in Chicago about 600 Chinese. These men are the chief operators at the various laundries of the city, which are almost exclusively in their hands. There are now three meetings on Sunday afternoons for the benefit of Chinese solely. They are termed Sunday-schools, for though the scholars are of all ages, from eighteen or nineteen years and upwards, yet the first object of the teachers is to impart a knowledge of the English language, that they may be able to tell their pupils of their own God. I recently attended one of these schools. It was held in the church of the Methodist Episcopal body in Wabash Avenue. Rather before half-past two o'clock the superintendent, Mr. J. S. Smithson, entered the building, where a congregation of fifty-five Chinese, fifty-six teachers, and some fourteen visitors were assembled. For the first half-hour hymns were sung, then prayer was offered, and the teaching commenced. Each pupil had a teacher to himself, and while some could already understand and speak our language, many were learning their A B C, invariably stopping long at the letter R, which seems almost impossible to Chinese mouths. Never had I seen more earnest work. The "boys," as they call themselves, were all anxious to learn, and looked for their teachers with longing faces, which brightened into a glad smile as each sat down beside the worker whom he was accustomed to meet from Sunday to Sunday.

"School" went on for half an hour or more. Then Mr. Smithson gave a short address on the doctrine of "the Trinity," making it his object to convey this Divine truth as simply and clearly as possible to his listeners. He made much use of illustration, and spoke with great earnestness. At the close of his address, a Chinese merchant of the city, a zealous and active Christian, reproduced the discourse in his native language, and having been furnished with notes the day before, threw as much vigour into his translation as there was in its original. He was followed with closest attention, and the ease and fluency of his delivery evidently attracted his listeners and rivetted their thoughts on the important matter he was so faithfully explaining. A prayer in the Chinese tongue brought this most interesting service to a conclusion.

I was informed that, in more instances than one, the truths thus taught had fallen as good seed into good ground, and brought forth fruit to the glory of God. As most of these men soon save a little money and return to China, who can tell what the results of these three Chinese Sunday-schools may be in spreading the Gospel tidings in this far-off land?

Yours faithfully, T. Farmer Hall.

THE THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—The season of storms, shipwreck, and loss of life has commenced. The missionaries, who are in daily contact with seamen, have been distressed to hear of one and another (whose face was familiar, and whose hand had often been grasped at the close of a service) having found a grave in the ocean; and we know that before the winter closes the sea will have claimed fresh victims, and many a dependent relative will be left to mourn the loss of the bread-winner.

The year 1884 has been one of marked blessing. From the various stations on the Thames have come most cheering reports of the conversion to God of those who hitherto lived carelessly or disreputably. The Chaplain at Gravesend, in particular, has repeatedly met on board homeward bound vessels men who are seeking by their amended lives and personal testimony to prove the reality of the work of the Holy Spirit in their hearts.

The Medical Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen has borne abundant fruit. The evidence of hundreds of smacksmen, and of their employers fills our hearts with thankfulness to God for his great mercy in this matter.

But there are many thousands of seamen, of emigrants, of fishermen, who are not on the Lord's side, and to every one who is brought within the sphere of this Mission we desire to present the Gospel. Will all who have the means help us to do this?

It is very desirable—indeed essential—that additional help be speedily forthcoming, and the committee trust there may not only be a liberal response from those who are already subscribers, but that all who are acquainted with this valuable work will bring its needs under the notice of their friends, and induce them also to contribute. Ladies may render great assistance by making woollen cuffs and mufflers for the smacksmen, and all can help by sending parcels of books, magazines, and illustrated papers.

Yours most faithfully,
R. N. Fowler, Lord Mayor, President.
Cholmondeley, Vice-President.
Francis Maude, Captain R.N., Chairman.
E. J. Mather, Secretary.

CAMBRIDGE.—Says the Cambridge correspondent of The Record:—We are just on the eve of a "University Mission Week," to be conducted by Captain Baring; soon after is expected a visit, sure to excite much attention, from some of the leaders of the Salvation Army. And room is to be found also for a week's visit from the leader of the China Inland Mission. A member of the Mission, Mr. Stanley Smith, of Trinity, well known as "stroke oar" of the University boat, has just left, after a few days' stay, which has been spent mainly in indefatigable efforts to stir up missionary devotion in the colleges; and I hear there is promise of result already.

YOUNG WORKWOMEN IN THE CITY.

ON Friday afternoon, by the kind permission of the Lady Mayoress, Mrs. Fisher and other friends gave an account, at the Mansion House, of the work being done among the young women of the City employed in manufacturing establishments. Mr. George Williams presided.

Mrs. Fisher announced that she desired, in calling the meeting, to give glory to God and to testify to his goodness vouchsafed to her in the work she had undertaken. With the origin of this work most of our readers are acquainted, how about ten years ago, in Albion Hall, prayer was first offered by a few Christian women that some provision might be made for young working women who were sorely in need of accommodation for the dinner-hour and for evenings. In answer to much and fervent prayer one obstacle after another was removed, a restaurant was provided in Cross Keys-square, Little Britain, and since then another, situated in Jewin-street, each known as "The Welcome." The completeness with which the felt need has been thus met is shown in a little book entitled "Fresh Glimpses of saving and reaping in the great city harvest field," obtainable at either of the Restaurants. Mrs. Fisher proceeded to tell of the warm reception she and her co-workers had met with among many of the heads of firms from whom permission was obtained to visit the girls in the workrooms, and hold meetings. Three Bible-women were now regularly engaged in this work, and were selling large numbers of copies of the Scriptures and other wholesome literature. In many of the warehouses addresses were given every day. These had been greatly blessed; in one case resulting in the conversion of a young person who had been quite the leader in worldliness. The girls thus interested gladly availed themselves of the provision made for them at the two Welcomes, where not less than 1000 dine and tea daily. Here also are held mid-day prayer-meetings, and almost daily instances of blessing and conversion are taking place. In answer to prayer, funds had been sent which met the demand up to the present. As the result of the Mission not less than 200 young women were banded together for mutual help and effort.

Two brief testimonies were then given by Miss Clark and Miss Knight, both speaking to the value of the institution, and the great benefit they had derived through the daily meeting.

Mr. Hodder said a great work was being accomplished at the restaurants, and it was one of the joys of his life to meet the young friends once a week and give them a word of counsel. They were exposed to fearful temptation—sometimes only two or three Christian girls among 250 others. The daily meeting was a great refreshment to them, and one or two cases of unusual interest had recently been witnessed among the attendants.

A valuable testimony to the good being done by the institution, in the workrooms of the City warehouses, was borne by Mr. Simpson, a member of a large bookbinding firm, who personally thanked Mrs. Fisher and her co-workers for the interest they were taking in the young people. "The whole tone of my warehouse has been improved," said Mr. Simpson, "since the meetings have been held in the workrooms." He regretted that the poor girls were badly paid, and that their earnings did not average more than 12s. per week, but said that the present value of labour made it impossible to pay more.

Miss Seton Karr hoped the result of this meeting might be a large increase of workers in response to the many requests coming from workrooms. The Chairman said there were 20,000 young women in the City needing, more or less, our protection, and if such institutions were needed for young men, how much more for young women.

CHRISTIAN CONSCIOUSNESS.

SING we one of the songs of Zion!
Sing we it right gratefully!
Each one of us on Christ relying,
May say, "God's Son! He died for me!"

Sing we one of the songs of Zion!
Sing we it right joyfully!
Each on the throne his Lord descrying,
Can say, "God's Son! He lives for me!"

Sing we one of the songs of Zion!
Sing we it heart-consciously!
Each thro' his Spirit's inward crying,
Can say, "God's Son! He lives in me!"

Sing we one of the songs of Zion!
Sing we it right truthfully!
Each one of us—sin, self-denying—
Must say, "God's Son! I live for Thee!"

Sing we one of the songs of Zion!
Sing we it triumphantly!
Each one His prayer, "I will" applying,
Can say, "God's Son! I'll live with Thee!"

OBITUARY.

REV. JOHN THOMAS.

A NOTABLE minister of the Congregational body has just passed away, the Rev. John Thomas, of Mile End. He was the pastor of Sion Chapel, Whitechapel. He was for thirty years a member of the Congregational Board of Education, and Dr. Reynolds, recording the sense of the loss felt in his removal by the Committee of Cheshunt College, speaks of his utter unselfishness, his love to the poor, and his ungrudging consecration of all that he had to the comfort of sorrow, for Christ's sake.

MR. HENRY HILL, SEN.

This earnest Christian gentleman died on Sunday, October 26, at South Norwood, at the advanced age of 74. A friend says concerning him:—"He had been actively and earnestly engaged in philanthropic Christian work for about 60 years. He was especially interested in Sunday Schools, and all that concerns the moral and spiritual welfare of the young. His last utterance was, 'We must do our duty faithfully.' He was identified with the Whitechapel Working Lads' Institute, and contributed largely to its support. The other day when the memorial stones were laid he was almost dying, but he deputed his daughter to attend on his behalf, and sent a further donation. He died as he had lived, trusting in Christ." As our readers know, his son is following in the footsteps of his honoured father.

GOVERNESSES IN PARIS.

DEAR SIR,—In passing through Paris on my way to Italy I was glad to become acquainted with the work carried on there among governesses by Miss Pryde. I had the pleasure of giving several Bible-readings at her Governesses' Home, at 23, Avenue du Bois de Boulogne. This Home has grown so that she now occupies five flats, in a pleasantly situated part, where health must be imparted by the freshness of the air. I found it one of the best managed institutions I have ever visited; the presence of God seems to prevail in all its departments. It was full of governesses out of situation. English, German, Russian, &c., were there—these poor unprotected ladies find it a great privilege to be admitted to this very desirable refuge, exposed as they are to every trap and temptation which the enemy of souls has been able to invent and put into effective operation. Paris seems to me a city ripe for destruction, and I can hardly conceive it possible for a person not upheld by the power of God to be able to resist the current of sin so rampant.

In visiting Miss Pryde's Home I felt grateful to God, who had used her in sheltering over 300 of these ladies since she commenced, and caring for them while giving them instruction both in temporal and in spiritual things. May God ever bless Miss Pryde's efforts.

Notes and Comments.

OUR readers will observe that our present issue consists of 32 pages. We propose to provide this additional space each week, without extra charge, up to the end of the year.

Mr. Denham Smith, who has been labouring during the past two months in the South and West of England, will preach the whole of this month in the New Hall, Upper Clapton. He will begin his winter's work at the West-end (St. George's Hall), on the first Sunday in December.

Parents in search of books of a useful and Biblical character for their boys will be glad to know of a recently-issued little manual entitled Daily Thoughts for Schoolboys. It contains a selection of texts made by a schoolboy, and has a series of meditations appended, written by the Rev. A. Sewell. It is just the sort of thing to place in the hands of a schoolboy. Would that such efforts to reach them were greatly multiplied! It may be had of Mr. W. H. Smith, 56, The Parade, Leamington, 13 copies for 4s. 6d., or 6d. each.

A letter recently appeared in the Liverpool Courier on what is termed "Mischievous Mural Literature," tracing to the glaring placards on the walls and hoardings of our cities and large towns much of the vice and crime which prevail. The idea is by no means a forced one; every observer must see with regret the sensational representations of murder and outrage which appeal to the eyes of passers-by in many of our principal thoroughfares. Surely the authorities have some jurisdiction in such matters; if not, they ought to have.

Honesty is a virtue inseparable from a true profession of faith, although too often alienated from it. A good and quaint illustration of this has been given to the following effect. It will need no comment, but point its own moral:—

"A brother was praying with much noise for faith, soul-saving faith, sin-killing faith, devil-driving faith. There was a quiet friend near to him to whom the noisy brother owed a large bill. 'Amen,' said the quiet friend; 'Amen, and give us debt-paying faith too.' My friends, we need that faith nowadays. People don't believe in religion that doesn't do that. And they might well not believe in it, for he that doesn't do his duty to his brother, whom he has seen, how will he do his duty to his God, whom he has not seen?"

The bitter hostility of the Moslem to the Christian faith is becoming more and more developed, insomuch that fresh laws are being enacted by the Ottoman Government for the obstruction of Mission work on Mohammedan territory. In Palestine strenuous efforts are being made to remove Moslem children from the Mission schools, and a rule has been made that no Moslem shall be considered master of himself until he is twenty years of age, and is certified to be of sound mind, and able to judge for himself. The purpose of such an enactment may be inferred from a statement made by a Government official to the special correspondent of The Record at Jerusalem. "Every religion," he said, "must take care of its own interests, and no efforts will be wanting to obstruct the designs of the missionaries." Yet for all this, the good work prospers even in such unpromising soil.

The address read by Rev. B. Waugh at the opening of the Harpur-street "Shelter," the other day, in connection with the "Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children," showed unmistakably the need and value of the Society's operations, as also the earnestness of its intentions. Young as it is, the Secretary was able to state that—

"Since the formation of the Society, its attention has been called to thirty-six cases of starvation resulting in fearful suffering and emaciation, and in eight instances ending in death; to fifty-one charges of desertion; to fourteen of infliction of wanton pain; and to fifty-one other offences of various kinds, some of which they cannot so much as name. On this last class of cases they quote with great delight the stern words of Mr. Justice Day, in giving judgment against a dreadful offender. 'The children of the poor,' said the learned judge, 'cannot be provided by their parents with that protection which the rich can afford. To the poor the law is often the only protection; and I will take care that in this case the law shall not fail.' This shall be your committee's care, and as far as possible in every case; and they wish it to be known far and wide by the poorest and most helpless girl in London that its law officers and funds are hers, and without cost, and the society will consider it not trouble, but honour, to secure punishment to her offender."

The establishment of such an institution is to be hailed with intensest satisfaction, and merits generous support.

The Bishop of Liverpool, in his recent charge to the clergy of his diocese, made a powerful plea on behalf of house-to-house visitation, in order to reaching those who are beyond the pale of present religious efforts. He revealed what is really the one great necessity of our times in reference to the masses of people who are living in utter disregard of God, when he said the true remedy lies in a multiplication of living agents who would "go to work as the Apostle St. Paul used to do, and visit house after house and room after room with the simple message of the Gospel, telling the story of the Cross, and approaching every one with love, sympathy, and sanctified common sense."

The same truth holds good in relation to ministerial usefulness, too little attention is paid to personal dealing with individual souls and to pastoral visitation. The incessant multiplication of public duties, to the neglect of pastoral work, is a serious mistake. The Bishop is right in his conclusions when he says:—

"It is my settled and deliberate conviction that a clergyman of comparatively moderate gifts, who preaches the Gospel and gives a large quantity of his time to pastoral visitation and personal dealing with souls, will be found at the last day to have done more for the cause of Christ than a clergyman of far superior gifts, who, although he preaches the same Gospel most faithfully, is only seen in the pulpit, and in the lecture room, and on the platform, but is never seen in the houses of his people."

The despatches which have just been made public from General Gordon show that, during all his weary and trying season of isolation at Khartoum, his mind has been resting in its tenacity of purpose and simplicity of faith on God. Referring to the exigencies of his position, he says, under date July 30: "I have great trust that God will bring us out triumphantly, and with no great loss on either side." And again: "If blessed by God we shall succeed, if not his will so be it." "I am still sanguine that by some means not clear, God will give us an issue" Such passages are novel occurrences in documents such as those in which they are found. Some may think they savour more of the Old Testament than the New, but at any rate they are the utterances of a genuine believer in the God of truth and righteousness.

Dr. Barnardo telegraphed to us from Liverpool on Monday last: "Through God's goodness I have arrived safely this morning by the Peruvian, after four months in Canada."

Miss A. R. Butler sends us an urgent communication from Florence, Italy, with the view of dissipating "the cholera scare," which is preventing many from paying their usual winter visit to the sunny south. She says:—

"The cholera, satiated with its spoils, is dying away. Genoa has had lately no case to record. A paper writes of Naples on October 24 that the epidemic is looked upon as at an end."

Our correspondent says that the approaching winter is likely to prove a very hard one for the Italian poor, and she pleads that English Christians should, through all possible channels, do what they can to relieve the condition of these suffering people.

In a note received from Rev. Dr. Murray Mitchell, dated Nice, October 27, he says: "All this part of the Riviera—Nice, Mentone, Cannes, and the surrounding country—is exceedingly pleasant and perfectly healthy at present. It will be a pity if English invalids shun the Riviera for fear of cholera; there is not a trace of it here."

We draw special attention to a circular that is being issued from Mildmay, inviting Christian workers to a season of praise, confession of sin and shortcoming, and of united prayer, in the Conference Hall, on Thursday, November 20, at 3 and 7 p.m. In this invitation there is quoted the subjoined extract from a stirring appeal on behalf of Missions to the heathen, just put forth by Major-General Haig, himself no untried hand in work amongst the heathen:—

"A most perplexing feature of the revived Christianity of the present day is the comparatively feeble impulse it has given to the work of foreign Missions."

In our next issue we hope to make some further extract from General Haig's appeal. Meantime, we trust this brief reference to the comparative apathy that exists in the Churches with regard to foreign Missions, coupled with the rousing call of Dr. Murray Mitchell, which occupies our first literary page, will awaken many to prayer and reflection on this deeply-important matter. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, who is now visiting London, with the view of fanning the flame of missionary zeal in the hearts of his fellow-Christians, will give an address next Sunday morning at the church of Rev. James Stephens, Highgate.

"A Quaker gentleman, for many years a beneficent supporter of hospitals, has," says The Philanthropist, "devised a scheme by which he intends to permanently benefit the poor patients who leave those institutions, needing food, clothing, or a rest at the seaside. A very large sum of railway stock has been set aside for division, on a certain plan, among all the chief London hospitals, to be invested for Samaritan purposes only. The trust deeds are now in preparation, and both the plan of distribution, and the purposes for which the gift is to be employed, prove that the donor not only gives with princely munificence, but with a wisdom which a long study of the science of philanthropy alone can teach."

A church has just been built and opened at Northampton expressly for the shoe operatives of the town, and mainly through their exertions. It is dedicated to St. Crispin, and is intended as a protest against the idea that the working classes of the town are rampantly in favour of Freethought. Northampton politically is such a stronghold of infidelity that it is gratifying to find such a special testimony lifted up against it. The hope may be encouraged that St. Crispin's Church and its adjacent hall will prove a centre of usefulness sufficiently strong to confound the infidel and win many to the faith of Christ.

The idea of the mediation of England between France and China at this crisis in the affairs of those two countries is one to be joyfully welcomed by us all. The settlement of the unhappy dispute between the two Powers is of vast importance to the world, involving as it does so many complicated interests. Moreover, the prevention of bloodshed, such as must result from the prosecution of the war, is worthy of the utmost endeavour. It is impossible to have watched the growth of a strong anti-English party in France, and the blustering spirit of response in some quarters among ourselves, without deep regret. Anything calculated to allay this and to re-unite England and France in neighbourly and pacific relations, is to be devoutly hailed and promoted. Let prayer be fervent among all true believers, that God may give our nation the honour and privilege of successfully arbitrating between the two empires, and that He may mercifully preserve peace between France and our own land.

In our recent notice of the work of the Jewish Refugees' Aid Society, it was stated that a property of 2500 acres had been bought for cultivation. The figures should be 1250. The Hon. Secretary of the Society (94, Newgate-street, E.C.) writes:—"We need all our resources for the 1250 acres, and we should need much more for the 2500 if we had them."

A very instructive and useful series of tracts, entitled "Letters to the Jews," is being issued by Rev. A. Ben-Oliel, missionary at Rome, in connection with the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews. They are intended to furnish evidences of the truth of Christianity in a way specially adapted to Jewish minds. One, "The Tri-unity of God proved from the Old Testament Scriptures" (Part I.), is of peculiar interest, and all the numbers we have seen strike us as having an original merit likely to be of great service both to Jews and Gentiles. They may be had at the office of the Society, 96, Great Russell-street, W.C.

Modern philanthropy has given birth to few more useful ideas than that of providing Shelters for Cabmen, where they may have protection from wind and weather, and the means of obtaining refreshment while on the ranks. A letter which recently appeared in The Daily Chronicle, from one signing himself "A Protesting Cab Driver," asserted that the movement was needless, and sought to discredit it in the eyes of the public. The public-house interest, naturally enough, is opposed to such efforts, but those who desire the promotion of sobriety and morality cannot do better than heartily support such work as the Committee of the Cabmen's Shelter Fund has undertaken, on behalf of a class much needing special effort for their welfare.

A noble and exemplary instance of devotion to one's profession, and of self-sacrifice for others' good, is afforded by the lamented death of Dr. Samuel Rabbett, senior medical officer of the Royal Free Hospital, London. Finding that, in order to save the life of a child under his care, it was necessary to perform the operation of tracheotomy, he resorted to that expedient. But in order to its successful result it was further necessary to remove the diphtheric matter by sucking it through a tube. Dr. Rabbett, rather than abandon the case, risked his own life by performing this act, and to the regret of all fell a victim to his self-renouncing deed by taking the disease, and dying from its effects. He was only 28 years of age.

With a view to increasing the interest of children and young people in Missions, the Free Church of Scotland has arranged for a series of meetings to be held in Glasgow from November 30 to December 15. The city has been divided into thirteen districts, all the schools in each district are to be convened in a central church for the purpose of receiving information and incitement to effort from missionaries representing various foreign fields. Such an attempt to stimulate youthful zeal in the evangelisation of the world must have rich results, and is worthy of universal imitation.

Rev. James Knaggs, of Stratford, writes to last week's Nonconformist and Independent, with reference to Dr. Bevan's recent strictures on Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Mission. While admitting that his criticism was undoubtedly severe, he hesitates to believe that the Doctor intended it to be so sweeping as some have understood it to be. In the absence of any disclaimer from Dr. Bevan himself, many will still feel that his attitude to that work, as described by his remarks, is unfriendly, to say the least. Mr. Knaggs thus concludes his short letter:—"Without going into particulars at present, I can say that Mr. Moody's Mission has been a great and glorious blessing to thousands in this district."

A thoroughly representative and hearty expression of esteem and affection has just been shown to Rev. William Tyler, of Mile-end New Town, on the attainment of his jubilee year of ministry. Among those who assembled to congratulate Mr. Tyler as a veteran worker for Christ, and who spoke on the occasion, were Revs. Dr. Parker, R. C. Billing, Paxton Hood, Dr. Bevan, G. S. Reaney, and Henry Mason, vicar of All Saints. All who know Mr. Tyler will concur in the hope expressed that he may long be spared to continue his honourable and useful work in the Lord's vineyard.

At the annual session of the Scottish Baptist Union just held in Glasgow, Rev. Dr. Robert Macnair, as president, spoke on "The Medical Aspect of the Gospel." His practical conclusions, after considering the Gospel as a medical agency curative of soul-sickness and every form of moral and spiritual evil, are very suggestive and good:—

"(1) The encouragement it gives as to the ultimate moral and spiritual well-being of those to whom the Gospel comes, seeing that it is a remedy for what we would otherwise consider the most hopeless cases of spiritual disease; (2) the necessity for watchfulness, especially on the part of young converts, in view of the prevalence of evil, and the diseased constitution, the naturally depraved heart of the children of men; (3) the desirability of making the best hygienic provision for the soul, having it placed in the best spiritual surroundings and supplied with the most nourishing spiritual food."

Rev. Dr. Adolph Saphir will commence on Sunday next, November 9, in Belgrave Presbyterian Church, Halkin-street, S.W., a series of lectures on the Epistle to the Philippians. Service at 11 a.m.

A correspondent asks us to draw attention to the fact that no paper sent to India is charged less than three-halfpence postage. If papers are understamped there is delay, and an extra charge is also made on delivery. Our correspondent states that several missionaries in India have requested that this fact should be brought under the notice of those kind and unknown friends who forward to them copies of English papers.

We hear with sincere regret that our friend, Mr. William Noble, has not been in good health for some time past; happily he has recovered, to some extent, at least. He will, in future, devote a portion of his time to the meetings held under the auspices of the permanent Mission at Hoxton Hall, giving the remainder to outside Missions. This week he is conducting a Mission at Croydon, in addition to holding meetings at Hoxton.

Mr. S. Morley, in concluding the meeting at the opening of Miss Steer's Home, urged friends to become yearly subscribers; this, he said, was the real strength financially of an institution. We emphatically endorse this principle. The modern practice of desultory giving, under a seeming spirituality, is, we are convinced, not the more spiritual way. If our faithful Creator followed the same method, and instead of giving us an annual summer and winter, seedtime and harvest, gave them to us in the desultory and irregular fashion in which many of us contribute to his works of mercy, what would be the consequence?

Christian England continues to send forth her ambassadors to the distant places of the earth to lift up the Standard of the Cross. Lord Radstock and his son, having been commended to the care and blessing of God, left for India by the P. and O. ss. Peshawur on the 29th ult. This day (Thursday) Mr. J. McCarthy leaves for China, in the Ganges. Affairs in China, owing to the hostilities with the French, are in a critical state, and the presence at the foreign head-quarters of the Inland Mission of one so experienced in the work as Mr. McCarthy, will be of great service to the workers in the field. We trust in God that by the time he reaches Shanghai the clouds on the political horizon may have largely passed away.

The tendency of great cities to absorb the population of the country, and so to increase the social dangers and ills against which we have to contend, is not confined to our own land. France complains of the same difficulty, and groans under the complicated evils it produces. Agricultural labourers are so scarce that farmers are in some instances unable to gather in their crops. On the other hand, in the cities and large towns numbers are unemployed, and misery and want abound. As a sign of the times these are facts of deep significance, and are fraught with serious issues to the world. The old adage that "God made the country, but man made the town," has in it a philosophy that many in these days might study with advantage.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN CAPE TOWN.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

SPECIAL evangelistic meetings have been held here by Rev. Andrew Murray, author of "Abide in Christ." His addresses and Bible-readings have been blessed and used especially in stirring Christians to desire to live more devotedly to Christ, and to be more active in his service. The time seemed a most suitable one for bringing about what had for long been laid on more than one heart—the banding together of the Lord's people for prayer and work.

An association for woman's work was proposed at a large gathering of Christians at the Soldiers' Home, and there has been a ready response. I have received the names of fifty who wish to be members of the Union. A Christian Workers' Union is also to be formed, embracing all workers, its special object being evangelistic work. I would earnestly beg the prayers of Christians in England for God's blessing on our association, that He may be pleased to use it for His glory.

There is much work before us; by that I mean aggressive Gospel work, everything almost outside the churches. Few Christians here have the means to carry on this outside work to any extent. Will Christians in England help? A crying need is a Refuge; rescue work cannot be begun until we have it, and there are many I believe at the present moment longing to be helped to an honest life. Some of these came to the late meetings. One of them, in tears and apparently under deep conviction, when urged to accept Christ, replied, "Where can I go, where can I go? I dare not give myself to my Saviour, and then go out from this, back to my life of sin." A cry for help came from another, fleeing into the darkness from an evil den, only to be silenced by a stern "Go back, go back," from a policeman. The one existing Home, under the charge of a sisterhood, cannot receive all who apply for admission; it is crowded. The state of the town with regard to morality is deplorable; "Worse than any I know," were the words of a sailor.

The need of a centre for work among working men is urgent. Nothing of the sort exists here. Coffee-tavern we have none, not even a coffee-room. A low boarding-house is all the town offers the English working man; that, and plenty of cheap drink—no counteracting influence—and his ruin is begun. A rule exists with which I believe all boarding-house keepers have to comply, that a dance shall be given in each boarding-house once a month, when drink is largely supplied. A teetotaler arriving in the town entered an hotel for refreshment—public-houses here bear the respectable name of hotel, and have nothing of the gin-palace exterior; the visit cost him £4 and his pledge.

Friends at home who have prayed for, and in other ways helped in, the work among soldiers here, will be glad to hear that although most of the troops have been away at Natal for some time, the Soldiers' Home has been of the greatest service to a large draft of recruits who came direct from England. Poor lads, they would have been adrift in the wretched town but for this one door open to them, and their surprise seemed great to find real friends ready to care for them. "We like to come here," said one, "it is so bright and home-like." The Christian soldiers constantly express their gratitude for the Home.

The "Rest" at the docks is equally valued by the sailors. Men of all nationalities visit it; we cannot do more than provide them with Testaments and tracts, as I have no worker who can deal with any but those who understand English. Many ship apprentices are drawn to the "Rest," boys with bright faces and gentle manners; God help them in their rough sea life. We want to befriend such, and win them for Christ. In watching over these, and the soldier lads, we are carrying forward work begun in English homes and Sunday-schools and Bible-classes, and it seems but natural that English Christians should help us. Miss A. Gurney, 2, Camden Hill-road, Gipsy Hill, S.E., kindly receives and forwards donations. Any information regarding our work may be obtained from Miss C. M. S. Lowe, 6, Maberly-road, Upper Norwood; and from Mr. W. S. Eccles, Upper Norwood.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

THESE friends are again in the thick of the work among their own people, stirring up the Christians by means of the now familiar and popular "Conventions." In our last issue we briefly noted the fact that a series of profitable meetings had been held in Dr. Cuyler's Church, Brooklyn.

The evangelist next proceeded to Boston, where a three days' Convention was held. The topics usual to such gatherings were brought forward and discussed by Mr. Moody and various local friends. We note that on the last day Dr. Barnardo was present, and addressed the assembly on his London rescue work. Mr. Sankey made some very valuable remarks upon the question: "How can we improve the singing in our churches?" He said that solo singing ought to be used sparingly. The greatest need, however, in this department of the Church's work is competent leaders who are in full sympathy with Gospel effort, and who will not subordinate the sense to the sound.

At one of the sessions Mr. Moody referred in a very touching manner to the forthcoming visit of Rev. E. P. Hammond to this country.

THE NEWPORT MISSION.

"WHAT a glorious week we have had!" is the joyous greeting of Christian friends here, as they meet one another in the street. And, of a truth, it has indeed been a "glorious week." Last Saturday, our brother, Mr. Aitken, came to us from Plymouth. He found it not a little difficult to tear himself away from our brethren down there; for God had vouchsafed a time of great blessing, and he would fain have remained amongst them longer. But, having promised to come, he duly arrived; and we were not slow to cheer him by telling him we fully expected God would do great things for us here, through his loving ministry.

The preliminary meeting for united prayer in the hall of the Y.M.C.A. on Saturday evening was well attended, and the spirit pervading the assembly was of the Lord. Next day the Mission services commenced in St. Paul's Church. One's thoughts went back, unbidden, to that season of great blessing in 1871, when the missioner's venerated father preached in this pulpit with such marvellous demonstration of the power of the Holy Ghost; and the prayer went up to God for a renewal of his "former mercies." We felt assured a blessing was, so to speak, already on its way to us from God. Ere long it arrived. That night, and every night since, while Mr. Aitken has preached "the faithful Word," with impassioned tendency, God has stretched forth his hand to save. It really was like unto the old days! There the anxious ones knelt at the Communion rails during the after-meeting, as in 1871; and throughout the deeply-interested assembly there was manifested the all-dominant desire for the salvation of precious souls.

The mid-day meetings, in the hall of the Y.M.C.A., have been greatly blessed to believers. We have, indeed, found it good to be there. Mr. Aitken has been led to set before us some of God's most precious rules for the guidance of his people, and has faithfully declared to us causes of imperfection and failure common amongst Christians.

The meetings for women, in the Parochial Hall, conducted by Mrs. Crouch, have also been remembered by God. Altogether, we are praisefully glad! Three days of the Mission still remain. God has not withdrawn his hand, we are sure. There will be more to praise Him for! We shall yet raise a fuller and louder "Allelulia!"

Newport, Nov. 1.

A WAVE OF BLESSING IN NORWICH.

A WONDERFUL wave of blessing has come over Norwich (the old city of churches and gardens) during the past weeks. All the Nonconformists, sinking minor differences, for the time being at any rate, banded together for a united Mission to the unconverted; the conduct of the Mission was in the hands of Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. St. Andrew's Hall was the base of operations. Here night after night between 3000 and 4000 people crowded in to hear the word of life, and hundreds, nay, possibly thousands, under the working of God's Holy Spirit, have accepted Christ as their Saviour. The grand old hall, fitted up as for the recent Norwich Musical Festival, with huge galleries all round, and bright with scarlet cloth, packed to the fullest extent with a sea of anxious faces, has been a sight to gladden the hearts of all Christians. An unmistakable evidence was accorded of what God will do for his people when a desire is manifested to exalt his name and extend his kingdom.

One incident will be of deep interest to your readers. Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, who has acted as secretary to the Mission, on his ascending the pulpit on Sunday week gave out his text. He then expressed the wish of his soul that many of his hearers might be led to decision for Christ there and then; the power of the Lord came down in the midst of the stilled assembly; the preacher made several attempts to proceed with his address, but utterly broke down, and in a voice trembling with deep emotion, said: "I came here to preach to you. God Himself is doing it." Mr. Shakespeare then invited any who were anxious about their souls' salvation to come out into the vestry, and fifty responded to the invitation. The ordinary service was broken up, and such a blessed time ensued as words would fail to describe.

WORKERS IN NEW YORK.

DEAR SIR,—I have just returned from New York after visiting Canada with the British Association. On Sunday, September 28, I attended Rev. Dr. Talmage's Church at Brooklyn, in the morning, at which there was a large attendance (1800) at the Lord's Supper; during the service Dr. Talmage gave an admirable address on the Communion of Saints in Earth and Heaven, after a sermon on the subject of Pilate's washing his hands as a formal salve for conscience; he applied it forcibly and with great eloquence to his hearers.

I afterwards spent the day with the Rev. Dr. Pentecost, at whose house I met Captain Bedford Pim, R.N. Captain Pim and I accompanied Dr. Pentecost to two of his Sunday-schools, both filled with several hundred children—not, as in our Sunday-schools, being the children of the poor, but of the upper classes. Both Captain Pim and I had the privilege of addressing them. Dr. Pentecost's manner, full of genuine sympathy and cheerfulness, whilst simply expounding "the truth as it is in Jesus," was evidently most attractive to his audience, with whom he was evidently in perfect accord. Dr. Pentecost appears to be, whether at home or in public, a striking proof of the affirmation, "The joy of the Lord is your strength."

I don't know when I have spent a more pleasant and profitable day. I attended his church in the evening, when he preached with great power from Romans viii. 4—6. The church, which is in the form of an amphitheatre, and accommodates from 1500 to 1700 persons, was full to repletion. Mr. Sankey and Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins were present, and sung several telling hymns. Mr. Sankey is looking, and, as he informed me, feeling very well, and his voice was sweet and powerful. He gave a short Gospel address before the singing. Mr. Moody was in the country, so I did not see him.

MR. DRYSDALE AT THE LIVERPOOL CIRCUS.

"D. M. DRYSDALE will preach the Gospel at Hengler's Circus every Sunday evening" is the simple intimation to the public respecting an extraordinary evangelistic scheme which has no parallel in Liverpool. While bishops and clergy of all denominations have been insisting upon the difficulties of reaching, and preaching to, the masses, and while church congresses and kindred assemblies have given up much valuable time to the discussion of the best means of solving the apparently difficult problem, Mr. Drysdale has, during a period of about eight years, shown that the great body of the working classes of this city can be spiritually reached by very simple and evidently effective means. With an earnestness which is the outcome of sincere conviction, he has actually, single-handed, inaugurated and carried into active operation each year a series of Sunday evangelistic services which must have been fraught with immense good to those who would not otherwise have had the Gospel brought within their reach. It is true that in the arrangement and practical operations of his evangelistic scheme he enjoys the help of about 100 active and earnest workers, but the heaviest portion of the good work rests upon his shoulders. The assistance given to him by the men and women who, from sincere motives, join with him in his pure and self-sacrificing labour of love, is of a valuable nature, consisting principally of house-to-house visitation, in no fewer than twenty districts in various parts of the city, extending from Kirkdale on the north to Prince's-park on the south; the circulation of Gospel booklets, accompanied by cordial invitations to the Circus Sunday gatherings; aid in the musical portion of the impressive services; and help in connection with the inquiry meeting which takes place at the close of each service. No fewer than about 50,000 of these little Gospel publications have been left at houses through the instrumentality of Mr. Drysdale's co-workers; it is estimated that by this means more than half of the church-going and the non-church-going families in the city have been the recipients of this mode of religious instruction.

These services are continued during the six winter and spring months of the year, and it may be stated that the actual expenses in connection with these amount to something like £350, only £100 of which is realised from the collections in the building. The balance of the expense is met by Mr. Drysdale himself, assisted by several friends who have shown a very warm interest in his indefatigable labours to secure the religious instruction of the bulk of the working classes. A voluntary choir of about thirty or forty young men and women has been formed, and the prominent part which these zealous and willing helpers take in the Circus services is much appreciated by the leader of the movement. A body of thirty or forty stewards also does valuable duty in the seating of the crowds who attend.

The Gospel preaching service last Sunday evening, which may be taken as a sample of those usually held, was in every respect one of remarkable impressiveness. While the audience continued to gather, several hymns were sung by the choir, and ere the expiry of the half-hour allowed for the assembling of the people, the vast building was crowded to its utmost extent, even standing room being fully occupied. There could not have been fewer than about 5000 persons present on this occasion; and it may be observed, as an evidence of the public interest in the services, that in more than one instance after this great congregation had secured admission, thousands have had to go away disappointed. Mr. Drysdale's homely exhortations to a Christian life were listened to with marked attention, and while his arguments in favour of a living faith leading to daily work for the Master were enunciated with marked emphasis, they were relieved and strengthened by a series of striking stories which evidently had much weight with his attentive congregation. An inquiry meeting was held subsequently to the public service, and a considerable number waited for this additional opportunity for spiritual guidance and instruction. Mr. Drysdale's eight years' religious winter work at the Circus, and also his summer months' open-air preaching in the Wavertree-park, are worthy of the highest commendation and general imitation.—Liverpool Mercury.

MR. VON SCHLUEMBACH IN BERLIN.

FROM this city much cheering news may be told. I find it so much changed from years ago. People begin to vie with each other to enrol themselves in some Christian work or other. If the whole nation is only once alive for Christian work, so that every believer is found at work either with the children or the young men or young women societies, or Flower Mission, or among the poor and aged, this empire will be fairly aglow with victories for the Lord.

What a field this city offers for Gospel work! I am now among the poorest of the city in the east, and nightly the Lord blesses us, not only with good gatherings but with hopeful signs of the power of his mighty Word. How hungry these dear souls are after the plain truth; it is really enjoyable. One could work in a dozen meetings a day and find always plenty of people thirsting after righteousness. One of the pastors in this city is doing a grand work among the thousands who never would see any religious papers except for this arrangement. He circulates the religious press free of charge by regular system. Pastor Huelle has found a system that works well indeed; I do hope his work will increase a hundredfold. Then the sale of sermons by Pastor Stöcker, which brings 10,000 sermons weekly into the hands of city hackmen and suchlike for less than a halfpenny, is a work the influence of which is found everywhere in this city.

Give the people Christian literature, and very soon they will inquire after the whole truth. The distribution of tracts by the Berlin Tract Society is one of those means of getting people to stop short in their mad career to eternal destruction.

The darkness is really great, and the masses are absolutely blind towards the light; they imagine that the Gospel is really finished by the council of the learned, and although some of them might know better by hearing occasionally, at least, excellent evangelical sermons in the pulpits of Berlin, yet they listen as they would to a fine essay; in most cases, they neglect to apply the lesson to themselves. It is wonderful how ignorant I find the masses at large in regard to plain Biblical truths. The days of the Reformation must be brought back, and the Bible must be searched again in every fireside as to the plain meaning of the Word and will of God. I hope that the revision now going on may produce such an interest in the Book that hundreds of thousands who, for years have not opened it, will become practical Bible students. One of the chief features of the work of evangelisation in Germany must be to get the people to read their Bible aright. It is true a great many dear pastors have excellent weekly Bible readings, but still even then but few of the participants take the trouble to bring their Bibles along; much less are they eager inquirers, according to the Berean precept.

Pray for me, beloved friends, that the winter's campaign here and elsewhere in my beloved fatherland may be blessed to many souls, and may redound to the honour and glory of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.—Gratefully yours,

F. VON SCHLUEMBACH.

NEW SURREY CHAPEL AND SCHOOLS.—At a meeting held on Monday week, Mr. George Williams promised a hundred guineas towards the new Surrey Chapel and Schools. This brought the total amount promised up to £2500.

ITINERATING IN WESTERN EUROPE.

I HAVE just arrived here, on my way to South Russia, after having visited several places en route. I spent some days at Munich, in Bavaria, proclaiming God's way of salvation to many eager listeners. Then, passing on to Buda Pesth, in Hungary, I had the joy of fellowship in the Gospel with the few single-handed labourers in that beautiful country.

Hungary may be called a hungry land, even though the people are scarcely awake to their real needs. The faithful proclamation of the glorious Gospel attracts the people, who indeed are like sheep without a shepherd. A dear Baptist brother has been labouring in Buda Pesth and in several places in Hungary for about ten years. Through evil report and good report he has been able to hold up the banner of Christ, and the Lord of the harvest has given him precious sheaves. He and some of his fellow-labourers have been brutally assaulted by the mob on several occasions, yet he holds his ground, and the Lord knows his labour. He has a room in the very centre of the city, at the corner of a noisy thoroughfare, and separated from a low drinking saloon only by a partition wall, so that the roaring noises of beer drinkers often drown the voices of hymn-singers. Yet for all that, this brother carries on the Lord's work in season and out of season. He is indeed a lonely standard-bearer in the midst of the enemy's camp.

From early morning to night on the Lord's Day his room is open and the Gospel is preached, and many passers-by are attracted by the lively singing of hymns. Also every evening throughout the week there is some meeting in this room. I count it a great privilege to have had some small share in this work. Beginning at 9 o'clock on Lord's Day morning, and ending about 10 o'clock p.m., with short intervals, we had precious opportunities for preaching the Gospel to ever-varying assemblies of people of all classes, amongst whom are generally a number of Jews, so that one might roughly estimate the people brought under the sound of the Gospel on one Sunday to number from 600 to 800 in that one room.

Now our brother is labouring beyond his strength, and his helpers are chiefly his own converts, who have little time for studying the Word, as they all are of the working-class, and poor. They freely spend, and are being spent, in this happy work; and surely the Lord will be mindful of them. This work might be indefinitely multiplied by other rooms being hired in other parts of that great city, and by some timely pecuniary support to aid some willing labourers to take up this work. Strange to say there is about as much liberty in Hungary for the Gospel as in England, although it is under the rule of the Emperor of Austria, whose dominions are noted for the want of religious liberty.

May I remind the Lord's stewards of this opportunity for "considering the poor and needy?" The dear brother at Buda Pesth has no means of his own; his fellow-labourers are the poor of the land. Surely they have a just claim to share the abundant provision which our Father has bestowed upon his children. His address is, Herr Henry Meyer, 28, Tabacks Gasse, Buda Pesth, Hungary.

I find many open doors for the Gospel even where religious liberty is limited, and where the clerical influence would be a hindrance. Applying to the civil authorities for permission to hold public addresses on some stated subject, liberty is given even in Russia and Austria and also in Bavaria, on condition that the so-called "Public Worship Act" is not infringed upon; that is, the usual singing of a hymn and prayer at the opening of the meeting must be omitted. Under these restrictions I have had very happy work in the Gospel in countries and places which otherwise would have been closed. Many are drawn by mere curiosity to listen to what may prove to them the entrance into life. Many come to mock, and remain to pray.—Yours, in Gospel bonds,

F. W. BAEDEKER.

AN ERRAND OF MERCY TO THE HOMELESS.

A WALK, judiciously selected, through the streets of London after midnight, will afford revelations both strange and sad of the condition of the homeless poor. It is in the very earliest hours of a Sunday morning in October that we find ourselves attracted to such an unusual enterprise. Our destination is the Mission Hall at Colliers'-rents, Southwark, where the London Congregational Union has for nearly a year been carrying on a valuable Mission, to both the souls and bodies of "our poor neighbours." Our object is to invite as many of the homeless as the modest dimensions of the hall will accommodate to a Sunday morning breakfast at six o'clock.

We turn our dark lantern on a mass of humanity huddled together asleep. There are fourteen or fifteen men, two women, and several lads. That bundle of rags in the corner is a woman. It stirs as we give it a gentle shake. "There, don't be alarmed," we say; "would you like some breakfast?" "Breakfast?" she ejaculates, hardly venturing to believe the good news; but the ticket reassures her, and leads to a perfect scramble for a share in the invitation on the part of all the rest of the aroused sleepers.

The Thames Embankment is the resort of many of the homeless ones. Seat after seat is occupied by those we desire to befriend. Perhaps the worst cases are on the bridges, more particularly London Bridge, where we discover not dozens, but scores of dejected, hopeless people slumbering in the recesses; but they come out, dazed by the light, perhaps hardly more so than by the offer of a free breakfast. Here is a woman with a girl fourteen years old, and one younger child clasped in her arms. Would that our readers could have heard this half-perishing woman's cry of gratitude as she accepts her tickets. She bursts into tears, and passes on.

Long-lane, Bermondsey, is not at any time a salubrious locality. It always savours strongly of those noxious odours which abound in neighbourhoods whose characteristics are "reeking courts, crowded public-houses, low lodging-houses, and numerous brothels." Even at night it appears terribly stricken with the leprosy of impurity. The very atmosphere seems tainted as you walk down its narrow, badly-paved roadway. Colliers'-rents, too, is dismal and forlorn-looking enough. That it should own a hall of charity for outcast men, women, and children is the redeeming feature in it, and an honour to those who sustain it.

A strange sight meets us as we enter the hall. Upwards of 150 people are sitting in patient expectation of receiving something more satisfying than an address, or even than the sweet songs which are being sung by friends who have found their way thither at that early hour, constrained by the love of Christ. The bright gaslight and the Scriptural mottos on the wall help to make the building attractive to eye and heart. Watch the faces of the people as the preparations for the meal are being completed. Some are wet with tears, others have a wistful expression on them, as though they were longing for the return of happy days forfeited by misconduct, but which even yet may be renewed. But misery is clearly the common lot of all. Their attire is so tattered and unwholesome, their personal condition so uncleanly, their countenances so stained by privation, drink, and sin, that there is much to repel the spectator; but as we gaze pity and sadness take the place of aversion, as we think of them as among the lost ones whom Christ came to save.

The "grace" is given out and sung by stammering voices, suggesting that with some it was long ago, if ever, they had joined in that old tune. The scene that follows can be left to the imagination. The demand for hot coffee and thick meat sandwiches seems almost unlimited, but is equalled by the supply, and at last the famished ones are satisfied. How much happier they look now, though some of them are so worn out by fatigue that they drop asleep. A new light has come into these faces, like the daylight which meanwhile has been stealing into the building. One more duet is sung by the self-denying Christian ladies, a prayer is offered, and then a brief but impressive address is delivered by the Chairman. But the interest evidently taken proves that the practical sympathy shown for their material wants has prepared a way for the message of deliverance from evils more urgent, though often far less felt, which it is the highest object of the London Congregational Union to bring to London's outcast poor.

Among those who have been gathered into such early Sunday breakfasts none are deserving of greater compassion than the homeless boys who have been spending the night in the streets. Most of these have either lost their parents or have been abandoned by them. Necessity has driven them on to the streets; the instinct of self-preservation impels them to crime. Perfect honesty would be well-nigh a miracle of grace. The following are a few of the cases that have been investigated. The first is a boy of fifteen, who has not been in bed for four months. His father, who was a tinker, died four years ago. His mother lived a dissipated life, and finally ran away with a hawker, leaving her child to "fettle for himself," or, in other words, to get a living somehow. When this happened he was working as a pot-boy at a public-house, for which he was paid 2s. 6d. a week. Going home one day he found the house empty, the heartless woman having stripped it of everything, even taking with her her son's clothes. That night he had to walk the streets alone, homeless, friendless. Through want of clothes he lost his situation, and from that hour had to wander about, picking up scraps of food here and there, and so destitute as that, he declared, he had not had a good wash all those four months.

Another lad of the same age, an only child, has been deserted by both parents. He went out one day to look for work, and on returning found that his father and mother had decamped. Left to his own resources, he has roamed about the streets in the day-time and slept on the bridges at night, only occasionally sharing a bed with a companion.

The third is an orphan, fourteen years old. His father, a soldier, was killed in Egypt two years ago. The news, delayed through a mistake in the Post Office, broke the mother's heart. At her death the furniture was sold, and the proceeds taken for rent. The poor boy left his old home at Seaford, and walked to London, a distance of 52 miles. He followed the line of the railway, and slept under the hedges at night. On the way some of the porters and navvies had pity on him, and gave him food; others only "a clout on the head." His first experience of London was a night on London Bridge. As might be expected, he picked up companions among the crowd of outcasts who sleep in Covent Garden and on the bridges, a misfortune that has blighted the prospects of many a boy whom destitution has driven into their ranks.

Another lad of fifteen is also an orphan. Since his mother's death, more than two years ago, he has earned money by carrying parcels, &c., but can get little employment. He has been wearing the same clothes about two years and a-half, patching them to the best of his ability. He has not been in a bed for more than two months, but has slept in the Great Northern sheds. He has picked up food as best he could, chiefly at the coffee shops at Billingsgate, where the stale bread is given to those boys who care to go for it. He is not only an orphan, but without relatives or friends.

One more case: a boy 17 years of age, whose father died last year and whose mother ran away at her husband's death, taking with her the lad's clothing, leaving behind her only a mattress and a dirty shirt. He has only slept in a bed three out of six months.

Sad as is the condition of such homeless ones, adults and children, as have been brought before our readers, the approach of winter makes their prospects gloomy indeed. There is grave reason for fearing that the coming winter will be a time of extreme hardship, through lack of work, to many of the most provident, as well as to the thriftless and intemperate poor. All the help which thoughtful and loving Christian hearts can supply will be needed. In this work of practical sympathy, as well as that of evangelisation, the London Congregational Union desires to take its share. But this can only be done if those who have the power will aid them by liberal gifts, personal service, and fervent prayers.

MISSION COLLEGE IN LUCKNOW.

By Rev. B. H. BADLEY.

AMONG the last utterances of the brave Sir Henry Lawrence, as he lay dying on the 4th of July, 1857, amidst the fierce storm of shot and shell poured upon the Residency and other buildings, were the words, "Let a Christian Mission be established in Lucknow." Rev. Dr. W. Butler, who landed in India in September, 1856, had already attempted this great work, but as he could not find an unoccupied house in which to live, he was obliged, much against his own wishes, to leave Lucknow for a time. He passed on to Bareilly, where he narrowly escaped being massacred in 1857. As soon as the Mutiny was ended, he returned with other missionaries and began work in Lucknow.

God's blessing has rested upon these missionary labours, and there are to-day not less than 600 Protestant native Christians in Lucknow, while the number is increasing every year. The Mission schools contain at least 2000 students, nearly all of whom are Hindoo and Mohamedan children. Most of those heathen children also attend Sunday-school, and are thus brought under especially helpful Christian influences.

The leading school of the Methodist Mission is the "Centennial School," located just outside the grounds of the famous Residency. In 1867 a board of trustees was appointed, and steps were taken to secure an endowment fund. Major-Gen. Gowan, who, during the past twenty-five years, has given liberally to the Mission, gave £300 to the new college, and this amount was soon increased by the gifts of missionaries and others to £1000, the nucleus of an endowment fund. Evangelical work demanded the attention of all the missionaries, and no one could be spared for this educational work. At last, in February, 1877, the school was opened. The attendance has increased from forty during the first year to upwards of 300, and it is expected that this number will soon be doubled.

The sum of £6 per annum supports a native youth in this school, and pays all his expenses. The sum of £100 establishes a perpetual scholarship. When one student graduates another takes his place, and so on, year after year. These students go out to preach, to teach, to serve as colporteurs, and to engage in business; wherever they go they will exert an influence in favour of Christianity. An army of well-trained native preachers is greatly needed. It is proposed to establish a perpetual scholarship, to be known as the "Residency Memorial Scholarship." It is thought that there are many in England, survivors of the famous siege, and relatives and friends of those who took part in that memorable defence, who would gladly contribute to this object. If the sum of £100 can be secured, the scholarship will be an accomplished fact. Contributions may be sent to Major-Gen. Gowan, Woodlands, Wimbledon, S.E.

CABMEN AT SUPPER.—The Clapham Conference Hall was well filled on Thursday night by a party of cabmen. At 9 p.m. 600 sat down to a well-laid table; 300 replaced them, and several small parties dropped in, all of whom had their share of the provision going, which was good and plentiful. Nearly one thousand men were gathered in when the chair was taken by Rev. Canon Hussey. A number of the cabmen gave their testimony to the power of Divine grace and the value of the Temperance pledge. Hymns were sung, prayer was offered, and some earnest words spoken. Mr. Kennedy gave an address, which told with power on the hearers. At the close a few remained to speak about their souls, and many took the pledge.

A LIVING CREED.

THAT a living dog is better than a dead lion is both scripturally and literally true. With the first there would be protection to life and property; with the latter there could be but a defunct and decaying majesty. Living in a neighbourhood where religious life is very active, I wish, without making invidious comparisons, to give your many readers some idea of Christian work as I find it to-day in my own district.

First of all, I will select St. Pancras Church, of which Canon Spence is the popular Rector. For some months he has been preaching God's Word to crowded congregations, consisting of persons of all ages, of every rank, and of both sexes, and I can bear my hearty testimony that God has been in the midst of the worshippers. Rev. John Thompson, pastor of the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, New York, wrote a few weeks ago to a contemporary in the following terms: "The sermon by Canon Spence was in every way remarkable. I have not heard it equalled since coming to England—so earnest, so scholarly, so clear, so convincing, so persuasive, so rich in genuine spiritual eloquence—the eloquence of a great soul in daily communion with our Lord Jesus Christ. I shall carry home with me many bright memories of my visit to England, but I doubt if in after years I shall recall any scene or experience with more pleasure and profit than the evening of my worship at St. Pancras. May God continue to bless and make fruitful this noble church. It seems to me to be a genuine apostolic association of Christian men and women, really aiming to do Christ's work in the world without a superior in England." The Canon has certainly deserved the encomiastic letter of this Christian brother.

In the Sunday-schools of St. Pancras there are over 3000 children receiving Christian care and instruction, and the ordinary day scholars reach the splendid total of 1700. Canon Spence is ably assisted by Dr. Oliver, and the other earnest curates, in his Christian and Temperance work; and I venture to affirm that no church can show more living earnest work or better results as the outcome of it. How to reach the masses has ever been the Church's most perplexing problem; but at King's-cross, instead of waiting for the people to come in, zealous and strong men and women go out and fetch them in, their modus operandi being to sing a number of Sankey's solos; and thus, after an expenditure of lung force, large numbers are attracted, and enter the house of God.

Rev. Z. B. Woffendale (Presbyterian) preaches with considerable power. He is also a stern champion of Christian truth, as was evinced by his able and scholarly debate with the well-known infidel lecturer, Mr. Foote, of recent notoriety. Every Sunday evening in the Euston-road, Mr. Woffendale preaches the Gospel in fervent language, hundreds listening to his Christian and manly utterances. Neither biting winds nor hot sultry days ever deter him and his good friends from working, for they are ever ready to "tell it out." For many years past they have helped to brighten the lives of the poor by commendable concerts and song services in King's-cross Theatre, which the good friends of Dr. Dyke's church secured for them from the hands of the worldlings. Our friend and brother, Rev. Henry Montgomery, from Belfast, has recently held a ten days' Mission there, and spoken to large audiences.

Tonbridge Chapel, Euston-road (Congregational), has lately received an impetus from the accession of a young and spirited pastor (the Rev. Bevill Allen), who has been preaching faithfully, and has managed to secure the co-operation of a number of good men and true as lecturers, for the very prudent purpose of trying to extinguish a very old and troublesome debt which still exists on the chapel, and which has occasioned much anxiety.

Dr. R. Paramore, a young and promising physician, has for years helped the friends in many ways, and it is not inopportune to mention that a religious contemporary last week made some kindly references to his work in this direction. The Rev. W. G. Beardmore lately gave a very excellent lecture on "Noblemen without titles," and it is hoped by this, and other kindly efforts, that this chapel, placed as it is in an advantageous position, may be able to deliver itself from the financial distress which at present hampers its movements in useful work for God and the world.

The Wesleyan Chapel in Liverpool-street has a weekly increasing congregation, and with such an earnest preacher and able lecturer as the Rev. W. G. Beardmore, nothing less could be anticipated. The laymen attached to this chapel have adopted a very successful plan of operations in regard to street preaching. With a large, well-lighted lamp they sally forth and take up their position, and with some good singing and a carefully thought-out manuscript containing some interesting Bible stories, enlist the sympathies of the passers-by, and hundreds are induced to listen. The preparation of a few good notes might suggest itself to some other districts in which the speaking power is but latent and not very effective. Notes are very helpful to wandering or thoughtless speakers, who are wanting in concentration. There are always to be met with captious people and infidel auditors at our open-air services, and the stronger our position is made the better will it be for us when an assault is made upon it. M. Renan, Herbert Spencer, and others in the sceptical world, may flood the literary emporiums with their most polished essays; Colonel Ingersoll may dip his pen in gall and rack his brain in diatribes against the Son of God and "the dying creed;" Atheism may rant in obscure Halls of Science so-called; but never will they dethrone Him whose right it is to reign, and Christianity will spread and be triumphant if only men and women professing to be his followers live and act in the present making their faith by their works and actions a living creed. MISSIONS IN NORTHAMPTON.

IN a recent number of THE CHRISTIAN I observe a request for prayer for blessing upon a Mission in this parish. May I ask your readers to join with me in praising God for the "fruits that remain" of a former Mission conducted by myself in St. Paul's parish and at Kingsthorpe near two years ago?

A working man who dates his conversion to one of our open-air meetings, has been ill nearly ever since, suffering most acutely from a disease of the heart, liver, and kidneys. He preaches to all who go to see him, and has been the means of the conversion of two of his sons, his wife, and others. He is a terrible sufferer, but he is filled with the Spirit. His lips are full of the praises of God. Not a murmur or a complaint of any kind escapes his lips. His knowledge of Scripture is wonderful, although he could scarcely read when first converted.

This is one case; others of equal interest might be cited. The blessing received at that time by Christians also remains.

As to my present Mission, our Sunday afternoon meetings for men only have been well attended, and about three times as many come to our daily Bible-readings as attended on the former occasion, while our evening meetings are more than double as compared with last Mission. Thank God, many have received blessing, and many more are, I believe, seeking the Saviour.

If the Lord will, I leave Northampton Nov. 3, for work in Great Yarmouth and Gorleston. Will you ask your readers to pray for those places? The former, as stated by your correspondent Mr. C. Cook some time since, is in great need of a mighty shaking. As I am now open to conduct special services anywhere, will your readers pray for open doors for increased spiritual power and much blessing for me? My address in Great Yarmouth is 26, Wellington-road. JAMES MANNING.

THRONES OF JESUS.

BY the well of Jacob,
Scorched by noonday sun,
Sits the patient Shepherd
Till his prize was won.
From his lips forgiving,
Like a fountain pour
Words that, sinners drinking,
Feel athirst no more.

Lo! the prophet seated
On a mountain lone;
Mountain buds his jewels,
Mossy rocks his throne.
While the listening hundreds
Gaze upon his face,
Still his throne is glory,
Still his words are grace.

Rocked on blue Gennesaret,
Mark yon fisher's boat;
Soft across the waters
Words of wonder float.
"Follow me, ye lost ones,
Doubting or distrest,
Come, ye heavy laden,
Find in Me your rest."

Well, and lake, and mountain,
Far beneath his feet,
See, the world's Redeemer
On his Father's seat:
Angels bow before Him,
Saints his glories sing,
Hell is robbed of captives,
Death has lost its sting.

Does the Son eternal
Scorn his humble birth;
Will the Lord of Glory
Spurn the sons of earth?
Hark! his intercession
Rises loud and free:
"Father, in my kingdom,
Let my servants be."

Let our loins be girded,
Let our lamps be bright.
Surely breaks the morning,
Swiftly fades the night.
Sow beside all waters
Till the reapers come,
Then a crown with Jesus,
There a sinless home.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.

THE Quarterly Conference of the friends and workers of this Mission was held on Tuesday, October 28, at the institution, St. George-street, London Docks. Colonel Handyside, in presiding, made a very feeling reference to the loss the Society had sustained by the death of Colonel Brockman, who for more than twenty years had taken a deep interest in the Society's work. About twenty of the workers presented brief reports of the varied branches of the London work, and these were almost, without an exception, of a very encouraging character.

An address to the workers was given by Mr. M. H. Hodder, who said that having been spending some time abroad this summer, he had met with so many cases of good resulting from the influence of seamen who had been brought to the Lord either in England or America, that he felt more than ever the importance of the work done by this and kindred Missions. He adverted to the fact that more missionaries were required by this Society, and expressed his belief that when the need became known the funds would be found. It always rejoiced his heart to meet the friends engaged in this work, for there was such a spirit of love and unity amongst them; and as their efforts had been blessed in the past, he felt sure they would be increasingly so in the future. Other friends took part in the meeting, and, after praise and prayer, the proceedings closed.

This Mission has felt the prevailing commercial depression, and needs help for two additional missionaries.

Notices of Books, &c.

Up High. By Rev. George Everard. Nisbet & Co. 1s. 6d. Ten chapters on experimental topics; thoroughly practical, and brimful of Christ.

The Adviser. Houlston & Sons. Annual Vol., 1s. An excellent publication by the Scottish Temperance League, inculcating on our young folks whatsoever things are just, pure, virtuous, and lovely.

Aidan: the Apostle of the North. By Alfred C. Fryer. Partridge & Co. This volume presents us not only with a sketch of the noble life of the first Bishop of Lindisfarne, but depicts the character of the heathenism which he and his brave followers had to confront. It is well that the pioneer work of these heroes should be kept in view.

My Experience as a Moderate Drinker, a Drunkard, and a Total Abstainer. By Charles Meadows. To which is added, "A Rill from the Town Pump," by Nathaniel Hawthorne. 1s. 337, Strand, W.C. Many poor victims of the drink might be rescued if some kind friend were to forward them a copy of this veritable narrative.

Arnold's Resolve. By Mrs. Lucas Shadwell. National Temperance League. The story of a noble son, whose convictions of the dread results of the drink traffic induced him to decline a lucrative offer of partnership in a brewer's firm. Driven from home, he steadily rose to an equally good social position, and was otherwise fortunate in matters which readers must discover for themselves. A splendid book for young men, and for young maidens too.

Stories of the Tower. By Mary Wilson. Cassell & Co. Here we have in compact and attractive form the most noteworthy historical events connected with the Tower of London. Considerable care seems to have been taken to obtain the most reliable information; abounding as it does in illustrations, we fully endorse the author's hope "that her little work will prove a useful companion to the more serious study of the annals of this country."

The Wreckers of Lavernock. By Sarah Jenkins. T. Fisher Unwin. 5s. A sensational story of love and blood, of cruelty and devotedness; not always true to nature or probability, but holding the reader fascinated to the end. Together with the wreckers of a bygone day, there are somewhat anachronistically introduced workers among the poor of the East-end, apparently sketched from characters much nearer to the present time. The author has skill and power, but lacks the mellowness which comes only by experience.

To the Light Through the Cross. By Clement Clemance, B.A., D.D. 5s. R. D. Dickinson. Dr. Clemance here presents us with a series of expositions of the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah, and other Scriptures bearing on the redemptive work of Christ. For thoroughness, fulness of suggestive thought, logical clearness, and devoutness of style, the volume is of rare excellence. The plan of the author is well conceived and carefully worked out, the result being a demonstration at once of the Divine fulness and sureness of both the Personal and the written Word. We have turned with pleasure from one chapter to another, and found food for reflection and spiritual refreshing at every point.

St. Paul the Author of the Acts of the Apostles and of the Third Gospel. By Howard Hebbe Evans, B.A., Vicar of Mapperley. Wyman & Sons. This is an attempt to prove that both the Acts of the Apostles, and what is commonly called Luke's Gospel, are from the pen of the Apostle Paul. When we say that a considerable amount of probability is shown for its being so, it is, perhaps, all that can be safely said. Direct positive proof is wanting, and tradition is in favour of Luke being the author. Nevertheless, the number of words and phrases which the author has collected common to Paul and these two writings is certainly remarkable, and is not wholly accounted for by the commonly-received view that Luke wrote under the influence of Paul. Without being able to go the whole length that our author does in saying "there is no doubt whatever that Paul himself was the real author of the Acts of the Apostles, and therefore of the third Gospel," we think he has at least shown that there is more to be said for it than is commonly thought; but, perhaps, the coincidences in style and language between the Epistles of Paul and the third Gospel and the Acts may be equally as well explained by supposing Luke to have been habitually the amanuensis of the great Apostle.

The Night of Glory: a Sacred Cantata for Christmas. By W. Howard Doane. 6d. J. Curwen & Sons. Both words and music are good: some of the choruses very fine. An excellent service of song for Christmastide.

Look to the End. An Address, by J. Forbes Moncrieff, to Young Men and Women. Glass & Co., Glasgow. Well written, and sure to stir up the reader to consider his last end. "Freely Give," and several other tracts on Giving, are by same auther.

Open-air Preachers, Divine and Human. By Rev. John Edmond, D.D. 1*d*, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C. In this Annual Sermon of the Open-air Mission the nobility and grandeur of the work is well portrayed, and the preacher encouraged in language befitting the theme.

Grateful Reminiscences of God's gracious dealings in hearing and answering prayer. By J. R. T. J. A. Thompson, 24, Elliot-street, Liverpool. The writer, engaged in Mission work, pens this story of fifty years' life in Liverpool, hoping it may encourage and stimulate others to greater fervency and faith in prayer.

Commemorative Lutheran Lays, and Wycliffite Warblings; or, Protective Protestant Poems for the Perilous Puseyite Period. Part I. By Palaios Evangelos. 1s. 28, Paternoster-row. The language is strong, and the style severely sarcastic in the portrayal of mass in masquerade; but lovers of Protestantism, who view with just alarm the rapid growth of Popish teaching in our midst, will thank the writer for his bold protest.

The Magazine of Art for this month (1s. Cassell & Co.) is a marvellous production at the price. The views of "The New Forest" give charming peeps at nature in its fairest aspects, and Mrs. Fawcett's letterpress is worthy of the theme. The page produced in colour is a welcome novelty, and opens up an unexpected vista into the region of the beautiful. There are also other attractions of a high order. As this number commences a fresh volume, it will be a good opportunity for new subscribers.

HODDER & STOUGHTON.

Biblical Thesaurus. By Right Rev. J. Hellmuth. Part III. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. Having already spoken of this work, we need but say that this is the third part, which brings it down to the end of Genesis. It contains in the preface the following commendatory notice from the pen of the well-known Hebrew scholar Delitzsch, whose good opinion will go far to commend it to many: "The plan of the Biblical Thesaurus is a good one. It is very instructive for the beginner of Hebrew studies to have under his eye text, translation, grammatical analysis, together with the most necessary explanations. The proof-sheets submitted to me by you during your stay in Leipzig showed to me that the arrangement is practical and conformable to the purpose, and the typographical execution excellent. Nor do I doubt that this work will be welcome to many in their pursuance of Hebrew studies, and will prove very useful."

Martin Luther: Student, Monk, Reformer. By James Roe, LL.D., F.S.A. Illustrations by J. A. Vinter. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. A new life of Luther may seem a needless addition to the promiscuous library that has been written by German, English, and French Protestants about the "Monk who shook the world." We venture to think, however, that this work has peculiar merits, and will fill a gap before unfilled. It is a happy medium between the popular lives of Luther, some so brief as to be little more than a catalogue of incidents, and others biographies that leave on ordinary minds many scenes of mediæval German history, but a very hazy outline of the chief character they profess to describe. In this goodly volume we never once lose sight of Luther himself. Like the Wartburg on the cover, he "cannot be hid." The comprehensive title—"Student, Monk, Reformer," gives at a glance three phases or stories of his career. The six illustrations, entitled Separation, Tribulation, Resolution, The Capture, Decision, Supplication, correctly summarise Luther's life and character—though from an artistic point of view they are not all that could be desired. The Reformer's chief friends and foes are vividly described, but in every scene he himself towers like a giant. Luther's inner life and social habits are sympathetically described. Mr. Roe's style is crisp and vigorous throughout. Quotations from other authors are aptly, but not too copiously used, while all such debts are justly acknowledged in the preface. The paper and type are exceptionably good. The book is dedicated in simple words to Lord Shaftesbury, a fact which will not lessen its value to all lovers of God's truth and its defenders.

The Autocrat of the Nursery. By L. T. Mead. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. This is a very amusing book, and the incidents and characteristics portrayed are both natural and clever. Mr. T. Pym has materially added to its value by forty appropriate sketches.

The First Principles of Faith. By Marshall Randles. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. An able book on the defence of Theism against the anti-theistic attacks which so abound in the present day. "Apologists (says the author) have sometimes appeared too ready to surrender the sanction and prestige of reason to infidelity, and to retreat behind the bulwarks of conscious advantage and sacred emotion. Being firmly of opinion that the approval of reason belongs to Theism and not to anti-Theism, and that the more thoroughly the question is investigated the more reasonable will belief in God appear, I propose to show by the Atheists' acknowledged standard, that natural theology and intelligence are not enemies, but inseparable allies, or rather that Theism is essentially founded on reason." This proposed end has been well attained, and we can promise the reader not only much interesting light on the philosophical struggles of the present day to obliterate the knowledge of God, but also much calmly reasoned refutation of these attacks by one who evidently has a thorough grasp of the whole subject.

J. NISBET & CO.

A Gleam of Light. By A. M. H. 1s. Nisbet & Co. Brief meditations on Scripture truths, which shine forth brightly with a radiance all their own. Each subject compactly dealt with, and proof texts are noted in margin.

Life in Hospital. By A Sister. 1s. Nisbet & Co. The good that the writer was enabled to do in her capacity as a nurse, the intense delight she took in her work, and the excellent counsel she gives to other workers in the same field, constitute this a timely and valuable little production.

Seven Sons. By Darley Dale. 5s. Nisbet & Co. A clever tale, recounting the wonderful experiences, exploits, and adventures of seven brothers. It will be read with avidity, and with much profit too, by other boys, though the French phrases that are so frequent will be hard nuts for some of them to crack.

Balaam's Parables, and their bearing on The Second Coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. By Rev. Frederick Whitfield. 1s. Nisbet & Co. The lessons drawn from Balaam's career are exceedingly striking, instructive, and solemn. The author sees in these four distinct parables, separation to God, justification, sanctification, and future glory. And he makes the reader see them too. Those who have not perused this little volume have a rich treat in store.

Like Christ: Thoughts on the Blessed Life of Conformity to the Son of God. By Andrew Murray. Nisbet & Co. 2s. 6d. Those who know the beautiful volume "Abide in Christ," to which this is a sequel, will need no persuasion to become possessed of this companion work. It is pervaded by the same spirit of devotion and faith, and richly anointed with the same unction and power. Its portraiture of our blessed Lord is at once reverent and tender, majestic and attractive, while imitation of Christ as our great example is made practicable and plain, and not viewed from a mystical or transcendental standpoint. The marrow and fatness of spiritual experience are in the book, every chapter of which is redolent of sacred and divine fragrance.

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

Friendly Greetings: Illustrated Readings for the People. Religious Tract Society. A handsomely bound volume, containing more than a hundred engravings; some coloured. Good religious reading, with anecdotes and incidents ad infinitum.

My Coloured Picture Story Book. Religious Tract Society. The profusion of richly and beautifully-coloured pictures in this book will greatly please the children, while the stories are well suited to convey instruction to their dawning intellects.

The Adaptation of Bible Religion to the Needs and Nature of Man. By Rev. W. G. Blaikie, D.D. 4d. Religious Tract Society. In a scholarly and convincing way, Dr. Blaikie here applies the Design Argument to the religion of the Bible, showing that the provisions of grace are adapted to meet and remedy all the evils introduced by sin. He contends that the Bible shows a due regard for man's bodily, intellectual, and social nature. To those who are troubled with "honest doubt," this ably written treatise may be strongly commended. Preachers and others who are called to contend with Agnosticism and Scepticism will also find it extremely helpful. It is the latest issue of the series of "Present Day Tracts."

Mahomet and Islam. By Sir William Muir. Religious Tract Society. This is a book of gold, and the Religious Tract Society deserves universal thanks for their choice of its writer, and for issuing it at the present moment. When Mahommedan fanaticism is strongly reviving, while at the same time the Gospel is receiving in many Mahommedan centres an unparalleled hearing, and when all eyes are turned to British operations in Mahommedan Egypt and the Soudan, it is important that all should know what Mahommedanism really is. From one so well known as a ripe Oriental scholar, an extensive traveller, a distinguished Indian administrator, above all as a decided man of God, we naturally expect great things; but the fulfilment exceeds our highest expectations. Although, as the sub-title states, the book is but "a sketch of Mahomet's life, a brief outline of his religion," all that is worth knowing about the man or the system is clearly set before us. Mahomet is neither denounced as a conscious impostor nor deified as a marvel of genius and goodness. The contrast between his early sincerity and later worldly ambition is emphasised by stern facts. While ample justice is done to his finer qualities, his vices are neither veiled nor justified. But while Sir W. Muir is as generous to Mahomet as truth permits, he fearlessly points out the hopeless corruption of Islam and its radical antagonism to the teachings of Jesus Christ. Specially valuable is the appendix, giving, in a few pages, an intelligent summary of Mahommedan doctrine, and comparing it with that of our Lord. The value of the book is increased by a capital map of Arabia, marginal headings, dates, and diagrams. Together with Hughes' "Notes on Mahommedanism," and Freeman's "Saracen History," this book ought effectually to correct such one-sided pictures of Mahomet as that by T. Carlyle, and to refute such fallacious paneygyrics of Islam as that of Mr. Bosworth Smith.

SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

Anecdotes on Bible Texts. By J. L. Nye. Sunday School Union. Incidents illustrative of almost every verse in the Epistle to the Romans, arranged in consecutive order. Spurgeon, Moody, Haslam, Muller, and a host of other celebrities, are made to contribute.

On the Shore. By Madame de Witt. Sunday School Union. This is admirably translated from the French by Mrs. H. N. Goodhart, who has reproduced all the vitality of the original. There is a pleasing touch of humour in both story and illustration, which makes the incidents of family life interesting and amusing. It serves to show the great influence a prudent mother may have over children who would prove an annoyance to those who could neither understand nor manage them. (3s. 6d.)

The Schooner on the Beach. By Rev. E. A. Rand. (2s. 6d.) A capital book for boys, full of life, pluck, and true manliness.—The Starry Cross. By James Crowther. (2s. 6d.) This remarkable "Story of Dreamland" describes the progress of Christianity from its daybreak to its sunset. In a dream the author gains his information from the leaves of the tree under which he lies, and in this conversational form introduces them to the reader. The conception is somewhat original, while the instruction is important and the style very attractive. Many illustrations add to the excellence of the book.—I, Benjamin Holbeck. By M. A. Paul. (3s.) A graphic account of the siege of Plymouth in the great civil war. Written in the form of a personal narrative, it enables the reader to realise the situation, and enter into the circumstances connected therewith. Careful study has been made to secure historical accuracy, and the result is a useful and entertaining volume.—Long Marly; or, Heart Within and God O'erhead. By Emily Larter. 1s. Designed to illustrate the truth of Paul's words in Rom. viii. 28. The story is full of interest, but has in it much more of romance than is necessary to the ostensible design.—Boys Worth Noting (1s.), by J. L. Nye, shows how, by industry and perseverance, boys in all ranks of life became honoured and renowned.—Daring Tom, by E. C. Kenyon (1s.), relates the adventures of Tom Melville, and the wisdom he ultimately learned, though at great cost.—Johnny's Search. By Mrs. C. M. Clarke. 6d. The search of a dear boy after heaven, with the reward that followed, after many affecting episodes in his checkered history.—Tim, the News-Boy. 6d. The story of a telegraph lad, whose father was a drunkard and his mother a Catholic. Poor Tim was the means of leading both to the Saviour whom he loved.—Bible Pictures for Little People. By Uncle Harry. 1s. 6d. Old Testament scenes and incidents are detailed in brief, and each one is illustrated. Excellent Sabbath reading for children.

S. W. PARTRIDGE & CO.

Cloister and Closet: A Plea for Meditation. By Rev. C. E. Stone. (1s.) Partridge & Co. A timely plea for a much-forgotten privilege. Never perhaps was it more needed than now.

From the Forecastle to the Pulpit. By Dr. Chas J. Jones. (5s.) Partridge & Co. The venerable author has under this title given a most interesting account of his career among sailors ashore and afloat for a period of fifty years. Having devoted his life for the salvation of "those in peril on the sea," his unceasing labours have been amply rewarded, and not until the great day of reward will the fruit be known. Incidents of a thrilling as well as edifying character are used to illustrate important truths, and these unite in producing a most useful, helpful, and entertaining book. (5s.)

Christ in the Tabernacle. By Frank H. White. S. W. Partridge & Co. 3s. 6d. & 5s. This fifth edition of a well-known and valuable expository work on the Tabernacle types is worthy of warmest commendation. Fresh matter will be found in the chapter headed "The High Priest of Israel," and also in those chapters which treat of the "Offerings." As the author says, the need for the study of the Old Testament is greater than ever; many of the false doctrines which prevail may be traced to ignorance of the writings of Moses and the prophets. The twelve beautiful chromos by which the volume is adorned are in themselves a great help in elucidating the truth.

Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. send an early instalment of bright and pretty books for the coming season. The sixpenny series includes some old favourites, such as "Dick and his Donkey," "Maude's Visit." "The Silver Cup," "Dora Maitland," "Polly's Victory," "Albert Maurice," and "Stella's Nosegay" are collections of short tales for the little ones. "That Boy Bob" is the story of a city waif, who, sheltered and cared for by kind friends, first found his Father in heaven; then an earthly father appeared to claim him and carry him to a new life in Canada. This will be a new favourite. Marion and Augusta (1s. 6d.), by Emma Leslie, contrasts love and selfishness in the characters of a Sunday-school class, and shows how those who are not rich may find a pleasant way of helping the very poor. The Gipsy Queen (2s. 6d.), by the same writer, is a beautiful story. We should guess that the facts were furnished by that indefatigable friend of gipsy children, Mr. George Smith, of Coalville. Jemmy Lawson (1s. 6d.), by E. C. Kenyon, gives the history of a village boy who tried to help his widowed mother by earning money in an unlawful way, that led him into bad company, concealment, and trouble. Although a sad story, as tales of sin always are, it ends in Jemmy finding a refuge, a place of repentance, and finally a new start in life. A very suitable book for village libraries. Clovie and Madge, by Mrs. G. S. Reaney (2s. 6d.), is a very attractive Temperance story, which has for its motto, "To-morrow is the reaping of to-day," and shows how strong drink is the same foe to happiness in the homes of the rich as of the poor. The Better Part, and Mark Desborough's Vow (3s. 6d. each), by Annie S. Swan, are religious love stories, partaking very much of the character of those castles in the air in which many young folks are apt to indulge; the good people, after passing through certain trials and hindrances, are duly rewarded with all the pleasant things of this life, and the bad people get converted in a remarkably easy manner. For books of this class these are extremely well written, the first named being decidedly the best.

LONDON SOLDIERS' HOME.—The Committee of the London Soldiers' Home, 170, Buckingham Palace-road, S.W., have reluctantly come to the conclusion that the Home must very shortly be closed, unless considerably increased subscriptions are forthcoming. It is found that it is impossible to carry on the work without this, and considering how signally Soldiers' Homes have been blessed in the British Army, the Committee are unwilling to believe that the Christian community would permit London to be the only large garrison unprovided with a Home.

CHRISTIAN EVIDENCES.—At the close of a sketch of the open-air work of the Christian Evidence Society, a writer in The Rock says:—"The more I have seen of this work the more I have become convinced of the great importance that, in places specially where the advocates of unbelief are at work, there should be such able defenders of the faith, men trained in the evidences of Christianity, and apt in meeting and overcoming the sneers and objections of Atheists. In addition to the direct results in convincing Secularists of their delusion, there is to a still wider extent the indirect result of establishing the faith of those in danger of entrapment. Dazzled by the superficial show of reason in the arguments of the sceptics, hundreds of such, unable to controvert the statements, are hurried into the vortex of Atheism. To many such the clear and cogent reason of the Christian Evidence lecturer has come as a ray of light on a path that seemed destined to end in gloom."

Letters to the Editor.

CHOIR v. PULPIT.

Dear Sir,—I should like to supplement the excellent remarks of your correspondent, "C. S. K," by the suggestion that greater care might be taken in selecting hymn-books for use in Evangelical churches. Erroneous doctrine may be inculcated by means of hymns perhaps as effectually as by utterances from the pulpit. It was boasted some time ago by the organ of the party which regards the Reformation as a crime, and seeks to bring back upon England the superstitious darkness of the middle ages, that the too popular hymn-book, known as "Hymns, Ancient and Modern," had been one of the most successful agencies in effecting the Catholic Revival.

The employment of unconverted persons in choirs to lead the devotions of the Lord's people is fast becoming a grave scandal. The practice is defended by your correspondent, "A Choirmaster," apparently on the pernicious principle of "doing evil that good may come." The text, "Let both grow together until the harvest," most certainly does not warrant participation in known evil in the Christian Church. I was lately shocked at discovering that an infidel whose delight it seemed to be to deride the word of God, and pour contempt upon the miracles of our Lord, was choirmaster of a Christian church. The first chapter of Isaiah contains a solemn warning against bringing a vain oblation before the Lord, and unreality in our Church Services is, I am convinced from personal observation, doing much to promote the cause of godlessness and infidelity.—Yours faithfully,

Bexley Heath. W. Jeffery.

THE JEWISH BESSARABIAN MOVEMENT.

Sir,—Will you allow me to write a few words upon the interesting information conveyed by Mr. Wilkinson's letter, under date of October 23, upon the Jewish Bessarabian movement in South Russia. What I have to say will briefly divide itself into two parts, viz., (1) Persuasion, and (2) Dissuasion. Touching the first I venture to express, not only my thankfulness that Mr. Wilkinson seems to possess time at his disposal for a visit to the scene of M. Rabinowitz's remarkable work, but to urge that journey upon him as a matter of conscientious duty. In order to form our judgment correctly upon the real state of things, it will be necessary to have the bonâ fide report of one who will personally inspect these "Jewish New Testamental Congregations," and who can be trusted to tell us how far the movement seems to be a genuine work of the Holy Spirit. I both hope and believe it to be so, and, most assuredly, if it be not it will not abide long. I trust, therefore, that the friends of Mr. Wilkinson will come forward with the offerings, which may be needful to defray the expenses of his journey, and towards which (as soon as a subscription list is set on foot) I will myself contribute.

In regard to the second point, I would speak with no less earnestness. But it must now be with the voice of dissuasiveness rather than of persuasion. To be brief, I submit that the proposed bringing of M. Rabinowitz into this country would be highly inexpedient. I am quite aware of the arguments that may be urged in favour of such a visit, some of which are alluded to in Mr. Wilkinson's letter to you of last week, but to my own mind they are all outweighed by considerations of greater importance.

I will mention only two. If this work be really of God, and has hitherto been so signally blessed, why run the risk of injuring it by removing its chief agent from its superintendence and guidance? The absence of a leader from his followers before they are properly and fully established often brings about division or dissension. Again, if M. Rabinowitz has thus far been divinely taught without the aid of man, why run the risk of spoiling his character by introducing him into a country where he would be sure to receive attention, if not adulation, by well-meaning, but not overwise Christians, calculated to take away his simplicity, and to puff him up with a sense of self-importance?

I speak on both these dangers from an experience of other cases; and having done so, I leave it to you and your readers, above all to Mr. Wilkinson himself, to decide whether the visit of M. Rabinowitz, in order to become a lion of the London season in May next, would be good either for himself or his cause.—Your obedient servant,

J. H Titcomb.

MR. TINLING ON FAITH-HEALING.

Dear Sir,—In three August numbers of The Christian, Rev. J. F. B. Tinling wrote an able and most temperate article on Faith-Healing, endeavouring to upset the theory that there is salvation from disease in the atonement of Christ to moderate general expectation of physical recovery by faith, and to account for certain wonderful works in our day by ascribing them to gifts of healing. It occurred to me on reading this, that Mr. Tinling had by accident or on purpose left out strong passages that favoured faith-healers, and honoured with but a bare mention the text to which this theory looks for most support. The readers of Mr. Tinling's paper are kindly asked to note the following points:—

(1) Mr. Tinling has not treated of James v. 14, 15, where there is not the slightest hint that the elders who pray and anoint are men blessed with gifts of healing. They are only ordinary elders. St. James expected this healing would generally (not to say universally) follow the prayerful anointing. If any were sick, the elders were to be sent for, and "the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up." John Wesley says (on good authority, we presume) that this was the only medicine known in the Christian Church for three centuries. Strange that Mr. Tinling should never mention this passage.

(2) Mr. Tinling does tell us why in 2 Chron. xvi. 12, Asa is evidently blamed, because in his disease "he sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians."

(3) Mr. Tinling seems to have forgotten that God said to ancient Israel, "I will take all sickness out of the midst of thee" (conditionally, of course). This promise repeated more than once is, we suppose, the property also of modern Israel, for all the promises are ours, since we are Christ's. So large a promise of bodily blessing for the many ought, I think, not to have been overlooked.

(4) Mr. Tinling is weakest in merely mentioning Matt. viii. 17: "Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses." Instead of treating it he fancies he has exploded the faith-healing view of this passage by simply pointing to four cases of good men who for longer or shorter season were afflicted. Strange that Mr. Tinling should not have told us the exact meaning of this strongest faith-healing passage, but passed it by with not even the shadow of an exposition. How was it that, by faith in this very Scripture or in its similars, John Wesley threw off fever and many a lesser disease, making no profession of a special healing gift? How is it that in many of the well-vouched-for cases of cure inside and outside of homes of healing, the truth contained in this passage has been the one to make the wounded whole? Some of these sufferers, to our knowledge, had no one to pray over or anoint them—no one at hand with a faith-healing fight, and yet by the venture of faith on Jesus as a Saviour from disease, lo and behold, now they are well. I am bound to say that Mr. Tinling's theory of "gifts of healing" will not account for a large number of the facts wherein personal faith, without human intervention, has been the instrument of physical salvation.

(5) What of the four cases which Mr. Tinling has made the strength of his article? They only prove that these were exceptions to the rule. The rule most clearly was, that the sick who sought to the Lord were made whole; the exception—and it was a rare one—that sickness continued. Christians to-day are not likely to have Paul's abundance of revelation; why, then, should they have his thorn in the flesh? It has been suggested that Timothy had injured himself by over-asceticism, and that Paul's recommendation to him amounted to no more than his "ceasing to do evil and learning to do well." A Christian is bound to obey physical laws as well as other men, or pay the penalty. Epaphroditus seems to have allowed his zeal in preaching to outrun his knowledge, and to have suffered in consequence. There is scarcely a doubt that George Whitfield and some other earnest evangelists, by not doing justice to the body, shortened their lives. The key to the illness of Trophimus the Ephesian is not given us, but it most certainly was not, as Mr. Tinling supposes, to save him from the Jerusalem mob; for not on a journey to Jerusalem but on a voyage to Rome he is left at Miletus sick (see Langé on 2 Tim. iv. 20). For some moral reason Christ's own hands were tied in the days of his flesh; what wonder, then, that his servant Paul, for some moral reason, could not take away the sickness of Trophimus? There were exceptions to the rule in New Testament times, and we are not, therefore, surprised if such occur in later times; to wit, Mr. Tinling's case of Oliver Cromwell, the Protector.

Thus, then, we sum the matter up—for the many salvation from disease in Christ, for the few where, as in Paul's case, sickness is allowed to remain, abounding compensation and the promise, "My grace is sufficient for thee." Mr. Tinling's remarks on raising the dead are quite out of place, seeing that no such thing is promised to ordinary believers either in Mark xv. 17, 18, or anywhere else that we know of in Scripture.

A Searcher after Truth.

SPIRITUAL DESTITUTION IN CANADA.

Dear Sir,—The letter of "S. M." in your issue of September 25 is too sweeping in its assertions as to the "deplorable condition" of the Church of England in Canada. I have no right to question your correspondent's statements as to Halifax and Ottawa, not having personal knowledge of the Episcopal ministers of those cities, but he is greatly astray in stating that "Montreal is very much in a similar condition," and by including the whole of the ministers of the Episcopal Church in Canada in his charge that "the Gospel is absolutely ignored." Such rash and hasty utterances on the part of a comparative stranger, whose experience is limited to two small places, does a great injustice to a Church whose evangelistic work in this Dominion is to me most gratifying. I speak the more freely, not being identified with the Episcopal Church. While there is much in it that I would gladly see altered, I am delighted at the rapidly increasing number of earnest evangelical men in its pulpits.

In your editorial note you justly refer to Bishop Baldwin's name as "a synonym for evangelical truth and evangelistic faithfulness." I do not know in any denomination in this Dominion, of a minister more devoted to Christ, or one who sets forth with greater plainness or fervour the glorious Gospel of our Lord Jesus. The Bishop of Montreal is decidedly evangelical, as is a majority of his clergy in this city—there are about twenty. The Bishop of Algoma is a faithful minister of Christ. In the rural districts of this diocese (Montreal) there are a number of evangelical men, some of whom have made themselves noted for their zealous and self-denying labours in preaching the Gospel, holding special evangelistic services, forming Bible-classes, and establishing prayer-meetings. One held meetings for six weeks, and as a result it is hoped that over two hundred were converted. I spent several days with this dear servant of Christ, and rejoiced at what I saw of the grace of God in some of the converts.

Last summer Rev. F. H. Du Vernet, brought to Christ through Bishop Baldwin's ministry, devoted himself to the Lord as a Mission preacher. He has held a number of Missions in different parts of the diocese. His preaching is simple, scriptural, and fervid, and the results have been very blessed.

In Toronto diocese there are a number of lay members of the Episcopal Church—men of means and influence—who are the leaders in Christian work, not only in their own church, but also in general evangelistic work; men whose money and time, and every other talent, are used for the Master. In that city there is Wycliffe College for training "converted" men for the ministry of this church; and part of the training is to send them out to do evangelistic work. The success attending this college, which was established in opposition to an existing college, shows the activity, liberality, and zeal of the evangelical portion of the church.

In the diocese of Huron the election of Dean Baldwin to the Episcopate by a large majority is proof of the influence of the evangelical element in that section of Ontario.

There are, I doubt not, unconverted men in the ministry in Canada. There are Ritualists, more concerned about a garment or a posture than about Christ or the salvation of souls. The awful guilt of such men is something fearful to contemplate. Then again there are some "churchy" men, who nevertheless preach Christ. There are others still more evangelical, who yet lack power, and whose love to saints as saints is limited to their own communion. Thank God, there is still another class which is evangelistic as well as evangelical. They are men who feed upon the Word for their own spiritual upbuilding, and who from that Word bring out things new and old for the edifying of the body of Christ. They yearn for souls, and their hearts breathe out a spirit of love towards all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity.

This much by way of removing the wrong impressions made by your correspondent from Nova Scotia, respecting his own denomination. As to other bodies of Christians, they are pretty much as they are in England, and when this is said English readers will understand the state of things. One can but wish that every pulpit might be occupied by a preacher in living union with Christ. One who sets forth the Gospel in its fulness; who seeks to build up believers, and in whose life and preaching is manifested the power of the Holy Spirit. Should we not pray for this?

Before closing, allow me to call attention to Bishop Baldwin's excellent little work, "Life in a Look," lately reprinted by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, and which received a very favourable notice from Mr. Spurgeon in his Sword and Trowel.

Montreal, October 7. PHILADELPHIA.

Another Montreal correspondent sends a letter on this subject, making special reference to the present action of the rector of Christ Church Cathedral (the successor of Bishop Baldwin), in giving great importance to matters of ritual, to the exclusion of the weightier considerations of practical effort for the salvation of the people. The writer thus concludes his letter:—

"The strictures of your Halifax correspondent, however lamentable, are an honest reflex of Montreal's Episcopacy; and with three or four exceptions will apply to the other denominations. Outside of the Y.M.C.A., which is purely undenominational, there is no fruit-bearing whatever. Still I am satisfied of the existence of great spiritual longings which are dormant for want of food, and I know of no field so promising where an enlightened evangelist would be more "gladly heard." Since Henry Varley's visit, some seven or eight years ago, we have had no awakening, and the good result of his preaching in many families ought to stimulate others to like effort. The city churches are so divided that they have never yet been able to give even Mr. Moody the united call which he requires, and so the hungering hunger on. God's cause languishes into a deadening formalism, and souls are not saved. Mr. George Soltau has just come amongst us, and the interest he attracts bears out my assertion, though I fear his stay will be too short to do much good."

CITY OF LONDON TOTAL ABSTAINERS' UNION.—Last Monday evening Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., presided over a meeting of the officers of Her Majesty's Post-office and their friends, at the City Temple Lecture Hall. Addresses were given by Mr. Arthur Pease, M.P., Rev. George Wilson McCree, and Mr. S. A. Blackwood.

WORCESTER.—An eight days' Gospel Temperance Mission has been held in the Public Hall, Worcester, and was brought to a conclusion on Thursday, Oct. 23. Mrs. J. Lucas, of Sunderland, spoke each evening. By her earnest and eloquent appeals, she fairly rivetted the attention of the crowded meetings. During the Mission 662 new pledges were taken; in addition, a powerful influence was exerted on abstainers, in encouraging them to fresh action in the cause.

Y.M.C. ASSOCIATIONS.—Notes of progress and of various interesting gatherings held, have reached us from the Associations at Southampton, Henley-on-Thames, Reading, Worthing, Brighton, Exeter Hall, Burlington Hall, Ludlow, Kidderminster, and Birmingham. We regret that the pressure on our space this week will not allow of our giving details. A new branch has been opened at King's-cross, as a result of the recent meetings by Messrs. Moody and Sankey at St. Pancras.

AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.—The service on behalf of this institution, at St. Mary Woolnoth, on Wednesday evening week, when the Rev. Dr. Doudney preached the sermon, was very largely attended, many being unable to obtain admittance. The collection amounted to £61 0s. 6d., and this sum it is earnestly desired to make up to £100. A gentleman, long a friend of the Society, has kindly offered the last £5 of the balance required. Contributions will be thankfully received by the Secretary at the Society's office, 83, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

AMERICAN MISSION, LAHORE.—The native Christian congregation connected with this society are making an earnest appeal for funds toward the erection of a new church, the old one having become too small for the growing demand for accommodation. Their plea for seeking extraneous help is based on their priority as a church at Lahore; on their educational institute at Lodiana, through which generations have passed; and on the fact that their well-known printing press has been flooding the land with sacred literature for half a century. Major Conran, Hopton, East Harling, Norfolk, who is much interested in the project, will answer inquiries with respect to it.

CHRISTMAS LETTER MISSION.

BEGUN in 1871 by the distribution of a few packets of homely letters in one or two hospitals in Brighton and London, it is estimated that on Christmas Day in 1883 above 500,000 letters of this Mission, rich in illustrations, were scattered in ten languages, and in different parts of the world. Through England and America, on the Continent and in the Colonies, in India and Burmah, in Bermuda and St. Helena, they had their welcome. We furnish our readers with two extracts from the Report, referring them to its pages for further details:—

"From a Naval Hospital we read: 'The Christmas Letters have given great satisfaction this year, as usual; they were very eagerly sought after. Even a month before the time nurses and patients were inquiring about them, and begging me to remember them. In every ward I have entered since some reference or other has been made by the patients and others who were recipients, to the great pleasure it gave them to find such a beautiful little packet awaiting them on Christmas morning. Some of the cards are treasured up by the men, and by others sent home to their friends. And I do trust and pray that our gracious Father for Christ's sake may grant the desired blessing.'

"A characteristic letter has been received, through Mr. Rouse, Secretary for India, from the Scripture-reader at Umballa. An extract is given:—

'The letters so kindly sent came safely to hand, though rather late, and welcome indeed they were! The patients in hospital who had received some last year were asking if I was not going to give the same this year. The poor fellows began to doubt whether they would come or no, but I told them not to fear; I was sure that some of the kind ladies at home would think of us in this far-off land. You should have seen the faces of many when they saw me come in with a large handful of letters. One who had received one last year said, 'Here they come! I shall send mine home to my mother after I have read it. She was so pleased with the last.' Many of the men send theirs home, so that they become a double blessing. 'Well,' says one poor fellow, 'I've not had a letter from home for six years; I am glad to get this, but is it really for me?' 'Yes,' I said, 'it is sent purposely for you, my friend, by kind ladies at home.' 'May I open it?' he asked. 'Oh, yes!' I said; 'it is all your own. Open it and read it.' 'But is there nothing to pay for postage or nothing?' 'No, nothing to pay—it is free, my boy,' I said, 'without money and without price!' So he opened it, and was not a little pleased when he saw the Christmas card. 'Well,' he said, 'this is nice, and how good of ladies at home to think of us out here in India.' I cast an eye back to see if the men were reading the letters, and I saw nearly all were busily engaged. I was glad and rejoiced. I did pray earnestly that the Lord would bless them, and so He will, and soon the sower and reaper shall rejoice together.'"

By means of the "G.U." or "General Use" Letters, adapted for general, parochial, and district distribution, for miners, factory-hands, soldiers, sailors, B ble-classes, servants, young persons in business, &c. &c., departmental distribution to policemen, fire brigades, postmen, tram and omnibus-drivers, and young women in business, were last Christmas organised in London and in other large towns. For such organisations additional workers are earnestly invited.

If those desiring to utilise the Christmas and New Year season for spreading the Christmas Message, with the added pleasure of a personal greeting, would in and around their own homes scatter some of the letters ready to their hands, they would find it in their power to touch many a case of loneliness and ignorance, and to kindle the responsive "Some one cares for me!" which has in so many cases preceded the deeper gratitude to One "who gave Himself for me," of whom each missive speaks in simplest language. These servants, these tradesmen: with their Christmas boxes, those cabmen on the stand, the workmen whom we have sought to reach, the women toiling in the adjacent laundry, that lodging-house servant to whom we spoke for Christ in the summer, the railway porters at the station, the tenantry on the home estate, the "hands" in the large business house for whose souls we have longed, the people in that lonely hamlet, the sick, not only in hospitals, but in their own chambers—these, and many more, would welcome the kindly greeting of "A Christmas letter for you," each letter being sent forth as a "King's messenger."

A line to the printers, Messrs. Hazell, Watson, & Viney, 6, Kirby-street, Hatton-garden, E.C., will procure a catalogue and paper of "Hints to Workers," by return of post, and the Central Secretary, Miss F. Jameson, 44, Clanricarde-gardens, W., will gladly furnish full particulars as to hospitals, workhouses, and departmental distributions for which co-operation is specially needed.

Help with means is earnestly solicited. The increase of openings and calls for the Christmas distributions involves a far larger outlay than formerly. While grateful thanks are rendered to past and present kind helpers, may we remind our non-subscribing readers that even a few shillings will go far towards the purchase of a packet of letters, furthering the addition of this hospital, of that distant station, to the Secretary's list? Collecting cards may be obtained from the Treasurer, Miss Helen Bewes, 67, Ladbroke-grove, W. The general organising Secretary of the Mission is Miss E. Steele Elliot, 66, Mild-may-park, N.

LATYMER-ROAD MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—Our week's work at this Mission begins with the Sunday morning school. A special service for the children is afterwards held, and this is repeated in the evening. There is also afternoon school, attended by some 330 boys, girls, and infants. A special service for adults is held in the evening.

On Monday evenings we hold Gospel Temperance meetings, out of which a Christian Working Men's Club has been formed. The Boys' Evening Shelter is open every night. As many as 300 different boys visit the rooms during the winter season. We would gladly welcome any friend who would occasionally visit these lads in their shelter, give them a short Gospel address, or sing a few hymns to them and with them. We open a shelter for the girls every evening but Saturday, and as many as fifty will often be found in the room. A new hall was opened last May, and one of its class-rooms is set apart for the girls. Visitors will find the girls busily engaged in sewing, and they are trained, as far as possible, in habits of cleanliness and kindness. The nursery is very popular among the mothers of the neighbourhood, many of whom work in the laundries with which Latymer-road abounds. As many as twenty or thirty infants will be found toddling about, swinging in the baby chairs, sleeping in the comfortable cribs, or playing on the floor. Our Mothers' Meeting is conducted on Monday afternoons.

Besides these there are our Farthing Bank, Bands of Hope, Soup Kitchen, Invalid Children's Dinner Table, Library, and other agencies for good, which are carried on regularly as funds and opportunity permit. The Children's Convalescent Homes, Broadwater, Worthing (Girls) and Ramsgate (Boys), are an outcome of our Mission, but are conducted by a separate committee.

Gifts of left-off wearing apparel for adults and children are always useful, as many of our poor children are prevented attending the Mission through lack of garments.

REST FOR THE WEARY AND THE SICK.—Miss Rosalind Hosking, of the St. Luke's Invalid and Convalescent Home, Finsbury House, Ramsgate, makes a strong appeal for increased support. Owing to the growing demands of the Home a new wing has been added. It has also been found desirable to purchase a piece of land at the back to prevent its being built on. Miss Hosking states that she continues to receive many expressions of thankfulness both for physical and spiritual good received, and she appeals for special help at this time.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

Neuchatel.—From En Avant we learn that the Salvation Army is carrying on its work with some success, notwithstanding the expulsion of its leaders and the continued persecution.

Russian Intolerance.—A subscriber to Der Evangelist, Bremen, lately received his copy in South Russia with a column officially blackened over, so that not a letter could be read. Any remarks upon Russia must be very cautiously made, or the entrance of the paper into the empire will be altogether stopped.

Berne.—The population of this canton, formerly so vigorous, is continually decreasing. Two-thirds of the recruits are declared physically incapable of military service. What is the cause of this degeneracy? It is very evident that it may very largely be attributed to the increased consumption of brandy, which is taking the place of milk.—Journal Rélégieux.

The Prussian Bible Society celebrated its seventieth anniversary in Berlin October 15. The report states that 69,659 Bibles and 15,754 New Testaments were issued last year; and since its foundation in October, 1814, 1,283,254 Bibles and 223,597 Testaments have been distributed. In addition to this, Major Westphal has supplied the Prussian army with the Holy Scriptures, the British and Foreign Bible Society having placed at his disposal for this purpose 135,000 Bibles and 670,000 Testaments since 1831.—Der Evangelist.

Chicago.—Major Whittle is conducting evangelistic services at Avenue Church, Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. Guinness spent a week in the city and proceeded thence to Colorado. Their meetings were well attended and their words have stimulated missionary interest. Their report of the work of the East London Missionary Training Institute has greatly aided in the carrying out of Mr. Moody's plan for the establishing of a similar school in Chicago. There is now a prospect of its being in operation this autumn. Professors in the various theological seminaries and ministers of all denominations are in hearty sympathy with the enterprise. The object will be to train missionaries, not pastors.

An Eager Learner.—Christian women in India work in the dispensary as well as in the zenana, and many a touching incident shows

> "The untaught heathen waits to know
> The joy the Gospel will bestow."

From the last report of the Religious Tract Society we learn that a lady was dispensing medicine, when a woman presented herself holding in her hand a crumpled bit of paper on which were printed the words, "God is love." "These are good words," she said. "Do you think that your God would love me?" She had walked twenty miles to ask the question. There are hundreds of thousands of hearts that would welcome these glad tidings. Ought they not forthwith to be made known in all the world to every creature?—The Freeman.

Spanish Evangelisation Society.—At the late Clifton Conference, a well-attended meeting was held on behalf of this Society. Mr. Donald Matheson, after a glance at the history of Spain and the difficulties connected with religious work in that part, said that those now at work in that country were face to face with some very hard facts, a prominent one being the extreme fanaticism of the lower classes. At the same time, there could be no question that the preaching of the Gospel was attracting large numbers of people who, having heard it for the first time, had been so impressed by it as to flock in crowds to hear it again. The Spanish Evangelisation Society was founded for the purpose of carrying on religious efforts in carefully selected centres, from which Evangelists might be sent forth to itinerate. The first step taken—that of circulating tracts in connection with the work of the Bible Society—had proved to be the right one. Tracts have been circulated instead of the Bible because of the difficulty of introducing the Bible itself among so priest-ridden a people. By degrees, however, the desire to get the Bible became so strong that when they heard that copies were to be obtained on certain ships which had come in they flocked thither in crowds. Christian effort, wisely directed, would prove of great advantage to the spiritual welfare of the country. Mr. W. W. Greene, who had recently returned from Spain, fully endorsed the remarks of Mr. Matheson. He told of good work being done in Seville, Cadiz, Villafranca, and other parts of Spain in which for many years there had been a lack of workers. There was an immense work to be done, and he asked for the liberal and prayerful co-operation of friends at Clifton to enable the Society vigorously to proceed with it.

Savoy Mission.—At a meeting in the house of Pastor Clement de Faye, now residing at rue Malagnou, near Geneva, Switzerland, it was agreed formally to constitute a Mission to Savoy for the propagation of the Gospel. The meeting unanimously appointed Pastor de Faye the future director of the Mission, and Pastor Goty the sub-director.

Denmark.—The British and Foreign Bible Society is very active in Denmark. Over 40,000 portions of Holy Scripture has been distributed, 10,500 Bibles, and 16,500 New Testaments. The colporteurs have sold 15,500 copies. The demand increases so rapidly that the printers find it difficult to meet the supply. 9500 Bibles and portions were also sent last year to London for the use of Danish sailors and emigrants.

Lithuania.—The Baptists here are meeting with great persecution. They are beaten, their fields and meadows trampled down, their woods destroyed, their houses broken into, &c. The authorities when appealed to say they have no jurisdiction over Baptists; if they will return to the orthodox church all shall be restored with interest. Their German brethren are doing some little to help them in their great need.

Seamen in Spain.—The Bishop of Gibraltar has placed £100 a year at the disposal of the Missions to Seamen for the support of a Scripture reader for the exclusive service of the 62,000 British seamen who annually visit Bilbao. The chaplain at that port has long been urgently desirous of additional aid for which funds were not forthcoming. A reader who has acquired eighteen months' experience at Cardiff has been selected for the post.

A Baptist Evangelist has been going from island to island on the coast of Esthonia, one of the Baltic provinces, where he has had good meetings in barns and private houses. He found many believers there, of whom he baptized more than 120. Many others heard the Word with readiness. In some places the most riotous and determined opposition was shown. There is a great lack of Christian literature among the Esthonians. They possess only a very poorly translated Bible and hymn-book. The inhabitants are extremely poor.

Sailors' Rest at St. Malo.—Not long since a Sailors' Rest and Reading-room was opened at St. Malo for the use of sailors visiting that port and St. Servan. We are informed that some 7000 English and American seamen do so in the course of the year; and when the harbours are complete the numbers will, no doubt, increase. In the first half-year of its existence the Rest was used by nearly 2000 sailors. Help is needed in the shape of money contributions and gifts of illustrated and other papers. These may be sent to Mr. J. Amy, agent, South Western Co., St. Malo, France.

Spain.—Mr. Armstrong, in his last circular-letter on the Evangelisation of Spain, thinks the light of the Gospel has been brought to Spain, but the people have refused it. "They know that the Gospel is true, and that the Church of Rome is false," but they choose the latter because it permits them to live in their sins, provided they conform to certain ceremonies. Mr. A. believes more attention should be given to the villages than to the towns; from his own experience he can testify that where the Gospel is faithfully preached, some conversions do follow. Spain needs two married foreign missionaries in each of its forty-nine provinces. In the present state of Spanish society woman is an indispensable aid to the missionary. Mdlle. R. Matthey has just begun a Y.W.C.A. in Valladolid, which seems likely greatly to help our isolated young.

Central Africa.—Letters have just come from my son, F. S. Arnot, dated Bihe It was only after much persuasion on the part of a Portuguese trader, and sundry mysterious "hints" from the Headman of the Barotsi people, that he was induced to leave for the Portuguese territory. After he left a civil war broke out, which resulted in his old friend, the King, being killed. This shows the gracious hand of God in taking him away from danger. On getting to Bihe, in company with the trader, he heard of the sore distress of the American missionaries in Bailandu, so he pushed on, and only arrived to witness the destruction of the property of the missionaries. The people got alarmed, and fancied he had dropped from the skies, so we took advantage of their confusion, and called a "court of inquiry" of the chiefs, which resulted in their sending a letter after the missionaries to bring them back. He waited twelve days at Bailandu and returned to Bihe, but intends to go to Benguella, on the west coast, and after getting supplies he intends again to return to the interior, but much to the north of his old station, where the climate is healthier, and where no missionary has been.

To shelter respectable Young Women in Trouble.

FOR rules of admission to the Anchorage House, and full particulars of the work of the Ancherage Mission, and for trained servants, apply (by letter only) to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley, Rosslyn House, Grove End-road, N.W., London.

Many of the young women admitted being mothers or about to become so, the extra care they require, and (when friendless) the help that the Mission must give towards paying for their infants at nurse during the first few months of the mother's return to service or other occupation, causes the work to be unusually costly, and subscriptions are much required, sent either to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley (President of the Ladies' Committee) at her private address as above, or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

DAYBREAK IN MOROCCO.

ONE of the most interesting missionary meetings we have attended for some time was that held in the Lecture Hall, 186, Aldersgate-street, last Thursday evening. It was in connection with the Kabyle Mission; the main object was to hear a statement from Rev. E. F. Baldwin, who goes out to labour in Morocco, and to commend him, with his family, to the grace of God in his new sphere of work. We could not but feel a special and thankful interest in the occasion when we heard Mr. Baldwin say that it was through reading in our columns accounts of the work of the Kabyle Mission that his heart was first stirred up to devote himself to the evangelisation of North Africa. The American Foreign Mission Board sent him to Algiers last spring to spy out the land, and a short stay there enabled him to take back a good report. Failing to get his American friends to take up the work permanently, he, in the providence of God, opened correspondence with Mr. Glenny, of Barking, with the result that he is now going to Tangier as the representative of the Kabyle Mission. Mr. Baldwin is accompanied by his wife and seven children, all of whom, he says, have been dedicated to missionary work from their birth. His eldest daughter, Carrie, was present at the meeting and sang very sweetly the most appropriate hymn—

> I know not what awaits me,
> God kindly veils mine eyes;
> Where He leads I will follow,
> I will follow all the way."

Mrs. Baldwin also spoke some earnest words of trust in God as to the future, and of desire for the consecration of her children to the service of God. She is evidently a true helpmeet to her husband in the work of his life. They go forth trusting that all their needs will be met, as they have been in the past. Mr. Baldwin had some remarkable experiences to tell on this point, as to the faithfulness of God in answering prayer. It was intensely touching, too, to listen to his story of the conversion of his boy, eight years old, through the father's reading to him of the incident told by Mr. Hudson Taylor at the last Mildmay Conference, about his little girl (eight years old) in China.

A greatly added interest was given to the proceedings by Mr. Glenny's running description of the Berber races, and the efforts that have been made to Christianise them. Major-General Haig, who presided, was also able to tell from personal observation of the wonderful readiness that exists among these South African peoples to receive the Gospel message. In the face of all the facts, it seems a most remarkable thing that so few Gospel messengers, both men and women, have gone from Christian England to a land very desirable in all respects as a healthful place of residence, and less than a week's distance. Christ's last command was to witness for Him in Judea, in Samaria, and in the uttermost parts of the earth. English Christians are doing a good deal to witness for Him in Judea (at home), and they are beginning to awake to the claims of "the uttermost parts of the earth." The near lands, such as Continental Europe and North Africa, which may stand for our Samaria, we have well-nigh overlooked. We trust Mr. Baldwin and his family may be but the pioneers of many more.

THE KILBURN HOUSE OF REST.—The weekly Friday evening meetings at Miss Mason's headquarters for the weary workers are now fairly re-opened for the winter season. Last week Mr. J. P. Wigstone gave an account of missionary work in North-west Spain. He reports, to the praise of God, that whole families have been converted; priests, publicans, with some of the lowest and vilest of the people, have become "new creatures in Christ Jesus." We ask prayer for Mr. Wigstone and his wife, who hope soon to return to their important sphere of labour. Miss Mason cordially invites any missionaries passing through London to find their way to 8, Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn Park, on these Friday evenings. Tea at six; meeting at seven.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

HOCKLEY, ESSEX.—Mr. Harris, of the Evangelisation Society, has closed a fortnight's services in the Wesleyan Chapel, which have been well attended and greatly blessed. E. H. JOLLY.

THE CHURCH ARMY.—The Bishop of Oxford has kindly contributed £10 to the Church Army, whose beneficial working he has seen in his diocese. The winter campaign is now commencing, and funds are urgently needed.

SOUTH NORWOOD.—Mr. J. J. Brown, the City missionary in this district, is doing an excellent work according to accounts that we have received. A new Mission hall was lately opened, and we are glad to learn that it has already been the birthplace of some souls.

STANWELL.—A good work is being done here by Mr. Scoones, notwithstanding many difficulties. The room is used for the purposes of a club during the week, and great need is felt of a room where services can be held in the week and a Sabbath-school on the Sunday. The men who attend are of the agricultural class, who are unable to support the work. Mr. Scoones would greatly appreciate the co-operation of Christian friends, and is worthy of assistance. His address is 3, Edward-terrace, Wood's-road, Burchell-road, Peckham, S.E.

DOVER.—Major Selby, of Dover, writes:—"We feel thankful to God for the visit to Dover of Mr. and Mrs. Somerset Gardner, who, during an eight days' Gospel Mission in October, have been mightily used of the Lord to the building up of the Saints, the reclaiming of backsliders, and the bringing into the kingdom of sinners. Mr. Somerset Gardner's addresses from the texts, 'Let us not sleep' (1 Thess. v. 6) and from that in Heb. xii. 2, 'Looking unto Jesus,' were most powerful." Mr. and Mrs. Somerset Gardner are now evangelising at Southampton.

VILLAGE WORK.—Mr. and Mrs. Diprose, a year ago, took a house and began Gospel work at Michael Church, Ross. They are now enabled to thank the Lord for sending them there, seeing his guiding hand through the success given to their efforts. People walk six or seven miles to and from the services. A cheerful, comfortable iron building has been put up to seat over two hundred. An anniversary meeting was lately held; many thanked the Lord for the work. The workers freely give their services, without money and without price. Under these circumstances some readers may be stirred up to help in paying off the debt that remains on the building, as most of those who attend are working people. H. TURNER.
Retreat, Bodenham, Leominster.

THE COMING LONDON MISSION.—A glance at the arrangements, says The Rock, so far as they have yet been completed, for the approaching Mission in the City and East London will hardly reassure those who do not look forward to the undertaking with high anticipations. The feature that strikes us most forcibly in the list of missioners is that comparatively few of them are at all well-known men. We notice, of course, Canon Body and Mr. Aitken, and two or three others almost equally familiar in connection with Mission work, but it is no injustice to the greater number of the preachers included to say that, whatever their gifts may be, they are not, as yet, generally acknowledged. The work requires special gifts, of which personal holiness and zeal, though the chief, are by no means the only ones, and we are more than doubtful whether the Church of England possesses suitable ministers enough for the work that is proposed to be carried on from November 16 to 23.

HOMES OF HOPE, Nos. 4, 5 & 6, Regent-square, Gray's-inn-road, London, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

The applications are most distressing, and the funds are quite exhausted.

THE EMPIRE LAMP

(RIPPINGILLE'S PATENT)

IS THE

MOST BRILLIANT & ECONOMICAL DOMESTIC LIGHT EXTANT.

It equals Gas for simplicity, but surpasses it for illuminating power.

It burns without a chimney, a pine-shaped globe only being required, which has never been known to break from the heat of the flame. It will give more light than any other lamp with a wick of equal size. The combustion is so perfect that it deodorises the oil and burns absolutely without smell, giving an intense pure white and beautiful light. It is unrivalled for simplicity in lighting, cleaning, and trimming, and is, in fact, the perfection of artificial light.

Suitable for Cottage, Mansion, Churches, Chapels, &c.

Illustrated Catalogue, with full particulars, and giving valuable hints on domestic lighting and management of lamps, free on application.

"We can recommend it to all those who know what it is to dwell in the secret place of the Most High."
Sunday School Chronicle.

"The 'Sure Mercies of David' is a very valuable book. It sets forth most beautifully the rich blessings which are treasured up in Christ for the believer. We have been struck with Mrs. Shipton's numberless references to Scripture, often accompanied, as they are, by some remark which reveals some beauty that would be unobserved by most people. The narratives contained in the book will be found interesting as well as helpful to those who wish to learn how to live near to Christ."—Christian Era.

Songs of the Gospel.

"These Hymns have abundant 'swing' and 'march' in them, and will be found largely suitable for evangelistic work. And so, indeed, they should be; for the chief raison d'être for any new hymn-book must be the special value it may have in connection with Gospel effort. It is gratifying to learn from Mr. McGranahan's preface that the 'Songs of the Gospel' have for the most part been written—words and music—by those engaged in evangelistic work. This is as it should be. The labourers in the harvest-field best understand what is likely to be of service to them in their work."

SEARCHING the SCRIPTURES

In Order to Abiding Communion with God.

Also, Suggestions for Bible Reading and Study, and a Plan for Consecutive Daily Reading. By Dr. J. Anderson. Cloth, Bev. Boards, 3s. 6d.

"A very valuable work, in which attention is drawn to the necessity for quiet, thoughtful Bible reading, as a means of promoting abiding communion with God."—The Rock (Second Notice).

"Dr. Anderson's counsels and suggestions are most valuable; and the design of his work is one which will meet with ready acceptance from those who have learned that God's Word is a lamp to their feet and a light to their path."—The Christian Week.

"It is impossible to speak too highly of this volume, which is the result of immense labour and consecrated talent. To the Bible Student, the Sunday-school Teacher, or Local Preacher, its aid is indispensable."—Christian Age.

"OUT OF EGYPT."

A Series of Addresses and Bible Readings on the Exodus of Israel, and its Spiritual Lessons. By Rev. Dr. Pentecost. Tinted Covers, 2s.; Cloth Limp, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"Dr. Pentecost's power as a teacher and expositor of the Word is anew displayed in these Addresses; and we are not surprised to learn that there has been an earnest demand for their publication."

Word and Work.

"The Readings have lately been given to large numbers on the Author's late visit to London; and most profitable and spiritual they are."

Footsteps of Truth.

"This is a powerful, brilliant, and thrilling work. Dr. Pentecost is not only a man of marked ability and scholarship, but he is a pulpit orator of the highest order. He at once arrests the attention, penetrates the heart, moves the affections, and directs the conduct."—Oldham Chronicle.

"IN THE VOLUME OF THE BOOK";

Or, The Profit and Pleasure of Bible Study.

By Rev. Dr. Pentecost. With Introductions by Revs. Joseph Cook and J. H. Vincent, D.D. Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Limp, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d. EIGHTH EDITION.

"We cannot too highly commend this little publication. Plain, concise, thorough, and spiritual, it is a handbook differing from all others, inasmuch as it takes up the spiritual rather than the material aspect of the Word of God."—Preachers' Analyst.

"We have read this work with unusual pleasure. It is full of healthy thinking; it contains a large amount of information; abounds with wise counsels; is tersely and racily written; and is certain to captivate every reader who has even the least desire to be instructed in the many matters with which, in the preparation of it, the author had to deal."

Baptist Magazine.

JOHN, WHOM JESUS LOVED.

A Sketch of the Character, Writing, Theology, and Influence of the Beloved Disciple. By Rev. J. Culross, D.D., M.A., Principal of Bristol Baptist College. Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 3s. 6d.

"In Dr. Culross' new work, entitled 'John, whom Jesus Loved,' we have found a book. It is part of our appointed suffering in this present life to be compelled to winnow heaps of literature, with great result in chaff and dust, and small gain in bread corn; and therefore our rejoicing is the greater when grain comes to our garner as clean provender in good weight and measure.

"It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in The Sword and Trowel.

"BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR, AND KNOCK."

Christ's Message to the Church at Laodicea. By Rev. J. Culross, D.D., M.A. With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d. Cheap Edition, Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.

"Two evils are obvious enough among us—Ritualism and Rationalism. But there is a third, more terrible and more insidious than either of these—the Laodicean spirit, with its blended luke-warmness and pride. It is this spirit that Dr. Culross examines, describes, and rebukes. . . . All who admire Dr. Culross' insight, his delicacy of perception, his curious felicity of language, his broad and tender sympathies, his grasp of great truths, will welcome this volume, and hope for like expositions of the preceding six Epistles."—The Freeman.

"THY FIRST LOVE."

Christ's Message to the Church at Ephesus. With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece. Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 2s. 6d.

"The glow, as from a golden sunset, which his imagination sheds over his style, gives it a great charm."—British Messenger.

"Those already familiar with Dr. Culross' previous devotional works will need no more than the mention of this book. To those not so familiar, we may say that we do not know higher-toned or healthier devotional literature, of the evangelical type, than is represented by this and Dr. Culross' previous works. This work is instructive, suggestive, full of spiritual force, and at the same time strong and manly; these latter adjectives we find it impossible to use concerning many of the devotional books produced in our day. Because we may honestly use them in this case, we heartily commend this book for the refreshment of our busy teachers."—Sunday School Chronicle.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MOSES

As Seen in the Tabernacle and its various Offerings.

By Rev. G. Rodgers. With Frontispiece.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.

"A very spiritual as well as instructive little book."—Churchman's Monthly Penny Magazine.

"No young Christian, and especially no preacher, should be ignorant of the truth which this small volume very simply but very forcibly enunciates."

The Christian.

"We cordially recommend this short and very suggestive treatise."—The Bulwark.

THE GOSPEL IN LEVITICUS:

Types and Foreshadowings of the Great Redemption.

By Rev. James Fleming, D.D. Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 2s. 6d.

"There is much wholesome spiritual food in this book; and no Christian can read it without being greatly refreshed in soul."—Fountain.

"The work is practical and useful."—Methodist.

"The author's object is the praiseworthy one of presenting to the reader a clearer apprehension of the relation of one part of Scripture with another, and in this object he has been successful. The book contains much profitable reading for the matured Christian, whilst it is calculated to excite amongst all classes of Christians a deeper interest in the typology of the Old Testament."

OF WEEKLY CASES.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "The Christian," WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.
Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

DECLINE.—CASE at Ashby (Linc.).

On April 12 I received (on my printed form of questions and answers) a full statement of this patient's case (Sarah Hannah Stow).

[Let me here observe that such a statement will suffice if the Question Sheet (to be obtained from me) is properly filled up. There is no real necessity for any patient to come to see me, and advice and medicine is sent to any part of the kingdom immediately upon the case being thus placed before me.]

Consumption had been in the family. Complaint commenced with pains in the side, with other usual symptoms, which gradually got worse. For two months the flesh and strength had rapidly declined.

On August 4 I received a letter from the patient's father, in which he says: "Many thanks for the restoration of my daughter, by the blessing of God upon your medicine. She is quite well, and has taken a situation. I should have written before, but waited to see how she might be when she resumed work. I am happy to say there has no symptom returned.—E. Stow, Ashby, Brigg, Lincolnshire."

I may add that I reduced the charge for medicine, the case being recommended to me as worthy of such consideration by Rev. J. Jackson, Wesleyan Preacher, of the Brigg Circuit.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

NORWEGIAN SLIPPERS.

OWING to the immense success that these met with when we introduced them last spring (some families having as many as 17 pairs), and the universal satisfaction they gave, we have been induced to again order a large consignment, and to offer them once more at the former remarkably low and popular prices.

THE NORWEGIAN HOUSE SLIPPERS

are made of felt throughout and trimmed with imitation fur, machine sewn, strong, comfortable, good looking, and equal to many slippers charged 3s. and 3s. 6d. for. The immense feeling of relief that is experienced on putting on a pair of easy slippers after a day's work, whether to the prince or the peasant, accounts for the immense numbers we sell. Ladies and gentlemen buy them because they are good looking enough for the drawing-room and boudoir, and poor people buy them because, in addition to this, they are so wonderfully cheap. Although we offer a reduction if several pairs are taken, yet if you doubt their genuineness do not send for more than one pair first. They can be had in either scarlet or black, carriage free, at the following prices:—Boys', Girls', and Ladies', 1s. 6d.; Gentlemen's, 1s. 9d. If three pairs are taken at a time, 2d. per pair less. Six pairs, 4d. pair less. Exact length of foot must be sent with all orders; and to procure at these prices orders must be sent within 28 days.

Please mention the name of this paper when ordering.

THE KENSINGTON MUSICAL TOP. A most wonderful novelty. Directly this top is spun it commences playing music, owing to musical notes inside. Post free, 15 stamps. Larger size, 20 stamps.

THE KENSINGTON MAGIC LANTERN AND SLIDES. A black japanned Magic Lantern, fitted with 2 lenses, lamp, and 24 coloured pictures, complete. Carriage free, 1s. 9d. Larger size, with 36 pictures, superior make, 3s. Larger still, 5s. 6d., 8s. 6d.

THE KENSINGTON TOOL CARD. 12 very superior Tools, mounted on card. Carriage free, 1s. 6d. Most wonderful value for money, and selling by thousands.

The Earl of Shaftesbury writes: "Whoever reads it must derive some benefit or other from such a narrative. . . God be thanked, there are choice and kindred spirits to whom the Memoir will be full of instruction and joy. The truth is, such a life puts us all to shame, when we see what a fellow-man has done, and what we have left undone. The book, too, is short and compact. It may be read at a sitting, and it contains within a few pages, more than the substance of many Three Volumes, which are both costly and tiresome. . ."

Songs of the Gospel.

"These Hymns have abundant 'swing' and 'march' in them, and will be found largely suitable for evangelistic work. And so, indeed, they should be; for the chief raison d'être for any new hymn-book must be the special value it may have in connection with Gospel effort. It is gratifying to learn from Mr. McGranahan's preface that the 'Songs of the Gospel' have for the most part been written—words and music—by those engaged in evangelistic work. This is as it should be. The labourers in the harvest-field best understand what is likely to be of service to them in their work."

Minister of the Congregational Church, Eastbourne.

EXTRACT.

"That affliction of every kind appointed by God is 'for our profit, that we may be partakers of his holiness,' is too obvious to need to be insisted upon, and to most Christians it will be equally obvious that no kind of affliction tends more to produce this result than bodily pain and weakness endured in faith."

The Christian.

LABOUR, LAW, AND PRAYER.

MANY Christian men are satisfied that in dealing with the poor we must act in accordance with the laws or the science of Political Economy. For example: it is of no use to interfere with the prices of labour; these must and will regulate themselves by a necessary and inevitable law. But what is the law but this—

"The good old plan—
That they may take who have the power,
And they may keep who can"?

What is it but the law of fallen nature, the law of human selfishness? It is certainly not the law of God, for He says, by his Apostle James: "Behold, the hire of the labourers who have reaped your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped have entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth." Evidently the Holy One recognises a rate of wages other than that which is the result of an excessive and grinding competition.

And James does but echo Isaiah, who asks: "What mean ye that ye beat my people to pieces, and grind the faces of the poor?" And of Amos, who denounces "the kine of Bashan, which oppress the poor, which crush the needy, which say to their masters, 'Bring, and let us drink.'" And of Jeremiah, who tells the son of Josiah, "Thy father judged the cause of the poor and needy; then it was well with him. Was not this to know Me? saith the Lord. But thine eyes and thy heart are but for thy covetousness, for to shed innocent blood, and for oppression, and for violence to do it. Therefore, thus saith the Lord, they shall not lament for him. Ah, my brother! Ah, sister! Ah, Lord! or ah, his glory! He shall be buried with the burial of an ass, drawn and cast forth beyond the gates of Jerusalem."

Does the righteousness or the philanthropy of God our Saviour sanction any law which turns the screw upon the worker to the last limit of endurance? Is the attainment of this limit the sign of the end of the day of grace? It would seem that some think so; perhaps they are not far wrong. A friend of ours was buying some material for the clothing of her little children, when the foreman of the department said: "The end must be drawing near; things cannot go on much longer as they are." "What do you mean?" asked the lady; "I never heard you talk like that before." "Well, it has come to this: our firm cannot get another penny out of our hands; we cannot get them to work for a farthing less than they are doing now." The screw could not be given another turn. If such a scale of wages be regulated by a law, is it not the law concerning which the Psalmist inquires of Almighty God, the Judge of all the earth: "Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with Thee, that frameth mischief by a law?"

Political Economy, if it be a science, appears to be one of those which in the eyes of the only wise God are "falsely so called." As in the case of other sciences, from the positions taken a few years ago it retrogrades to-day. The Daily News, speaking of the Socialist Democracy of Germany, and of its spread in England, says:—

"It is impossible to deny that in this country a great reaction has set in since the days when Lord Macaulay denounced paternal government as odious, and Manchester Reformers held that the postal system ought to be left in the hands of private enterprise and competition. . . . The theory that everything can be left to individual philanthropy, private enterprise, and free competition, has had to be qualified by many grave considerations. Mr. Gladstone put the case admirably. . . . You cannot deal with the people around you as you might recommend somebody else to deal with the inhabitants of Jupiter and Saturn. It cannot be done, and there is an end of the matter. . . .

"The mistake of the political economist—and we are speaking now rather of the pedantic and commonplace amongst them—was to put out of consideration altogether the hard, substantial fact that there are human feelings. Political economy professed to teach nations how they might become wealthy. Assuming that the teachings were in themselves correct (and the teachings of political economists were sometimes very incorrect), it would still have to be said of many political economists that they failed to take due account of human nature. There are times when men will go out of their way to help or to relieve or to save in defiance of any dogma. The physician is surely right who tells that a plunge into a winter sea in one's clothes would be likely to bring on a severe cold. But a man who sees a child fall off the deck of a steamer will plunge into the winter sea all the same, in the hope of saving the child; and we all applaud him for his disregard of the doctor. England is at present engaged in an effort to deal with a subject which some time ago would have been held to be entirely outside the sphere of a State's business. Legislation will undoubtedly be called upon soon to do something for the housing of the poor.

"Of course, whatever is done must be done with full recognition of the rules of a true political economy, and must keep in view that the object of the State is only to help certain persons or certain classes in order that they may be afterwards able to help themselves. But it is certain that even in going thus far we are departing widely from the principles which seemed most to be coming into favour in this country some twenty years ago."

Yes, it is a hard and substantial fact that our faithful Creator made us with human feelings. It is very hard perhaps, but political economists must "take account of human nature," otherwise human nature will take account of them. Yes, the hard and substantial fact that there are human feelings, and the fact that even trodden worms will turn, cannot safely be forgotten as a factor in any true political economy. The Worm of the twenty-second Psalm, now at the right hand of the Majesty on high, is coming again with power and great glory, and the Psalmist says to the living God that "He shall judge thy people with righteousness, and thy poor with judgment. He shall judge the poor of the people, He shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor. He shall spare the poor and needy, and shall save the souls of the needy. He shall redeem their souls from deceit and violence, and precious shall their blood be in his sight." Political economists must take account of HIM.

Is it not time to have done with the cruel cant that declares that we must work iniquity by a law, that we must put our poor workers on the rack? Our forefathers and mothers were racked and burned because, as Christ's witnesses they tormented those who dwelt upon the earth. By an inevitable law they gnashed upon them with their teeth, and hated them, and killed them. But was it the law of God or the law of sin? And is the law which political economists appeal to as ruling wages and fixing the prices of commodities, and putting the poor on the rack, and breaking the needy on the wheel of so-called Progress, a law of God or a law of sin?

Is it impossible for Christian manufacturers, Christian merchants, Christian retailers, Christian purchasers, to pray and to consult together, until the God who made and loveth all reveals some way by which the gold and garments of the well-to-do may not be rusted and cankered with the bloody sweat and tears of blood of broken-spirited and broken-hearted workers? nor children and girls be driven by the law of sin to become (in the words of no inexperienced authority) beasts at the East-end and devils in the West, the prey of men, young and older, who ought to have been brothers and fathers to them, but who employ fiendish men and women to provide victims for their unholy and cruel appetite?

Woe unto you, royal and noble and gentle hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte (God pity her!), and when she is made ye make her twofold more the child of hell than yourselves. Woe unto you! for ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith. Woe unto you! for ye are like unto whited sepulchres, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones and all uncleanness.

But to return to the labourers. Thousands of our girls and women cannot live upon the wages they receive; and Christian employers say, "We cannot swim against the current of trade; we should be glad to pay more, but competition is so severe, the demand for cheapness is so exacting, that if we attempted to increase wages we should be swept into bankruptcy." Are we really delivered to do all these abominations? Does God see us not? Has the Lord forsaken the earth? Are we driven to say, "There is no hope—no, for I have loved strangers, and after them will I go. There is no hope; but we will walk after our own devices, and we will do every one the imagination of his evil heart"? It was the consummation of Israel's iniquity, when they took this ground, that there was no hope for righteousness; that they must work iniquity. "Then said He unto me, The iniquity of the house of Israel and Judah is exceeding great, and the land is full of blood, and the city of perverseness; for they say, The Lord hath forsaken the earth, and the Lord seeth not. And as for me also, mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity; but I will recompense their way upon their head."

Is there no cause to apprehend the same recompense upon ourselves, if we adopt the same God-dishonouring pleas? Are not our cities full of the blood of souls? Are not the Lamentations of Jeremiah the prosaic and sober truth about ourselves? Do not the luxury and the hunger, the oppression and the lawlessness, the violence and the suffering, the fraud and the shame, all appeal to the people of God: "Arise, cry out in the night; in the beginning of the watches pour out thine heart like water before the face of the Lord; lift up thy hand toward Him for the life of thy young children that faint for hunger in the top of every street"?

There is to be a day for prayer and humiliation at Mildmay, on Thursday next; there is abundant cause. Those who cannot be there may none the less wait on God, in despair of man, but in faith and hope in Him; and let men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands, without wrath or doubting, that God may set his people free from complicity with any form of evil, and deliver the nation from the judgments that hang over us.

REMEMBER.

By Rev. H. E. FAURE, D.D, Doesborgh, Netherlands.

THERE are still many believers who have not yet realised their glorious privilege of being made to sit in heavenly places in Christ Jesus; they reckon not with changeless eternity, but with changing times and seasons, frames and feelings. They live, more or less, satisfied with their spiritual state, but now and then, on solemn occasions, the ask themselves: What is our condition before the Son of God who bought us with his precious blood?

To them, He, who is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, says, as He did to the church of Ephesus, "Remember, therefore, from whence thou art fallen; and repent, and do the first works, or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent." The Lord had a most serious complaint against this once elect church: she had left her first love. That love had burnt brightly and cheerily, and had spread its light and warmth far and wide. Paul had heard of it, and ceased not to give thanks for them, making mention of them in his prayers. Most remarkable were the spiritual heights so speedily attained by the church of Ephesus. When Paul arrived at that capital he found a small number of believers, about a dozen, who only knew of John's baptism; they only had been brought to repentance and remission of sins by beholding the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. Paul's gospel consisted in the glad tidings of much more glorious heights of salvation attainable to believers in this life already; this was the meat which he lamented not to be able to impart to the Corinthians, because they were still only babes in Christ, and through their envying, and strife, and divisions, pretty well satisfied thus to remain.

This solid food the little flock at Ephesus received with avidity. When they heard that there was more to be had for them than they already possessed, they would gladly obtain it. And obtain it they did. By the laying on of Paul's hands the Holy Ghost came on them. No wonder that the Word of God grew mightily and prevailed, and that the Church attained to such a height that Paul, having heard of their faith in the Lord Jesus and love to all the saints, ceased not to give thanks for them: they were to the praise of the glory of his grace, and after they believed were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise: they were partakers of Christ's resurrection life, and made to sit with Him in heavenly places; formerly they were darkness, but now light in the Lord. All this, and ever so much more, was their glorious condition when in their first love.

But in that love they had not persevered. What had once been such a bright, shining flame was now a mere flickering glimmer. Paul wrote, "If I have not love, I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." And thus it had become at Ephesus. They still hated the deeds of the Nicolaitanes, and could not bear them which were evil; they still could distinguish between real and feigned apostles; so deep they were not sunk that they could not distinguish between truth and falsehood; they did not try to obtrude upon themselves that they had assumed a position all too high, which could not possibly be maintained in this life. They were not like the sow that was washed, returned to the mire; yet retaining the form of godliness they lacked the power thereof. Clinging to the doctrine, they wanted the life. It was not well with them. They had fallen from the lofty place they had formerly occupied Their Church had shined like a brilliant star in the dark night of heathenism, and now of that Church could be said, "How art thou fallen, O morning star!"

Whence this sad collapse? Undoubtedly because they had not paid sufficient attention to the warnings and exhortations of their father in Christ. Paul had verily not preached to them that they were no more susceptible of being led astray, that the work of grace, once begun, would unavoidably, under all circumstances, be carried on and accomplished; hence that there was no occasion for them to watch, as their Keeper slept not nor slumbered. Quite the reverse; they had to awake out of sleep, and arise from the dead, and Christ should give them light. They had to walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time, because the days were evil. They had to give thanks alway for all things to God, and to submit themselves to one another in the fear of God. They had to put on the whole armour of God, in order to be able to withstand in the evil day; and, having done all, to stand—for their conflict was not with flesh and blood, but with principalities, powers, rulers of the darkness of this world, spiritual wickedness in high places. To these earnest exhortations they had not given heed; and gradually, but surely, the crafty enemy had entangled them in the cares of this world, and instead of going from strength to strength and from glory to glory, they began to live upon the remembrance of what they had formerly possessed, and not obtaining fresh supplies daily. First they came to a standstill, and then to a falling from their first love.

And what now does the Good Shepherd? Does He leave these sheep, that have been straying so wantonly, to their lot, to become a prey to the wolf? Nay, nay! He comes to look after them, to bring them back to the fold, again to make them lie down in green pastures, and gently to lead them by the quiet waters. He calls to his faithless wanderers, "Remember." This is the first step He advises them to take in order to get to the second, "repent," and finally to the last, in order to come again where they ought to be—"do the first works."

Remember! That is, make use of your memory. By means of your mental powers call to mind what your condition was when with boldness you had access through faith in Christ, when He dwelt in your hearts by faith, and ye were rooted and grounded in love, when the Lord wrought in you without let or hindrance above what ye were able to ask or think; compare that condition with your present one of backsliding from grace, and losing your first love; ask yourselves if it ought to remain as it is; if you do not prefer your former joy and gladness to your present dead and barren state; especially, if you would continue to crucify the Lord, that bought you with his blood? The Lord thus prescribes what is altogether within our ability, of course not there to remain, but as the first step to further progress. Remember. When Peter at the crowing of the cock "called to mind" the words spoken by Jesus, he wept. When the prodigal remembered the abundance of bread in his father's house, he could no longer be satisfied with swine's husks, but arose and came to his father.

Beloved in Christ, we who these last few years, through God's mighty love, and the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the fellowship and sealing of the Holy Spirit, have enjoyed such glorious blessings, how is it with us at present? Have we grown in grace and in conformity to Christ's image, and are we distinctly conscious o yet greater spiritual blessings since we accepted the boon of our sanctification by faith? Let us earnestly and solemnly place ourselves with this question before the Lord.

If, to our shame, and to the grief of God's Spirit, we have receded, let us remember whence we are fallen, and repent, and do the first works. Especially remember how we originally became possessed of full salvation—to wit, by faith, by simply accepting what Christ was for us. As we received Christ Jesus the Lord, so let us walk in Him. In the same manner we must return to Him; believe, and confess. We may make no room at all, even for the least semblance of doubt in our hearts; that the tender Shepherd, who bled and died in our stead, certainly did not merit at our hands. But as little may there be room in our lives for that soul-cancer—fear of man. Let us, under all circumstances, confess our Lord before men, and He shall also confess us before his Father in heaven; and the Holy Ghost, proceeding from the Father and the Son, will convey this impression to our hearts, and again, as before, shall we have boldness, whilst looking upwards, to utter: "Abba, Father, our Father."

Thus confessing with the mouth, we shall experience that it is unto salvation practically realised.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES FOR THE PEOPLE.

THE following circular letter has been issued by the Committee for arranging these services. It is signed by Lord Shaftesbury, as Chairman, and the Lord Mayor, as Hon. Secretary of the Committee. Any help that our readers are able to give to this invaluable effort should be sent to Mr. C. M. Sawell, 3, Bridewell-place, New Bridge-street, E.C.:—

"For twenty-five winters, without public disturbance of any kind, the Committee have had preached, quietly and reverently, the Gospel of Christ to the masses in this great and ever-increasing city, in such buildings as they are in the habit of frequenting during the week. In every section of the Church of Christ the conviction has taken hold of all earnest minds, that such is the force of habit, of ignorance, with the fear of shame and ridicule prevalent among this class of our population, that if the masses are ever to be rescued from their present state of alienation to religious worship they must be thus sought out and encountered on their own ground."

"The sum of this Committee's experience, for a quarter of a century, has been that the common people hunger for the words of Life, and will come to any place, however humble, when these are preached with sympathetic earnestness, and in all their blessed grandeur and simplicity.

"If, as a recent French writer has said, the greatness of England is due not nearly so much to her institutions as to the character of her people, how deeply interested is all Great Britain in the social and religious life of the five millions of people (one seventh of our entire population) constituting this metropolis, and increasing at the enormous rate of 100,000 annually. The Committee, owing to the large number of buildings kept open throughout the last course of services, and the various London City Mission Stations aided by grants of money, unhappily commence their new course without any funds in hand. This must necessarily for a time stop the assistance hitherto rendered to the opening of new Mission-rooms, a branch of the work they consider most important, as every city missionary needs such a centre for gathering up the fruits of his domiciliary visitations. We simply wish to supplement the work of the churches."

JENNIE'S INFLUENCE.

THIS story is true, and I have tried as nearly as possible to tell every word and incident just as they occurred.

Mary and Jennie sat in Jennie's room in their night-dresses, toasting their toes by the fire. They had undressed and put up their hair, which was to fluff out into frizzes and crimps at school the next day, and now Mary was wondering why in the world Jennie didn't put out the light, so they could go to bed.

The girls had not been acquainted very long, but they had "taken to" each other at first sight, and the liking had increased with their intimacy. They were both away from home at school, and Mary was staying with Jennie that night.

But Jennie did not put out the light just then, as Mary was thinking she would, but reached over to the table and got her Bible.

"Shall I read for both?" she said, and Mary nodded assent.

Mary was a church member, but had not thought of her Bible till she saw Jennie take hers.

When Jennie had read her chapter, she said—

"Shall we pray together, Mary?"

Mary nodded again, thinking they would kneel in silent prayer. But when Jennie added—

"And will you lead, dear?" she only stammered—

"Oh, no-o, no-o; you do, please."

And they knelt, and Jennie prayed just as she had been used to do with her home friends, and they went to bed.

It did not occur to her that she had done an odd or unusual thing. She had come from a sweet, Christian home, where the heavenly Father was daily called upon in simple and unaffected fashion. When father and mother went away, then brothers and sisters knelt in family prayer. And if by any chance there were only two left together at prayer-time, they two read the chapter and one of them prayed.

Long after Jennie had gone to sleep Mary lay awake, thinking more seriously than she had ever done before in all her light, careless life.

The friendship of the girls continued after the fashion of schoolgirls. They walked to their classes together, got out their German at the same hour, and practised duets on the same piano.

Before many days Jennie got permission to stay with Mary over night. After they were in bed they chatted a while on one thing or another, and then fell into a short silence. Presently Jennie heard a little moan. Mary had complained of her tooth during the evening, and she thought she was suffering again.

"Does your tooth ache so badly, dearie? Just you lie still a minute, and I'll have a hot flannel ready in half a jiffy."

"No, no, Jennie," putting out her hand to stop her, "it's not my tooth, it's my heart that's aching;" and with that Mary put her arms around her neck and cried as if her heart was breaking indeed. Jennie, awe-struck and wondering, could not say a word, but presently Mary found voice to say—

"It all comes of that time I stayed all night with you. You know I belong to the church, and go to communion and all that, but I never realised that I wasn't a Christian at all, but a poor miserable fraud, till then. You know you read your Bible, and then you asked me to pray, and I couldn't. I never had anything make me feel so ill in all my life. I thought, How dreadful it is for me to pretend to be a Christian, when I don't even know how to pray when Jennie asked me. It cut me like a knife, and I've felt it ever since. I couldn't stand it any longer without talking to you about it. That is why I wanted you to come and stay with me to-night. Oh, Jennie dear, I am so unhappy!"

"Have you prayed?" said Jennie.

"Oh, yes, over and over again, but I don't seem to get any comfort. Do you think I've been so wicked that God can't take me?"

"No, no, no," cried Jennie. "Don't you remember what Jesus said, 'I came not to call the righteous, but sinners, to repentance'? Don't you want to be a Christian?"

"Oh," groaned Mary, "I'd give my right hand to know that my sins were forgiven."

"Let's pray." And with her arms around her, Jennie asked God for Christ's sake to help Mary to trust in Him, and to forgive her sins. Then she said, "Don't you remember that verse, Mary, 'For God so loved the world that He gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life'? Just think, whosoever."

There was a little silence; during which Jennie was earnestly praying in her heart. Presently Mary's arms tightened about her neck, and she felt the tears dropping on her shoulder.

"Oh, Jennie," she sobbed, "I'm crying for joy now; I see it all as clear as day. He died for me, even me. I know my sins are all forgiven for his sake. Oh, I am so happy!"

"So am I," crying herself for pure joy and sympathy. "But isn't it sweet and simple when you come to it? Just believe, and let Jesus save you."

"Oh, I could die for Him, couldn't you?"

"Yes; but He wants us to live for Him," said Jennie, softly.

The girls, as they lay talking and rejoicing, did not think that even then there was a new jubilee in heaven over another sinner brought back; but so it was.

It was a new lesson to Jennie, the experience of that night. It taught her the solemn weight of influence which we carry, and which is no less solemn because we often bear it unconsciously. It was the simple force of the home habit which made her ask Mary to pray with her, and the outcome was a soul born to God, an earthly friend sealed for the heavenly companionships. How hang the solemn hours about us, freighted with their load of everlasting bliss or woe!—American Messenger.

NOTES ON SCRIPTURE.—18.

IT will be found profitable to consider the particular terms which the Holy Spirit employs to exhibit the different aspects of sin and unrighteousness before God. The terms are as follows:—

1. Ἁμάρτια,—the general term for sin; it means missing the mark, that is, deviation from God's standard. Therefore St. John says that "all unrighteousness is sin."

2. Ἁμάρτημα,—the same, but carried out in deeds.—1 Cor. vi. 18; Hos. x. 13.

3. Παραβάσις,—transgression, i.e., passing the line, viz., as of law.—Rom. ii. 23, v. 14; Ps. ci. 3.

4. Παρακοή,—disobedience, refusing to hear, or hearing amiss.—2 Cor. x. 6; Heb. ii. 2; Esth. iv. 14.

5. Παράπτωμα,—misdeed, failure in duty.—Gal. vi. 1; Mark xi. 25, 26; Ezek. xiv. 13 and xviii. 24.

6. Ἀνομία,—Iniquity, lawlessness.—1 John iii. 4; see 2 Thess. ii. 8; Job xxxi. 3; Ps. v. 5.

7. Παρανομία,—renunciation of law and Divine authority.—2 Pet. ii. 16; Jude. xix. 22; Prov. xxi. 24.

8. Ἧττημα,—worsted in conflict, coming short in duty.—1 Cor. vi. 7; Isa. xxxi. 8.

9. Ἀγνόημα,—error, or sin in relation to ignorance.—Heb. ix. 7; Gen. xliii. 12; Lev. v. 18.

10. Ἀσέβεια,—impiety, ungodliness.—2 Tim. ii. 16; Tit. ii. 12; Jude 15; Prov. xi. 5; Ezek. xvi. 58.

11. Πονηρία,—an outworking of evil.—Rom. i. 29; Eph. vi. 12; Isa. i. 16; Dan. xi. 27.

12. Ἀδικια,—malice prepense, evil premeditated.—Rom. i. 18; 1 Cor. xiii. 6; Isa. lix. 12.

13. Κακία,—pravity, viciousness in morals.—Acts viii. 22; Rom. i. 2; Prov. xiv. 18.

14. Κακοηθεία,—came carried into habit and custom.—Rom. i. 29; Matt. iii. 22.

15. Πλημμέλεια,—out of harmony, not in tune, discord; translated Trespass in Old Testament—so that if one is not in harmony with God in all life's ways they come under this heading,

The reader can readily see the many things which God regards as contamination and infection proceeding from an evil nature. But God "giveth grace to the humble." "For not he that commendeth himself is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth," and "he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord."—2 Cor. x. 17, 18.

From the above, however, two things are evident—(1) How little we know of sin as it is in the sight of God. (2) How much less we know of the force of the Scripture, "He who knew no sin was made sin for us, that we might be made righteousness of God in him!" Consequently, outward reformation and self-assertion are so often taken for a second Pentecost.—Irish Ecclesiastical Gazette.

RESCUE WORK IN MANCHESTER.

A CONFERENCE was lately held in the Roby Schools, Piccadilly, Manchester, of those interested in the rescue of the fallen. Mr. MacGill, Superintendent of the City Mission, who presided, said he believed nothing would reach the depths of moral depravity to which those poor creatures had sunk but the story of a Saviour's love. He gave them some most interesting illustrations from his experience in Glasgow, of the transforming power of the Gospel on the characters of the most abandoned wretches who trafficked in female degradation.

Mr. Langley, one of the Superintendents of the City Mission, who has carried on midnight meetings for the last seven or eight years in the midst of many discouragements, reported that though these meetings had only been on a small scale they had resulted in the restoration to morality of upwards of a hundred women every year.

Miss Wright, Hon. Superintendent of the Police Court Mission, told how their agents attended the police courts every morning and conversed specially with those who were convicted for the first time. They visited them while in prison, and endeavoured to restore them to their homes on the expiry of the sentence. Mrs. Rawlinson, a lady who has devoted herself to the institution of homes for the outcast said that she and those associated with her would undertake to find homes for the girls who were induced by the midnight Gospel meetings to leave a life of sin.

A most interesting and touching address was next given by Mr. Eadson, who acts for the Social Purity Society. He told how that during the past year he had brought under the notice of the magistrates of Manchester nearly ninety houses devoted to infamous purposes, and the magistrates had convicted in every case. He described the Satanic wiles of those who annually betray hundreds of the innocent and pure girls who arrive in Manchester in search of employment. He claimed the co-operation of the City missionaries in his efforts to hunt out these traffickers in sin, and uproot their nests of licentiousness. Miss Watson, of the Prisongate Mission, after telling of her homes for female prisoners, said they had added a new branch to their work, and now received little babies, who, but for them would be trained up to professional vice.

The special object of the Conference was to ascertain the exact class of work undertaken by each Mission, so as to promote mutual co-operation in the reclamation of the vicious or criminal population.

At the close of the Conference a prayer-meeting was held, and at ten o'clock about forty of the workers, missionaries, and gentlemen, issued forth to distribute in the streets and infamous houses of the neighbourhood cards of invitation to tea. This went on for about two hours, the workers bringing in their detachments of unfortunates, who were received by ladies and conversed with, and various ladies sang sacred solos, which seemed to touch their hearts. By midnight nearly seventy had been gathered in, and a mournful audience they made, from the feathered daughter of folly, with her painted cheeks, to the lowest drunken creature, with face all cut and bruised. At the door demanding admittance were men of the foot-pad type, who could not get on with their night's work for want of their female decoys. At twelve o'clock all sat down to tea, waited on by Christian ladies and gentlemen. From one till two o'clock Mr. Langley conducted a Gospel meeting. Several of the ladies addressed their poor fallen sisters, pleading with them in tears to permit them to help them to a better life, and pointing them to the Saviour as their only hope.

The result of the meeting was that nearly thirty remained professing themselves ready to leave their life of sin. When they were told they would be sent to reformatories, about half refused, and left the hall. Sixteen were removed to a temporary lodging which had been provided for them, and were invited to return to the hall at ten o'clock, to breakfast, the following morning. Only six came, ten having gone back to their life of sin, having been seduced by one of their number showing six sovereigns, which she had obtained the previous night on the street.

The great difficulty of the work is to lodge the girls separate from one another on the night of the meeting, and for this purpose a temporary home must be provided, if the work is to be effectual. Subscriptions for this purpose will be received by the treasurer, Mr. Railton. The City Mission propose to continue these meetings every Thursday in different parts of the city, and to hold a Conference on the work on the last Thursday of each month, for which earnest prayer is asked.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH IN BELFAST.

MORE than three weeks ago these brethren began their work in this town, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., and they have continued to preach to large audiences with manifest signs of blessing.

They have been obliged to move from one building to another for their evening meetings, while their afternoon Bible-readings have been held in the Y.M.C.A. Hall. Notwithstanding the disadvantage of holding the meetings in the different buildings the attendance has been encouraging, and spiritual results have been graciously given, so far as man can judge, from the very beginning of the work.

These brethren are simply indefatigable. They preach and sing four times on Sundays, and on several days of the week they hold afternoon Bible-readings. Their Saturday night song services have been exceedingly popular, and the building always crowded. The main interest has of course centred round their evening evangelistic gatherings. Into these the evangelists have poured their full strength. The "Old, old Story" has been sweetly sung by Mr. Smith, and ably told by Mr. Fullerton. His message is clear and crisp, and every word to the point in hand. Belfast friends take a deep interest in Mr. Fullerton's work, as in Belfast he was born, and here he learned the story of redeeming love, of which he is now so faithful an expounder.

A word about their after-meetings. There has been no such thing as pressure brought to bear on anyone to wait, but many have waited and been helped by the friendly words of the workers. Last night a very pleasant sight met my eyes. It was the bright and happy faces of ten young women who profess to have been converted to God through the meetings, and all of them engaged in one wareroom. I spoke to four members of one family, who date their happy change to the visit of these brethren. A backslider told me of his restoration, thanked God for it, and asked for some work to do for Him.

Next week the efforts of the evangelists (in harmony with the programme of the Y.M.C.A.'s for the world) are to be specially directed to the young men of Belfast. We hope a great many may be reached and blessed.

Will Christians please pray that the short time yet remaining to these evangelists among us may be very fruitful?

Belfast, Nov. 7. Henry Montgomery.

NATIONAL BIBLE SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND.—At the last monthly meeting of Western Directors, held in Glasgow, Monsieur Bossi, a deputy from the Evangelical Society of Geneva, was present, and thanked the Society for the £1238 contributed this year in aid of the Geneva Society's colportage in France. It was agreed to assist the Evangelical Society of France in circulating the Scriptures by means of teachers and evangelists employed by it; and to supply two native colporteurs to work under the direction of a missionary at Seetapore, N.W.P., India. The war with France is seriously interfering with Bible work in the interior of China, but Mr. Murray, of Pekin, has just returned from a three months' tour in Mongolia, during which he circulated 7596 portions of Scripture. The Committee agreed to assist a movement for presenting a portion of the Bible to 400 blind persons in Glasgow and the West of Scotland.

THE NEWPORT MISSION.

IN the evening of the second Sunday of Mr. Aitken's Mission, the spacious St. Paul's Church was literally packed. God was in our midst in great power. In the after-meeting, the blessed work of helping anxious souls went on until past ten o'clock. The day's experiences convinced Mr. Aitken that the Mission should not be closed at the end of the "ten days," but continued throughout the week. The way to a prolonged stay at Newport having been unexpectedly opened, he decided to remain over another Sunday. Now we have reached the closing day of this second week, and our hearts are overflowing with praise to God.

The mid-day meetings had to be removed from the hall of the Y.M.C.A. to the church, for the adequate accommodation of those attending them. The afternoon gatherings of women in the Parochial Hall have gone on day after day with blessing from God, and the evangelical services at the church have all along, and without a single break, been seasons of the manifestation of the mighty power of God. In every way, and by all kinds of graceful arguments and tender persuasions, the people were besought to yield to God. Many of them did. The after-meetings were full of precious work, which did not cease until between ten and eleven o'clock. Middle walls of separation between Christians were found to be removed, and Christian ministers and laymen, with loving and united hearts, joined in the blessed employ of speaking the Lord's own "comfortable words" to the anxious ones.

It was indeed good to see how completely the Lord made us to be of one mind in this the supreme business of all, and that merely ecclesiastical differences are, after all, but small matters compared with the grand unity of his people in Himself and his love.

One very happy incident of the Mission must not escape remark. Newport is a garrison town, and St. Paul's is the garrison church, the vicar being local chaplain to the forces. Many a prayer went up to God that the soldiers might share largely in the Mission blessing. As a class they seem always hard to reach, spiritually, but we knew the Lord's arm was quite long enough for the purpose, so we cried to him to touch the soldiers' hearts. Mr. Aitken gave an address in the Military Schoolroom on the first Thursday morning in the Mission, and repeated his visit to the barracks last Thursday. Praise God, the hearts of some have been reached, and there is not a little blessing now in the barrack-rooms. The sergeant who has charge of the boys' quarters, voluntarily stated, a day or two ago, that whatever else may result from the Mission, this has come to pass, "the bad language has altogether ceased in the boys' rooms."

To-night there is to be a service for inquirers. To-morrow (Sunday) will, we trust, be a great day. Then on Monday, our thanksgiving. But we will thank Him after Monday! Many souls will, I feel sure, go on thanking Him throughout eternity.

Newport, November 8. J. T. W.

MATTHIAS-ROAD MISSION, STOKE NEWINGTON.—God is still owning and blessing the labours of the friends in this neighbourhood in the reclamation and salvation of men and women belonging to the working classes. One recent case is especially encouraging. It is that of a man who fell under the influence of drink and was imprisoned. He was visited in prison by one of our lady workers and induced to sign the pledge. He was met at the prison gates on his release by this lady and her husband, accompanied also by the man's wife; now both the man and his wife are rejoicing in the assurance of God's pardoning love. Great good is done by visiting the people at their homes, but some very necessitous cases are found; if any friends have cast-off clothing for men, women, or children, such articles will be heartily appreciated and well bestowed, especially as the winter is now close upon us. Parcels for this purpose will be received by Mr. B. Dumville, 16, Oldfield-road, Stoke Newington, N.

THE SEAMEN'S BETHEL, GLASGOW.

THANKSGIVING Meeting is always one of special interest and blessing, and the one ld at the Seamen's Bethel in Glasgow on the t inst. was no exception to the rule.

The meeting was convened by the Glasgow amen's Friend Society, and was presided over Mr. Alexander Allan, of the "Allan" line steamers, who, as chairman of the society, xes the deepest interest in the spiritual and mporal welfare of seamen and their families.

This society has carried on work in Glasgow r upwards of sixty-two years, chiefly on the rth side of the river, and has had much essing. But as the harbour and shipping in-eased, it was felt necessary to extend the work ong the sailors, and nine years ago a small om was opened on the south side of the river, the immediate neighbourhood of the present thel. It soon became too small. A larger as taken and it likewise proved too small. But w, large and commodious premises, which are t surpassed by anything of the kind in the gdom, have been erected at a cost of over 000, and the present meeting was held to give anks to God for his guidance in the various ps leading up to the present, and for the bless-r which has attended the work.

The large Bethel was crowded, and after tea e CHAIRMAN, in a few pithy remarks, referred the central site, and to the fact that the ilding—which was in every way most suitable had been opened free of debt, as a reason for anksgiving. He said the end and aim of the sgow Seamen's Friend Society was the nversion of sailors, and many of them had en blessed. He spoke of the untiring perse-rance of the workers, who no doubt felt their atest reward in doing the Master's work. ork for Christ satisfies our highest aspira-ns as nothing else can, and he urged that all things we should imitate Christ, and so come imbued with his spirit.

He was followed by Mr. MORRISON, the worthy d zealous missionaary in charge of the work at Bethel, who gave an interesting account of progress of the work on the South side. The t meeting in 1876 was composed of eight sons, and now the attendance on the Sabbath ning was over 600. Three services are held Sundays, besides a Sunday-school, and three ring the week, the Saturday evening one ng a free tea and testimony meeting, and is that warm and lively character which makes thoroughly appreciated by the sailors. Were re of these gatherings held on Saturday nings it would help largely to draw people m the public-houses and do much to lead them Christ. The reading and recreation rooms n a very important part of the work at the hel; they are open every day from 10 a.m. to p.m., and the average attendance is about seamen each day. A good and quiet work tone among them, and as they go to sea they supplied with books, &c. Mr. Morrison gave numbers of those who professed to find ist at the meetings. We do not state figures e, but from what we have seen and heard we ture to say there is not a Mission in Glasgow ere greater results are being manifested. Morrison concluded by asking prayer for a h baptism of the Holy Spirit.

Rev. Dr. FERGUS FERGUSON said he was much pressed with the thought of the dangers that sailors had to face. Intemperance was at bottom of many distressing accidents at sea, the total abstinence pledge was very im-tant for sailors. He urged that there should a prayer-meeting in the cabin of every ship ore sailing. Our souls, he said, are like a p; faith is the helm, the Holy Spirit the d that fills the sails. Man is the captain, Jesus the Pilot, and we should take all our ers from Jesus as the captain does from the pilot. sing down the Rapids of the St. Lawrence he worst part a special pilot has to come on rd and take the ship past the danger, and if trust in Jesus as our Pilot, He will take us ly past every peril.

Mr. M'KENZIE, the recently-appointed mis-sionary to the Seamen's Chapel on the north side of the river, gave an earnest word upon the necessity of progress, and keeping the unity of the Spirit in Christian work; and he was fol-lowed by Mr. ANDERSON, of Ardrossan (editor of the Reaper), who gave a stirring address to Christian workers. He said there was great need of thorough, whole-hearted work for God, to de-stroy the works of the devil, and to spread the knowledge of the Lord. When like to be cast down we should remember whose we are, and whom we serve. We should ever recognise that we live for our Master. We should take our call from Him, and go forth from his presence to our work. We should wait in the presence of God till He becomes a reality to us, and then we will hold on for him, let the consequences be what they may. Like Nehemiah, go at the king's bidding, realising that the work is the Lord's, and that all the charges and sufficiency will come from Him. We must have meekness, but we must also have courage. We should also have enthusiasm, and there is nothing that calls for enthusiasm so much as the work of winning souls. We should seek to be thorough in the work, and do the work that will stand the test of fire. Our great weapon is the Word of God, and it should be used in the power of the Holy Spirit. Nothing can be compared for giving inward satisfaction to work done for Christ. If ever we get discouraged we should look at the coming glory, and go forward as seeing Him who is invisible.

Captain M'LEAN concluded the meeting by urging seamen, whatever their rank, to witness for Jesus on board ship. If we wait until all obstacles are taken away we will never do any-thing. Every captain should see that all his men had Bibles, hymn-books, &c., the same as he saw that other stores were on board. They should have service every Sabbath. Get the officers to ring the bell—it will bring back old memories. Nothing helps discipline like having service on board.

Mr. R. H. Hunter, the Hon. Sec. of the Society, and Rev. John Riddell, who were to have addressed the meeting, were prevented from being present through illness.

In concluding this notice of a very happy and profitable meeting, we may state that the Glasgow Seamen's Friend Society employs seven agents in the harbour besides a large band of voluntary workers. The ships are visited, also the families of seamen, the Sailors' Home, and boarding-houses. Libraries and bags of books are supplied to outgoing vessels. The widows and orphans of seamen are looked after and helped. Work carried on with such vigour and earnestness is sure to be blessed. Anyone wishing to know more of it or to help it forward should communicate with Mr. R. H. Hunter, 27, Jamaica-street, Glasgow.

KILBURN HOME FOR BLIND CHILDREN.—The fourteenth annual report of this Home, the issue of which has been delayed through the decease of Miss Breay, is now published. The lady superin-tendent, Miss Emma F. Newbery, 127, Portsdown-road, Maida-vale, W., says that the Home is now rent free for the remainder of the lease of sixty years, thus removing a great pecuniary burden. Two of the children have entered the Normal Col-lege for the Blind at Sydenham, one having earned a free scholarship. Several appear likely to be-come promising pupils. The report is brief, and contains but few facts, but is the evident product of one whose tender and loving spirit gleams on every page.

SOUTHAMPTON WATERSIDE MISSION.—During the quarter ending September 30 the missionaries held 87 services on board ships, 28 services at the Mission Hall, conducted 145 Bible-readings, paid 1085 visits to ships, and 70 visits to lodging-houses, besides meeting the families of seamen and those who were sick; distributed over 11,000 tracts, in addition to Bibles and portions of Scripture. They require for the immediate needs of the work 20,000 old magazines, 50,000 tracts, and 20,000 New Testaments (1d. edition, B. and F. Bible Society). There is also a great need of books for the Sailors' Reading-room, including volumes of the Illustrated London News, &c. Should any of our readers feel their hearts moved to aid in supplying these needs, parcels of literature (carriage paid) will be gratefully received and sent to the Mission-hall by Mrs. Evered Poole, Enfield House, Southampton.

LESSONS LEARNED IN ITALY.

CHRISTIAN minds are now sorely exercised on the difficulty of drawing our poor to places of worship, and are anxious to remove every hindrance in their way. For the last year I have been travelling in Italy, and am struck at the contrast; for here they certainly do set us an example on that score. Many a hard-working person will rise at four or five a.m. on cold winter mornings rather than be absent from mass. One of the many reasons that suggests itself to my mind for this contrast is that every man, woman, or child who here enters a church knows he or she has the right of possession: "God's house is for me, I have the right to enter and take any seat I please." No one is repulsed by an exclusive pew system or by an ungracious pew-opener, or repelled by being thrust into a corner or draughty back seat; all are welcome in the House of God.

Here I see the poor enter with their baskets of provisions from the market and bundles of work, and laying them on the floor kneel down to their devotions, feeling perfectly at home as if in their own private houses. Habit with them has be-come a second nature. From their earliest child-hood they were made to frequent their churches, and this habit, fostered and encouraged, con-tinues with them through life.

Not only is our exclusive pew system a hin-drance with us, but, alas! the upper and middle classes too frequently make the House of God the place to display their fine clothes, velvets, silks and satins, and poor creatures have been seen to shrink away rather than encounter such grandeur in their poverty. Here in Italy the beggar in his rags will often kneel side by side with the prince, marquis, and count, utterly unabashed and unconcerned, oblivious of rank, riches, and dignity, for are not all equal in the House of the Father of us all?

Another hindrance is our long services. Here the low mass lasts half an hour; all can easily be spared from their homes for so short a time. Had we shorter, brighter services, interspersed freely with popular hymns, many more would be in-duced to attend. Little children have been so wearied by being made to keep quiet during long and to them unintelligible services, that when they become their own masters they shun church and chapel altogether.

Then our poor do not like to go to places of worship alone. If some Christian person would only seek them out and bring them there, and continue so doing till they had become habi-tuated to the place and mode of worship, this would draw many to become regular attendants. Lastly, I know full well the poor need a hearty welcome. They have frequently to endure the scorn and rebuff of their neighbours when they first venture to set foot in the House of God. Let one or two bright sunny Christians be chosen by their clergy and ministers to receive such as they enter with a pleasant greeting. Let a hymn-book be placed in the new-comer's hand, and a comfortable seat offered. Then as they leave the church or chapel let them hear a kind word of sympathy and encouragement to come again; all this would, I believe, greatly tend to draw them to follow the now sadly-neglected command in Hebrews, "not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together—and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." Hôtel Milano, Florence, Italy.

THE LONDON FEMALE PENITENTIARY.—We removed in June last to our new premises, Stamford House, Abney-park, Stoke Newington. We are still carrying on the work of receiving and train-ing the fallen, and have sixty-four adult inmates under our care. Our new freehold Home has been nearly paid for, but at the expense of our invest-ments received from benefactors in years past, so that our work is now no longer sustained by dividends from this source. It is entirely de-pendent upon the earnings of the inmates and the free-will offerings of the charitable. We have a nice pile of buildings which have cost about £10,000, including a modernly constructed and fitted steam laundry.—Yours very faithfully,

E. GREENFIELD, Secretary.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

FRANCE.

SIR,—Our hearts are full of praise to God for his constantly increasing blessing upon our work. We have now stations in six Departments of France. In the Doubs a glorious work of salvation has been going on, chiefly in the villages of Roches and Montecheroux. In the latter place the meetings have been held in a barn lent us by a man who was formerly a notorious drunkard and boxeur, but who was saved in one of the first meetings held by our officers in the district. Ever since the opening the barn has been crowded to excess, and meetings of 400 and 500 people held in the open air.

There have been, we believe, solid conversions from 100 to 150. Most of the converts testify in the meetings, and work and pray with great devotion, seeking the salvation of the whole village of 1,500 inhabitants. Thirty of the most notorious drunkards of the place have been saved, and the official returns show that the sale of intoxicating liquors has decreased by 1,400 francs a month since the Salvation Army entered the village.

Several Roman Catholics of middle age have found salvation and have all been excommunicated by the priests. They hold steadily on their way, and testify beautifully in the meetings. Three men of upwards of 70 years of age were broken down, and came forward in the meetings to seek salvation, after they had seen their children and grandchildren rejoicing in the Redeemer's love. The three generations can now be heard all testifying in the same meeting.

Largely instrumental in this work are two French officers, girls under seventeen years of age, who give promise of lives of extraordinary usefulness. The work goes on steadily, and souls are added to the Lord every week. It has been marked by some of those mysterious and terrible events which sometimes accompany remarkable out-pourings of the Holy Spirit. The three most violent opposers of the work all met with awfully sudden deaths. One of them had just been leading a mock meeting in the open air, and had been solemnly warned by one of our soldiers, who said to him: "Do you not fear that God may smite you?" . . . He persisted in his profanity, was suddenly seized with frightful agonies and died in three hours. A young man of eighteen, who had several times beaten his mother for having testified in the meetings, told her one Sunday morning that if she testified that day he would beat her and break everything in the house. She went calmly to the meeting as usual, and while she was testifying someone rushed to the door of the barn to call her, saying that her son had fallen in the street. Shortly afterwards the Captain was called to pray with him, and found him dying in a condition too awful to describe. I mention these terribly sad events without comment: what is behind the veil belongs alone to Him who has said, "My Spirit shall not always strive with man."

The work has been much crippled for want of a proper place of meeting; the barn not being capable of holding more than two hundred people, many have to return from the doors each night. We have felt sad in not having the funds to provide a suitable place of meeting, especially as it is very cold in the winter in that part of France, and the snow lies long. Already two of our officers have been ill from exposure.

In a recent tour in the south of France I had the joy of seeing audiences of 400 to 800 people—Catholics, infidels, and Protestants, all mixed—listening with remarkable attention for upwards of an hour to the straightest and simplest truths about sin and salvation, and of hearing at Nîmes a platform full of earnest soldiers testifying to the power of Jesus to save. There is a wonderful opening for the pure Gospel of salvation, and it is a fact full of promise that some of our most devoted soldiers in France are converted Roman Catholics.

In Paris our hall is well filled every Sunday night, and has been throughout the sultry summer months, though it is situated in one of the most degraded parts of the city, and upon a lonely quay of which people have often said to us that they are afraid to come there at night. But God's light continues to flash amid the surrounding darkness, and we continue to be cheered by solid conversions. We also continue to receive beautiful letters from Paris converts, not only from the provinces, but from Switzerland, Holland, England, and from the French army in China. It seems at times here as if we were working at the very mouth of hell, and the souls snatched from our fold now and then by the overwhelming forces in ceaseless activity all around us, and dragged back again into the fearful vortex, make us only the more grateful to see the band who stand firm, and, like the early Christians, are really openly compromised for Christ. There is little inducement to hypocrisy, as the converts as well as the audience give in the collections to help the work and pay for their hymn-books and journals. The collections in the Paris meetings this year have amounted to 2,340 francs, 23 centimes (£93 odd). Our weekly paper En Avant! is now selling at the rate of 50,000 copies a year to worldly people upon the boulevards of Paris alone. We have also published this year 30,000 hymn-books and 30,000 of Mrs. and Miss Booth's pamphlets, which are having a wide circulation. We aim at making the work as largely self-supporting as possible, and we do not hesitate to urge upon all the necessity of giving to help forward the Lord's work.

SWITZERLAND.

In Switzerland seven stations are in active work. In the Canton of Neûchatel where there has been the most severe persecution, there are two flourishing corps, numbering together upwards of 300 soldiers. One of these has already thrown an outpost into a neighbouring canton, and when it got upon its feet and became a corps this same band of devoted young men, led by a Swiss officer, turned in another direction, and have just opened another place within marching distance with blessed results. We look forward to the most glorious scenes of salvation in Switzerland.

You may recollect my having mentioned in your columns in spring the remarkable conversion of a notorious drunkard and poacher in the Canton of Vaud, and how after he was saved he went to his worst enemy and confessed to being the man who had burned down his hay-rick, some time before, and how he offered himself for prison or to restore the value by working in his fields. You will be glad to hear that this "enemy" is now saved and his wife also, and that these two men, who were formerly the very worst in the country, and living in hatred and continued revenge, are now fast friends, and walking in the light of a Saviour's love. A year of living testimony on the part of C had worked mightily upon the heart of R, who at last followed him one day to a meeting, and there fell at the feet of the Redeemer. When these two left the house of salvation they were stoned through the town by a fierce mob—their sole crime—salvation!

Yours in the King's service,

THE CLAPTON TRAINING HOMES.

A four days' "Council of War" was held in London last week, in connection with the work of the Training Homes. There were various meetings at the Clapton Congress Hall, all of which were largely attended, and marked as usual by overflowing enthusiasm.

On Tuesday evening there was a great gathering in Exeter Hall. In opening the proceedings, General Booth said the business of the Clapton Homes was to prepare and equip men and women for the great work of evangelisation carried on by the Army. Briefly sketching the history of the Homes, he said they were now becoming too small; he expected soon they would have to give up the building to the women, and send the men cadets to another Training Home in some distant part of London. At Clapton there is accommodation for 300 cadets, men and women, including the staff. As to the latter, Mr. Booth remarked that not one of them on either side of the house received a salary. They were found a little food and raiment, and a little money to put into the collection. Since the Training Homes were started 1640 cadets have gone forth; most of them are now working in different parts of the world. During the past year 438 have been sent out into the field. Of these 49 have gone abroad. There are now about 240 in the Homes.

The General, having called for testimonies from cadets, one young woman said she rejoiced in being a Training Home girl, for there they were taught to be wise winners of souls. A male cadet said though he had only been a fortnight in the Home, it had done him so much good that if he had stayed six months he knew not what sort of a fellow he would have been. Another officer said she thought she was very good when she went to Clapton—very good indeed; but they took a lot of pride and starch out of her. She spoke with affectionate cordiality of those in charge, especially the "Mother" (Miss Emma Booth). A young fellow from Yorkshire said his dear mother was in heaven, but when he came to Clapton he got another good "mother."

The Mother herself then spoke. The object she ever had in view was to make the cadets feel their responsibility before God for the salvation of their lost brethren and sisters. From 6 in the morning to 10.30 at night they were ever contriving how they could better bring this about. The cadets go out and see the people lying in their terrible condition, and they are more than ever convinced that what the people need to raise them up is the power of a loving, living Christ. God does use these cadets as instruments to win the people. Many of them did not receive much sympathy from those in their own homes—indeed many of the homes from which they came were not worthy of the name. How precious it is to such to know that when they go forth to the battle field at home and abroad, they can have continued sympathy and help from the Clapton Training Homes. They are taught to be so strong in the Lord that they can go into the most evil places to tell of Jesus and his love. Miss Booth made an impassioned appeal to those who could not give themselves to the work, to help the many who are waiting to throw themselves into the thick of the fight.

After an appeal from Mr. Herbert Booth, as the "father" of the Homes, for liberal contributions towards the £150 a week which it takes to keep them going, Mr. John Cory, of Cardiff, spoke some words of hearty encouragement to the Army friends. He wished everybody would see for themselves what the Army are doing; if they had then any fault to find, let them help in setting the matter right. He had sometimes seen that which he could not approve, and he always found the General most willing to mend matters as far as possible.

Mrs. Booth said that even if she were altogether outside the Army, she could not but rejoice at the wonderful results brought about by such comparatively feeble instrumentality. If the perishing masses had to wait till they were reached by highly-trained preachers and workers, they would never be touched at all. Seeing there are many thousands in the flower of their youth who are longing to enter this work in connection with the Army, there is an element of hope for the future, notwithstanding the lamentable condition of the people. Within recent weeks only she had received many proofs from impartial sources of the wonderful trophies of grace rescued by the efforts of those who had been trained in the Homes at Clapton. Even those who do not approve of all the Army measures, could not but recognise the success of the movement. What mattered it how novel or unconventional the measures were if they were owned of God to the salvation of the people?

Up to the close of the proceedings at Exeter Hall, over £800 had been subscribed towards the £1000 desired for replenishing the Training Home exchequer. The "Council" was closed with an "all-night of prayer" at Clapton on Wednesday night.

A new monthly publication, entitled "All the World," has been issued from the Book Store of the Army. It is designed to be "a monthly record of the operations of the Salvation Army in all lands," price 1d.

CONVERTS AT COLAR.

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly insert in The Christian the following extract from a letter I have just received from Charles Cumine, superintendent of the Colar Orphanage and Farms? Nazareth Farm was divided amongst six newly-married families a month or so before I left India. I ask the prayers of the Lord's people that these young native Christian families may not be too much discouraged. I feel for them very deeply, for I love them very greatly. I know the dangers and temptations to which they are exposed from the enemies of the Gospel, who would take advantage of their lonely and depressed circumstances to invite them for worldly advantages to give up the spiritual privileges they enjoy by their residence near Christian friends, who watch over them in the Lord.

Colar is a country town, with no European Christian residents, eleven miles away from the nearest railway station. We dwell amid the haters of the Lord's truth, and are surrounded by fanatical Mohammedans and bigoted Hindus. These independent farmers labour hard for their daily subsistence, and do not eat the bread of idleness. I shall be very glad to be the medium of conveying to them any practical token of sympathy which may encourage them under very discouraging circumstances, viz., the prospect of being deprived of the fruit of hard manual labour and toil by the loss of their crops.

Yours very truly, Louisa H. Anstey.

EXTRACT.

"Kolar, September 30.

"The crops have suffered much for want of rain. There was a cry of famine because most of the neighbouring fields have been totally scorched from the effects of the sun, which was very severe. This time last year it was so very cold, but this year it is just like the hot season. There was not a drop of water in the tank up to last Sunday evening, but since two days we have had good showers, which will likely save half crops for this year. The mango field at Nazareth was done up so well this time that the ryots (village farmers) expected at least sixty candies, i.e., 10,800 measures of fodder from it; but owing to the late rains I do not think we shall get even thirty candies, because most of the plants were totally dry. The other field also is scorched by the sun, and I do not think we can get anything from that. The Ragi fields at Bethany and Elim are not so bad; we may realise a fair crop, but still it is doubtful. It is all in the hands of God. He can do as He pleases, and we will say, Amen.

"Cholera also broke out in different parts of the Tolney, in Madras, and other places; it was severe, many were victims to it, but we do praise the Lord for his loving kindness towards us.

"Charles Cumine."

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE. — General Field, Secretary of the Alliance, lately visited Derbyshire with a view to promoting the interests of Christian union. A drawing-room meeting was held in the town of Derby, at which several new members were enrolled. General Field also addressed a meeting of Rev. W. Sandford's congregation at Ashbourn.

CHEER FOR PRAYING MOTHERS.—A soldier stationed at Secunderabad, Madras, lately wrote to Mr. Bottomley, of the Soldiers' Institute, Sandgate: "Bless the Lord that He brought me to that happy little 'Home.' Little did I think, the first time I went, of giving my heart to Jesus; but, Sir, when you took me by the hand, and told me of things to come which I was not prepared to meet, I thought of the many times my dear old mother had tried to lead me to Christ, but in vain. The dear old mother's prayers have not been in vain after all; and the loving words which you told me of the Saviour's love, who bought us with his precious blood, have led me to find peace in Christ. I am pleased to tell you the Lord is working among us, and blessing his precious Word to the salvation of souls; but there is a great number yet in darkness who are running careless on the downward road to destruction. May there be an outpouring of the Holy Spirit that they may be convinced of their wretched life, and turn to Christ and live."

CANADIAN EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

LEAVING Liverpool on Sept. 18 we reached New York on Sunday, Sept. 28, after a somewhat uncomfortable voyage. We were most kindly received by Rev. C. Cuthbert Hall and his wife. Mr. Hall is minister of the First Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn. In the evening we attended Dr. Pentecost's Church, where we had the joy of greeting our dear friends I. D. Sankey and G. Stebbins, who were conducting the Song Service that evening. Arriving in a strange country and in altogether new surroundings, the familiar and sweet strains of "Abundantly able to save," and "Let the Master in," were like a message from home, carrying us back in spirit to those blessed meetings in London where those words were first heard.

A fortnight passed rapidly by, well filled with work. Bible readings were held in Mr. Hall's church, evangelistic meetings in the Mission Church attached to it, which is placed in a needy part of Brooklyn. A series of drawing-room meetings to consider the truths in connection with the second coming of the Lord were arranged, also Bible readings at the New York Y.M.C.A.

We had the privilege of meeting many of the ministers in Brooklyn, and of speaking to a large meeting composed of the superintendents and assistant superintendents, with their wives, of the Brooklyn Sunday-schools. Mrs. Soltau met several of the earnest lady workers of New York and Brooklyn, and was specially interested in the perfect organisation of the New York Y.W.C.A., which is as complete as it well can be for accomplishing its work. Our time was all too short amongst the many devoted and diligent men of God whose acquaintance we were privileged to make.

On October 11 we went to Montreal, being pressed to hold a Mission in Emmanuel Church for a week. There is great need in this city for a thorough revival of spirituality and power in the churches. A pall of self-satisfied indifference seems to hang over the city, throwing into bright relief the earnest, hearty work of the Y.M.C.A. under its indefatigable secretary, Mr. Budge. On our way to Toronto, we made a short halt at Peterboro' to have a glimpse at Hazel Brae and a shake of the hand with Dr. Barnardo in his Canadian "Home," a truly bright and happy spot. It was to us a pleasant reminder of happy years of labour at the Village Home, Ilford.

We had not been four hours in Toronto before we were met by a large gathering of old friends in the hall of the Toronto Mission Union, for an hour's Bible reading, followed by a special committee meeting of the Canadian Evangelisation Society, augmented by the presence of several ministers, to plan out the next few weeks' work in this city. It was a matter of deep thankfulness to God to see how much fruit had been borne to his glory, resulting from our visit here in the spring. Will the readers of The Christian bear Canada on their hearts before the Lord this winter? George Soltau.

Y.M.C.A., Toronto, Oct. 24.

Y.M.C.A., SOUTHEND.—This Association have taken larger premises, situated in Alexandra-street. In his sermon on a recent Sunday night at Trinity Church, Bishop Gregg expressed his hope that God would soon raise up some one to organise a branch of the Y W.C.A., much needed in this town. The Secretaries of the Y.M C.A. are Mr. Kemp, 4, Essex-terrace, and Mr. F. Webb, Eton Villa, Southend, Essex.

REDRUTH TOWN MISSION.—We have recently taken a four-roomed cottage adjoining our Mission-hall, and fitted it up as a working men's reading-rooms. It is open from 9.30 a.m. to 9.30 p.m., and numbers of men and boys who loitered about the streets and were exposed to the temptation of the public-house may now be found sitting in the room reading the papers, &c. We are also fitting up one room with desks to teach writing. We should be glad of any assistance in the way of subscriptions, or back numbers of Illustrated News, Graphic, or any other magazine. Books suitable for the table or library, periodicals, weekly or monthly, if sent to me, will be most thankfully received.

THE BELLEVILLE MISSION, PARIS.

FOR four years the inhabitants of Aubervilliers, a village at a short distance from Paris, have requested Miss de Broen to have meetings there, such as those in the iron-room at Belleville, which is too distant for them to attend at night, although many come in the mornings for the Medical Mission, the service at which has awakened the desire for evening meetings in their own village. Dr. Macrae, also, has for long been deeply impressed with the desirability of setting to work there, his contact with the sick from thence showing both the necessity for it and the ready access to the people.

It was with no little joy that Miss de Broen at length found it practicable, and accordingly last week the first service was held, the room hired for the purpose being crowded as soon as opened, and the street also. It is easy in this country to attract a crowd by anything new, but there is every token that the desire expressed is too real to be ephemeral, and if Christians pray for the blessing, no doubt many will receive more than they ever thought or asked. Already one young man, who at first would only stand outside declaring that his mind was made up, he had his own convictions, and was not going to hear anything about God, has been found sitting in the salle, listening quietly with the rest.

No other evangelistic effort is made in the place, and it is a very touching as well as a responsible thing to find a number of men and women throwing themselves on you to receive instruction.

Fifty-four of the inhabitants have signed a paper drawn up by themselves, begging Miss de Broen to "add to the good she does to humanity, this, of establishing meetings in Aubervilliers, for which the greater part of the inhabitants, they are sure, will be grateful."

The commune of Aubervilliers numbers twenty-two thousand souls. The only church is Roman Catholic, the scene of many imaginary miracles during a series of centuries, attested by numerous tablets on the walls. One of the Kings of France was a pilgrim to the shrine of the Virgin there; but the people seem longing for different food, and what they find in their mornings in the iron-room, with such visits to their homes as the workers were able to make, has made them wish for meetings that they can always attend. What is needed is more workers for the ever-extending field—workers who can bear their own expenses; and there are many such if only they would come, and not think that all England must be converted before they work abroad.

Already, without this recent addition, there are so many new people to attend to daily, and what is a Mission without visits in the homes of the people? The Medical Mission alone, with the average attendance of over a hundred and eighty in the day, absorbs many helpers for dispensing, and for conversing with the patients, while the doctor works all the day long, and does not fail to give "a word in season" as occasion offers. Surely some who can will come where there are so few among so many. The people buy large numbers of Testaments. Selling these, giving tracts—much coveted here—teaching in the night-schools and on Sundays, besides many other things: all requires a larger staff than there is; but when Christ appears there will be a reward for all the toil.

THE CARDIFF WELCOME HOME.—Mr. George Lawrence (179, Bute-road, Cardiff) writes:—"We have now obtained some bedrooms in the Strangers' Rest at additional rent of £10, and we need help to furnish. We continue to have much blessing among sailors. At present a gracious work is going on among Norwegians; several have been brought to Christ." We commend the valuable work carried on by Mr. Lawrence to the best sympathies of our readers. We are glad to notice, in his lately-issued report, a strong testimony to the benefits of Sunday closing. On week-nights he says the streets surge with drunken and other immoralities. On Sundays the town is like a well-ordered country village.

TEMPERANCE REFORM IN AMERICA.

OUR American cousins have had a sharp experience of the Temperance question, and the results are full of lessons to British reformers. The Bishop of Rochester has lately returned from a 15,000 miles tour in that land of magnificent distances, which he traversed with the special purpose of studying the liquor question; and a brief statement of his impressions, as conveyed in personal interview with the writer on his voyage home, may not be uninteresting to readers of The Christian.

To begin with, his lordship has noted the same difficulty as exists in this country from the over impetuosity of reformers. He comments unfavourably on the divisions which he found existing in the Temperance party. "The Temperance advocates of America have," he said "been trying to get all they want at a single spring, instead of taking public opinion along with them in a step by step advance."

Coming to details, the Bishop found that the direction of restrictive Temperance effort on the other side of the ocean is towards gradually raising the rate of spirit licences. In Chicago alone, for instance, this method has reduced the number of liquor-houses from 13,000 to 9000, and has increased the city revenue from 700,000 to 4,500,000 dollars. On this policy, however, abstainers are divided in sentiment. Enthusiasts for prohibition last year resisted the efforts of the Church Temperance Society to raise the rate of licence in New York State, on the ground that it was conniving at the evil of drink in any way to compromise with the liquor trade, as it was a pernicious thing per se. In all the younger States Prohibition has won the day, and an extremely powerful social force would be required to repeal it. In the older States, reformers must be content for the present with a gradual advance in the direction of what these younger States have already achieved. This can only be done, in the Bishop's opinion, by total abstainers and temperate drinkers combining their forces, presenting a united front, and so making further legislation practicable and possible. "If we in England, however," his lordship continued, "had the legislation which already exists in many of the States in America on this matter, but which is not carried out, we should have as much as we want for the next fifty years. In most of the States liquor cannot be sold to minors; the sale is prohibited on Sundays; the adulteration of it is a legal offence; and it cannot be sold to persons already intoxicated. Until these laws are properly put in force in America, and until citizens will combine, as they have done already in Buffalo and Chicago, to see the law enforced, it is premature, and can only lead to a dangerous reaction, to try to obtain more legislation on the subject.

Bishop Thorold's actual experiences were singularly varied, so that he may fairly claim to speak with authority and not as an untravelled scribe. He attended, for instance, a great meeting at Boston, when there were 3000 persons present, under the auspices of the Church of England Temperance Society. An ex-Governor of the State took part in the proceedings, and among the audience were Judge Aneux, of New York, and Rev. Phillips Brooks, of Trinity Church. The Bishop made a point by reminding his audience that some years before they had wasted a little tea in their harbour! The quick-witted citizens of "the Hub" caught the allusion to the revolutionary war at once, and cheered the speaker to the echo when he proceeded to urge "a better way" for these modern days by establishing coffee and tea houses in competition with public-houses, and so protecting the thirsty public from the temptation of alcohol.

The C.E.T.S. set up its banner wherever the Bishop presented himself. He addressed crowded gatherings at Toronto, Buffalo, Farabault, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Detroit, Salt Lake City, and New York. He finds that public opinion has steadily grown into a conviction of the necessity of united Temperance action.

The legislature of Maine has during the present year passed by a large majority an Act to make Prohibition a law of the Constitution. This the Bishop rightly considers a most emphatic proof of the value of prohibitory legislation. Maine has thoroughly tried it, and, in spite of all that detraction can say, it has not been found wanting. Iowa, too, has just adopted prohibition, but the law is not yet thoroughly applied, for a bar is still to be found open at the Davenport railway-station within the Iowa State.

In all classes of society, and frequently in most unexpected quarters, there is a growing recognition of the power of the Temperance principle; for instance, on the passenger "liners" to America there is to be noted a discouragement to the sale of liquors. The head steward on one of the boats of the Allan line testifies that there is a most marked diminution in the sale of liquors on board as compared with the sale several years ago. "Of course," said the Bishop, in reply to a query, "some smuggling goes on in America, but that is only the abuse of a very good law; and, as a rule, the men who evade prohibitory legislation have to pay for their liquor; for instance, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, in the North-west, as much as two dollars is charged by the smugglers for a very small flask of beer."

It is thus that his lordship sums up his principles: "My threefold rule is, Prevention is better than cure; Restriction is wiser than prohibition; and Sacrifice is better than liberty. I have travelled ten thousand miles on behalf of Temperance—from Minnesota to Virginia, and from Massachusetts to Utah. American bishops, I find, are taking up Temperance with the greatest readiness, and the foremost men of the Episcopal Church are those who feel the paramount importance of dealing nationally with a great national evil."

AFRICA'S MILLIONS.

LAST Friday there was present at the Central-noon prayer-meeting Dr. W. K. Summers, who is about to go to Central Africa for evangelistic work, under the auspices of Bishop Taylor. Some time since, in a letter from Dr. Dowkontt, of New York, our readers were furnished with some details of the scheme formulated by Bishop Taylor, but we may here recapitulate them.

(1) That a line of Mission stations be established in Central Africa, extending from Loanda on the west to Lake Tanganyika in the east central region.

(2) That to this end two parties enter the "Dark Continent," one under the personal superintendence of Bishop Taylor, to start from Loanda, and the other under Dr. Summers, to enter from the Zambesi river; each party to consist of about twenty missionaries.

(3) The parties to establish stations along the way, leaving two Missionaries in each station, and so on until the pioneers meet in the interior.

(4) The Missionaries to be heart-consecrated men, willing to give their lives, if necessary, in the work of Christ for Africa.

(5) The Bishop's party to enter Loanda about Februnry, and the doctor's party to enter the Zambesi about April.

The Mission is to be on the self-supporting principle, as laid down in the "Great Commission," no man receeiving a salary, but depending upon God to supply all needs from the indigenous resources of the country. The only fund is an "outfit and transit" fund. The Lord has sent along about thirty of the men, and the fund will not be behind hand. Hasten the day, O Lord, when the knowledge of Thee and of thy blessed Son, Jesus, shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, for Christ's sake. Let the reader say, Amen!

WOOLWICH SOLDIERS' HOME.—The annual sale in aid of the funds of this Home will be held on December 4 and 5 in the hall attached to the Home. Contributions of all kinds will be thankfully received by Mrs. Digby Dent, the Woolwich Soldiers' Home.

LIFE IN GOD.

TOO often we seek our happiness
In flowers that all decay,
In gold that sears the heart,
In love that turns to clay,
In joys that all depart.

Forgetting that in God alone we find
The bliss of love complete,
The rest which ends in peace,
The troubled heart's retreat,
The sinner's full release.

And then we murmur and mourn that Life is a broken lyre,
A shattered temple's spoil,
An altar without fire,
A weary day of toil.

Until we realise that God is Love incarnate in Christ Jesus, and then we sing:
Thou art my love, my light,
Thou art my way, my end;
Thou art my soul's delight,
My God, my Christ, my Friend!

ROME AND THE BIBLE.

WE gather the following statements concerning the Bible from the utterances of some of the Popes since the Reformation. Innocent XI. commanded, in the year 1687, that "everyone should deliver up his Bible to the clergy of the place, who should burn them." Clement XI., in a Bull of 1713, condemned the affirmation of Quesnel the Jansenist, that "it is useful and necessary at every time and in every place that every man should study the Holy Scriptures." Clement XIII. threatened every lay reader of an Italian translation of the Bible with the galleys.

Pius VII., in a Bull of 1816, said "he trembled at the spread of the Holy Scriptures. This distribution is the most artful crime, through which the true foundations of religion will be undermined; it is a pestilence which must be healed and extirpated; a most corrupting pollution to the faith of any soul. It has been proved by experience that the distribution of the Holy Scriptures in the Mother-tongue has done more mischief than good." The same Pope in 1819 issued a Bull concerning the distribution of the Scriptures in the Irish schools, which states that this is sowing weeds, giving corrupt teaching, whereby the children in early years are inoculated with a most injurious poison.

In the year 1824, in an Encyclical, Leo XII. speaks of "a certain Society, generally known as the Bible Society, which is spreading over the world the Protestant Bible, which is the Gospel of the Devil." Gregory XVI. issued a Bull in 1844 against the Bible Society, in which he says, "We have decided to condemn with Apostolic authority every Bible Society." At the same time he commands the clergy "to tear the Bible in the Mother-tongue from the hands of the faithful." Pope Pius IX., in January 1850, says, "The Bible Society ventures to spread abroad the Scriptures in the Mother-tongue without any ecclesiastical notes or warning. Under false deception it invites the faithful to read the same. You, reverend brethren, will see with what watchful wisdom you must bestir yourselves to awaken in the faithful a holy horror of such poisonous reading."

According to these extracts, therefore, the world can receive no more dangerous book than the Bible, nothing from which it should shrink with more hatred.—Evang. Anzeiger.

THE NIGHT SCHOOL FOR MEN, at the Conference Hall, Mildmay, has again commenced with a large attendance.

MRS. J. W. BRADLEY, of Ealing, delivered an address on Social Purity, on Friday evening, to an intensely interested audience of men and women, in the Wesleyan Chapel, Denham, Bucks, under the auspices of the Uxbridge and District Social Purity Society.

THE STEWARDSHIP OF £1000.

EVERY word of the following anecdote is within my own personal knowledge. I only relate it because of the good which is communicated to our spirit when the loving ways of the Lord are distinctly traceable.

My surviving aunt, then about seventy, had a thousand pounds left to her. She had long lived on a very small income in very modest surroundings. When she received the legacy she paid it in to a banker's, and then asked me to meet her. I expect she had always been a giver according to her means, perhaps of food and clothes, if not of money. She told me she wished to give away this thousand pounds, having never had the opportunity of giving largely before. But her name was not to appear, and everything was to go through me.

As a beginning she wished to have a London City missionary in a new district, the place where she was living. This I arranged, and I think it continued for three years. There was an amusing feature about this matter, namely, that the City missionary whose salary she was paying, though he knew nothing of that, finding this respectable gentlewoman of the old school in his district, visited her!

Time rolled on—five years I think—during which she gave me directions from time to time. She liked variety, and sometimes the gift was for the blind, sometimes for a magic lantern to interest working-men in the evening, in natural, or scientific, or religious subjects, and so on. She was the moving spirit, and I her servant in this matter.

One Sunday morning (I was living about twenty miles from London) I received a letter to the effect that feeling faint she would ask me to travel up, though it was Sunday. I complied, and found her very much changed, much more so than the interval of a few months would have led me to expect. But she was ever a cheerful Christian, and this brightness remained. She said her time might be short, and she would like to complete the gifts of the balance of the thousand pounds. She named three or four objects. There was £157 left. She wished me to draw cheques, keep them till she was gone, and then deliver them. But I did not like this position. So she then decided to part with the money in her lifetime, and asked me to come up to London again the following day, and go round and deliver the cheques. This I did, returning home I think somewhat late on Monday. I reported to her by post on Tuesday.

On Thursday the post brought me two letters—one in my aunt's writing, and the other in a stranger's writing with a black border. The first was a brief expression of thanks and satisfaction, adding "I feel very faint." The other was from her landlady and friend, to say that shortly after my aunt had written to me she calmly fell asleep in Jesus.

It was a happy stewardship by her to her Lord and by me to her; and it was all so kindly arranged and controlled by our gracious Lord that I think the record of it will be profitable to his people.

THE CHANNEL.

AFRICAN EXPLORATION.—In his paper on Central African exploration, lately read before the Geographical Society by Mr. Joseph Thomson, he said he had accomplished his long and perilous journey without the loss of a single man by violence, and the necessity of shooting a single native.

YORKSHIRE WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.—The Annual Meeting and Conference was held at Barnsley on November 4 and 5, when delegates were present from eighteen of the branches; these gave many interesting details of the very varied Temperance work that has been done in the country during the year. The subject of bringing Temperance principles before the teachers of elementary and other schools was earnestly impressed on the Conference. Dr. Howie, of Liverpool, gave an able address on "Dipsomania, its causes and cure;" at the evening meeting for women he showed in a convincing way that alcohol is powerless to give strength for work.

A PLEA FOR NEWFOUNDLAND.

MISSIONARY work is carried on here amid privation and difficulty of which we who sit quietly at home little dream. In a letter lately received from a clergyman at Heart's Content, he says that the coming winter bids fair to be one of universal hardship and distress, as the fishery has been worse than has been known for years. Many men have come home without having earned the price of a barrel of flour to support themselves and their families through a Newfoundland winter.

At Heart's Content there is no school, the building being too old and leaky for use, but Mr. Smith hopes to get a schoolroom built in the winter, as the men when home from the fisheries will give their labour for this purpose. Indeed, he says, that he has known them work for this end expecting and receiving no payment, even when without food in their houses or money to buy it. Will any help these poor people by gifts, either of money to buy food, or warm clothing to ward off the bitter cold of winter, needed both by the missionaries and by the poor among whom they labour, striving to win them to Jesus? Should anyone wish for more detailed information I will be happy to communicate what I know.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.

THE Committee of this movement commenced a Conference at the Home of Hope, Regent-square, on the evening of Monday week, to open the winter season of work, and to implore the divine blessing upon it. Mr. Christien, the organising secretary, gave some interesting particulars, showing how the Lord is owning the efforts of his servants in this important and much-needed sphere of Christian labour. A plan was submitted and discussed by which every important locality in London would be placed under Christian visitation during the coming winter, and copies of the New Testament distributed among the fallen.

The gathering was very numerously attended and a spirit of devout prayerfulness—as well as gratitude for past mercies, was very markedly manifested by all those who took part in the conference. Mr. McCree, financial secretary, 8A, Red Lion Square, W.C., will be glad to hear from any friends desiring to assist this work.

On Friday, November 7, a meeting of foreign women, principally German, was convened in St. George's Mission Hall, Radcliffe-highway. A large number of invitations were distributed in the neighbourhood, and in some of the dancing saloons it is said that out of forty women thirty would be foreign. The invitations were kindly received, but there seemed to be a feeling of hopelessness in the minds of many, which is not surprising when many could, without doubt, tell a similar story to the following, which was listened to by one of the visitors. Two comely German women told of their being invited by an agent in Hamburg to go to London to situations certain to be obtained. They paid the agent's fees and their expenses, but on arrival were greatly distressed to find they were unfit for the work. They knew not what to do. They knew only their own language, and while waiting they were accosted by an elderly woman who appeared to sympathise with them very much, and told them she could take them to a home where they would be kindly cared for. Believing her, they went. She took them to a brothel in the neighbourhood of Wellclose-square, and got her fee for introducing them to a life of ruin. If English girls are decoyed by fiends in human forms to a career too horrible even to think about, in other lands, foreign women are entrapped in a similar way to their destruction here.

The meeting was a very quiet and encouraging one. Addresses in German were given by Rev. J. Sommer, German minister, and Mr. Botzer. Mrs. Sommer and other German ladies were present. Some of the company were English and Irish. All behaved exceedingly well. No cases of possible rescue will be overlooked by those engaged in this most important work.

GOSPEL WORK IN SPAIN.

THROUGH the Lord's goodness we are enabled still to go forward with the work of the Chamberi Mission, Madrid, and have much cause both to praise and to pray. We praise because we are put in trust with the Gospel in the centre of one of the most populous districts of the Capital of Spain; to sow, pretty much without let or hindrance, the pure Word of God among many thousands of people, by public preaching of the Gospel, at which there are always some new hearers; by the distribution of portions of the Scripture—thousands have been carefully and prayerfully given away, by scattering still more widely Gospel tracts and books; and by instructing the young, some three thousands boys and girls having been taught by believing teachers, with the Bible in their own hands, "What saith the Scripture?" on the vital questions of the soul, sin, and salvation. Those who realise the duty of evangelising all nations will rejoice, apart from results, that the pure unfailing Word of God has during so many years been sent forth so freely in this part of the land of the Inquisition; and, indeed, Chamberi was its Smithfield.

But for fruit we can also praise. A goodly number of faithful men and women have been saved, and are now contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, every one of them an abundant reward of all the prayers and efforts made by Christians in England.

Yet we have cause to pray. Here opposition in public has given way; but indifference is on the increase. Infidelity, the child of Popery, practically reigns everywhere. To see thousands and millions utterly dead to all the claims of God would make us despair did we not ever recall to mind his declaration that his Word shall accomplish that whereunto He sends it.

In September I got away from Madrid for a few days and visited the Missions of Vigo, Main, Coruna, Betanzos, &c. &c. There also I found bands of earnest disciples of Christ, bright, happy believers, but made to suffer no small tribulation for their adhesion to Christ. Still in the provinces, as in Madrid, in many parts, opposition is giving place to utter indifference. Let the prayer now be that the sown fields may receive the dew of heaven and spring forth and yield a harvest in quality and quantity so good and abundant that it may be to the praise of the glory of his grace.

During the fifteen years we have laboured in Spain, as eight years previously in England, our personal needs and those of our work have been met by persons sympathising with us and our service sending to us voluntary offerings as the Lord has put it into their hearts to do so. The one exception is the five schools under our direction which are generously sustained by Messrs. Müller and Wright, of Bristol. Now that I am speaking on this subject, I may answer a not unfrequent question, "How can we send money to Spain?" By the ordinary cheque, to order, and crossed, is the easiest and safest way. Postage stamps and postal orders have to be sent back to England. Bank of England notes are liable to be lost, but the cheque is safe, and if, in addition to the twopencehalfpenny postage, twopence more is paid for registering there is no risk.

ALBERT R. FENN.

Cardenal Cisneros 55, Madrid.

SOUTHAMPTON.—A Conference of ladies was held in the Philharmonic-rooms last week, with a view of increasing the usefulness of the Young Women's Christian Association, and hearing reports of the work from leading secretaries. After an address at the opening meeting by Mrs. Evered Poole, Mrs. Sanders (Southampton) reported that the branch there had 300 members. Miss L. Moor (Clifton) spoke of the work generally, stating that there were 400 branches in England and Wales. It is calculated that the total membership throughout the world amounts to 42,000. At a subsequent meeting, Mrs. Menzies (Liverpool) described the work in that city. In the evening she gave an evangelistic address to young women.

Notes and Comments.

WE would draw the special attention of young men in the West Central districts of London to a series of addresses at Exeter Hall Y.M.C.A., by Rev. Evan Hopkins, Richmond, commencing next Thursday evening, Nov. 20, at 8 p.m.

The town of Gateshead is feeling the pinch of the present distress as much as its neighbours Newcastle and Sunderland. A writer in a local paper gives a harrowing description of the destitute cases to be met with, and says:—

"The poverty and hunger, indeed, amongst the working classes, are as intense as elsewhere. The cases are not so numerous as they are in Newcastle, but worse cases cannot certainly be found elsewhere, and the bare fact that some hundreds are starving, calls for aid with a voice that should not be unnoticed. In the face of so much genuine distress the committee are powerless to act effectually, and the subscriptions that have come in are barely sufficient to meet the want for a single week. I appeal for support for the suffering poor, and most sincerely and urgently recommend the work of the Gateshead committee to the consideration of those who enjoy the luxury of doing good, and to all who feel for men, women, and children, in hundreds of cases without any fault of their own, who have been dragged by bad times to all the pangs of a slow starvation."

The Hon. Secretary of the Relief Committee is Mr. T. Lumsden, West-street, Gateshead.

In acknowledging the kind donations recently sent to us by our readers for the orphan home at Epsom, Miss Mittendorff writes:—

"Dear Brother in Christ,—So many thanks for sending me the cheque of £35. Now I can make up my accounts and pay all I owe. The Lord be praised for this new token of his love and care. May He bless the kind givers."

It is intended to present a testimonial of an entirely non-political character to Mr. R. N. Fowler, M.P., on his retirement from the office of Lord Mayor of London. The admirable way in which he has discharged the duties of that position will be recognised and admitted by all classes. His regard to the interests of various religious institutions, and his readiness to place the Mansion House as often as possible at their service, has earned for him the grateful and hearty regard of all sections of the Christian Church.

The Rev. Morlais Jones, of Lewisham, has been appointed Merchants' Lecturer, in place of the late Dr. Aveling. A better appointment could scarcely have been made. Mr. Jones will bring great ability and vivacity into a service which requires the exercise of these qualities, in order to its utility and practical influence.

The depression in trade continues to increase, and the prospects for the winter appear to be anything but bright. All the great centres of industry are sending forth the notes of complaint and perplexity. At a conference of working men, held last week at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, various causes were suggested as operating to produce the existing state of things; foreign competition and piracies of English inventions were specially dwelt upon. A resolution was passed urging Government to take steps to inquire into the present stagnation in trade. Such an inquiry seems to be eminently desirable on every ground.

In his Oxford lecture on "The Pleasures of Faith," Mr. Ruskin uttered a truism when he said, "We continually hear of the trials, and sometimes of the victories of faith, but scarcely ever of its pleasures." And yet true faith, so far from being joyless or sad, is of all elements in life the most inspiring and cheering to the heart, bringing Christ to the soul, strengthening the spirit, and lighting up the future with radiant hope; no principle more contributes to solid and substantial joy than Christian faith. It would be well for the Church itself, as well as for the world, if all the followers of Christ exhibited more of the joy that springs from a holy faith in Him.

Mr. Ruskin expressed the truth none too strongly when he thus pointed out the reason of failure:—

"In all we now do we expose ourselves to countless miseries, because we depend only on our own power, and choose only our own gratification, with no thought of working except for ourselves or others in whose welfare we are equally selfishly interested, until the idea of acting with any other object has come to be like the precentor's invitation to a company of little voice and less practice 'to sing to the praise and glory of God.'"

His advice was good when he added: "Begin each day with Alfred's prayer, 'Fiat voluntas tua,' and set to work with no thought of ambition, gain, or pleasure more than is appointed you, but with a steady determination to do something for the help or honour of your country, resolving not to join in the world's iniquities, nor to turn away from its miseries. Live thus, and believe that with a swiftness of answer proportionate to the truth of your endeavour, the God of hope will fill you with joy and peace in believing."

Dr. Thain Davidson, in a charge delivered to a minister lately settled in London, gave advice that many preachers would find it beneficial to follow. Those whose great aim is to shine in the matter of oratorical display and to discuss "modern thought," would do well to adopt such counsels as these:—

"Aim at directness and point; they are simply invaluable. Preach straight, sending the word straight to the heart and conscience. As M'Cheyne said, 'Let the conscience of the audience feel the hand of the preacher searching it.' Do not forget that the pulpit is still the mightiest weapon in proclaiming the Word. Feed the most intellectual of your congregation with things which little children may understand. Give the thoughts of the few in the words of the many. One does not need to aim at appearing learned in order to impart instruction. You must seek for the power to stimulate your hearers. A dull manner and such a message as we have are incompatible. The preacher's heart must be in sympathy with the subject. It is in proportion as we feel the reality of the Word that we can press it home to the hearers. But there is a mistake some make which please avoid. Do not suppose that perspiration is inspiration."

Among the speakers at a recent meeting of the Church of England Temperance Society was Lord Napier of Magdala. His Lordship referred to the interest with which he regarded the progress of Temperance in the army, and described the movement as one of great national importance. His testimony as given in the following words is worthy of careful attention:—

"During his experience as commander of the armies in India he had found that the Temperance societies were the greatest supporters of military discipline and good conduct. Whilst holding that position he had a return prepared relating to 18,000 men, and found that amongst the total abstainers there was no crime, amongst the partial abstainers practically none, for the whole body of crime was amongst the non-abstainers."

Rev. E. P. Hammond sails from the United States for this country on the 12th instant, per ss. Oregon. We trust the friends of evangelistic work throughout the kingdom, and especially those who labour for the conversion of the young, will do what they can to ensure the success of Mr. Hammond's visit to our shores. Letters for him may be addressed to our care.

In the current number of Africa (6d., S. W. Partridge & Co.), Mr. R. Cust raises a strong protest against "the scramble for Africa" that is going on among the European Powers. Why, he pertinently asks, should not Europeans leave Africa alone, restricting themselves to legitimate commerce and the peaceful settlement of missionaries? We know not what righteous reply could be made to the question. Mr. Cust further says:—

"It appears therefore to me that the great States of Europe, England, France, and Germany, ought to be ashamed of their conduct towards defenceless Africa; they would not dare to act in this way to the smallest State in Europe. All public law is set aside, all the conventional decencies of warfare, all idea of meum and tuum, is put out of sight. A German agent and a German vessel drop along the coast, and hoist up a pocket-handkerchief in token that that particular town, whether part of Damaraland or Namaqualand, or the Cameroons, or the Gold Coast, has ceased to belong to the tribe, which has inhabited it for centuries, and is transferred to the German Empire. A form of treaty is signed, but in a few days the treaty will be violated; then will come lofty notions of violated treaties, insulted flags, and national honour. Surely it is the fable of the Wolf and the Lamb again. It is the saddest sight, but the deadly climate will prove the infallible avenger of the Negro on the white man, who has abolished the Slave Trade, and substituted Earth-greed."

We would strongly commend to all who are interested in the Dark Continent the perusal of Africa. We regret to see, from an editorial note in the present issue, that it is likely to be discontinued soon, unless increased support is forthcoming.

The almost sudden death of Mr. Fawcett, the late Postmaster-General, has filled the whole country with a sense of heavy loss and deep regret. It has been the lot of but few statesmen to make so many friends and so few enemies. His large heart, ready tact, and incessant efforts to benefit the community by reforms in the department he conducted won for him universal esteem, while the way in which he not only bore but triumphed over the affliction which he endured in the deprivation of sight filled all who knew him with admiration. The country owes the deceased statesman a great debt of gratitude, and will long cherish the remembrance of his name with affectionate respect.

The records of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals show that a very large amount of inhumanity and cruelty is perpetrated in our land, and that the young are very deficient in knowledge of what is right in this respect. There is urgent need that teachers of every class should enforce the duty of kindness to the animal creation on pupils entrusted to their care. An immense amount of education on the other side is being given, as for instance when children are allowed, as is the case in many places, to gather round the doors of slaughter-houses, and witness the butchery within; and also in public cattle markets, where drovers and others continually set bad examples in relation to the treatment of animals. In every school and in every family lessons of mercy and kindness to the brute creation should be inculcated.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe will give an account of his evangelistic work in Russia, at Burlington Hall, Savile-row, Regent-street, W., on Wednesday evening, November 19, at 8

The annual gatherings of the American Board of Missions have just been held in Columbus, Ohio. The basis of this institution is unsectarian, and great blessing appears to rest upon its operations in various parts of the world. Through its 429 missionaries and its 504 native pastors and catechists it is preaching the Gospel in twenty-five different languages and dialects in more than 800 towns and cities every Lord's Day. Its colleges and high schools have more than 4000 young men and women under training, while more than 30,000 children are being taught in its common schools, where direct Christian instruction is constantly given. The report for the year past, specially in reference to the work in Japan and Turkey, is most encouraging.

The work of the Board in West Central Africa has lately received a most violent and unexpected shock, through an order given by Kwikwi, the king of Bailunda, to the missionaries to vacate that district at once. The order was of a most stern and peremptory kind, so that there was no appeal from it. The king was instigated to the act by the false representations of a Portuguese trader, who had shown his enmity to the Mission on several previous occasions, but had been unable to disturb their work or the peaceful relations between them and the natives where they dwelt. At the risk of life, and with the loss of all their personal possessions, as well as of the Mission property, the missionaries had to fly from their homes and to take refuge in Benguela, where they are at present waiting to see what steps are taken for their redress and reinstatement.

A petition has been put into the hands of the Governor of Benguela, and he has inquired the amount of loss, and promised redress and restitution. The resumption of the work must largely depend on the action of the Portuguese Government, of whom an article in the current number of Africa justly says:—

"The eyes of all Christendom will be upon Portugal in this matter, and it will be to her everlasting shame if she fail to deal justly, vigorously, and speedily. She has a grand opportunity to assert her alleged authority over these rude peoples in the interior who have so injured men and women that were under her protection, to commend her justice and energy in the sight of the European nations, and to prove her magnanimity and chivalry in the judgment of the civilised world. She walks and acts in the eye of the world, and it is much to be hoped that she will prove herself fully equal to the occasion."

The struggle for the Presidency of the United States is over, and Mr. Cleveland, the Democratic candidate, has been elected. The office is one sufficient to gratify the ambition of any politician who aims at power, placing its possessor, as it does, at the head of the largest and wealthiest Republic in the world. Twenty-two Presidents in all have been elected, seven of them having held the post twice in succession. Let us hope the result of the fierce light which has been thrown upon the moral aspects of the election will be that the new President will prove a more ardent reformer of every kind of abuse than those opposed to him would lead us to expect. He has the opportunity of vindicating his position in a very practical way.

Remarking on the fearful massacre of 400 persons lately perpetrated by King Theebaw of Rangoon, The Bombay Guardian asks whether European Powers have no responsibility in connection with these brutal slaughters.

We are sure all our readers, and especially the old friends of our dear brother Richard Weaver, will read the following letter from his physician with sorrow and sympathy, and will warmly respond to the request for prayer:—

Dear Sir,—I exceedingly regret to inform you that Mr. Richard Weaver has had an attack of Angina Pectoris. I fear he will not be able to undertake any duty for some time to come. I shall be glad to answer any questions. I feel sure that you and all the London friends will unite with me in prayer to God, that he may yet be spared a little longer in his career of usefulness.

I am, yours faithfully,
Israel J. E. Renshaw, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

The Rev. Edward White has been lecturing to artisans on the English Peasantry, their present and future condition. He urged that, in view of the existing state of things, it is the duty of the religious instructors of the people to awaken the public mind to the fact that one of two things must come soon, reform or violent revolution, and to persuade all honest public-spirited men to aid in the choice of the former while it is possible. The importance of laying increasing stress just now on personal character, both moral and religious, cannot be over-estimated. Political elevation can do little for a people who are drunkards and indolent spendthrifts. Mr. White gave it as his opinion that if the workmen of England would abandon their drinking habits, in five years they would carry all the great reforms they desired.

The proposal of the Charity Commissioners to alienate the Newcomen Charity from its original purpose is to be viewed with censure, as well as regret. By this trust 225 children of the Borough of Southwark have for more than 200 years past been educated and clothed. The Commissioners now propose to put a stop to the clothing, and establish scholarships and exhibitions instead. At the 279th anniversary of the birth of the founder, held last week, the Lord Mayor and others protested against this interference with what was the unquestionable right of the children coming under the terms of the bequest. "The suite of lynnen and woollen once a yeare for the cloathing of poore boyes and girles," which was devised by the founder, is no small consideration to those for whose benefit it was intended. Such encroachments on the rights of the poor are too common already; we are glad that one of the last acts of the Lord Mayor has been to oppose this one.

The rescue and emigration work carried on by Mrs. Birt and her helpers among the waifs and strays of Liverpool is a very important one, and perhaps it scarcely receives the share of public attention that it deserves. In a recent letter to the Liverpool daily papers, Mrs. Birt describes the various branches of the mission, and pleads for co-operation in a sale of work that is to be held in St. George's Hall in December. The proceeds of the sale are to be devoted to the provision of large and better accommodation for the children while under training before being sent to Canada. We doubt not many of our readers will be glad to have a share in this good work. Mrs. Birt's address is 1, Sugnall-street, Liverpool.

The Chicago Advance says that among many American pastors and churches there is the most cordial feeling towards the evangelistic work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and there is the expectancy of a general revival of religion this winter.

Another subscriber cautions our readers against the wiles of "a respectable looking woman about fifty," who in person answers advertisements in our columns, and endeavours to extract money for the payment of her travelling expenses. As we lately remarked, all such cases, when money is asked for, are to be treated with suspicion, and friends who are sought to be imposed upon have the remedy in their own hands.

Mr. James Pascoe, the solitary missionary in the Mexican mountains, holds the fort bravely, despite a succession of mishaps and difficulties that would long ago have daunted any ordinary mortal. It is refreshing to read in his little "Occasional Paper," entitled Mexico, how by dint of courage, perseverance, and sanctified ingenuity, he manages to circumvent the enemies of the work. The Lord has so blessed his evangelistic labours on the mountains that there are now four congregations in the municipality.

Mr. Pascoe himself officiates in the congregation at San Telmo. Of the others he writes:—

"There is more of real triumph in these three outlying congregations than our generous supporters in England imagine. Not only are they witnessing for Jesus at the constant risk of their lives; but they set a healthy example to other Protestants. In each congregation the preachers are all unpaid, and there are two such leaders to each flock. All the Bibles, tracts, or other books they require we give to them freely. Of expenses they have none, neither for rents nor for lights."

This is a kind of missionary work that deserves encouragement. Some of our readers would not only be helping a noble worker but would get a blessing to themselves, if they would send an occasional word of cheer and expression of sympathy to Mr. Pascoe, whose complete postal address is, Sr. Santiago Pascoe, Ixtapan, del Oro, Estº. de Mexico.

The motto discovered by Mr. Ruskin on the church of St. Giacomo di Rialto, at Venice, gives good counsel for the guidance of men engaged in commercial pursuits. When translated it reads, "Around this temple let the merchant's law be just, his weights true, and his covenants faithful." A more general regard to the grand truth inscribed on the portico of our own Royal Exchange would also tend to purify the world from the dishonesty and trickery which so extensively prevail. Men too often forget that "the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof;" absorbed in their own selfish schemes, they ignore the God whose laws they were created to obey.

English Presbyterians are decidedly awake, and are advancing steadily as a religious organisation. The London Presbytery has resolved to proceed with the erection of churches at Oxford and Cambridge, thus establishing their principles in the two great centres of the nation's intellectual life. Such advances can be regarded with no feeling other than that of fraternal congratulation. No section of the Church has had a more honourable history in the past, or makes a more faithful stand for orthodox truth in the present.

AN EX-CONVICT'S STORY.

A NARRATIVE unusually interesting in character has just been issued by the St. Giles' Christian Mission to discharged prisoners, illustrating the spiritual results of the labours of that Mission amongst criminals.

Convict B—— wrote to The Standard a letter which appeared on the 26th of September, and awakened considerable interest and attention. Therein he described his experiences during seven years' penal servitude, and told how his efforts after reformation had been furthered by prison and police officials. So successful had he been that he had reached the position of overseer in the printing house of a large London firm. The present story begins where the ex-convict's ended. He was laid on a dying-bed by consumption; he wrote to Scotland-yard, and Inspector Neame not only sent help, but placed the case in the hands of Mr. Wheatley, of the St. Giles' Christian Mission.

On his first visit Mr. Wheatley found F—— an avowed sceptic, bluntly declaring he believed in none of these things. He was not, however, to be shaken off, and set plainly before the sick man the love of God in Christ. On his next visit he took with him a copy of Mr. Moody's 'Way to God," which the man promised to read. In the course of conversation it seemed that the one thing that staggered him was that the Son of God should die for sinners. He had never understood this before; if that were true it upset all his previous thoughts of God. Time after time Mr. Wheatley was at his bedside; gradually the light dawned, and at length he laid hold of salvation with a firm grasp, that no after-thoughts could shake or loosen.

It is now a great privilege to sit by him and hear how he talks of God. Here are a few fragments of his conversation as given in the book referred to:—

"How is it with you to-day?" "Well, nothing but well—it's all well, now."

"Haven't you pain as you had?" "Pain, oh yes," and a fit of coughing stopped his utterance for a time—"pain, yes; but I wasn't thinking of that. 'Twas dark, and now 'tis light."

"Can you read much?" "No, my head won't let me, but I can think."

"And what do you think of?" "I was a thinking this morning how that I've fought against God all my days, and He's saved me like this. Why! He loved me—what for I don't know, but He did and He has delivered me. But what a deliverance. Who knows the thoughts I had of Him at times! Who knows how I hated the name of religion! But God knows: He knew it all the time. 'Seems to me first thing I'll do when He shuts my eyes here, is go straight to his feet, and tell Him I've never deserved it."

"Like the father with his prodigal boy, He may shut your mouth."

"But it'll be in my heart all the same. And the curiousest thing about it is I don't know how He's done it. He conquered me, I don't know how. The arguments I'd picked up seem like as good as ever, if 'twere matter of argument; but it aint, it's fact, and there's an end to it. Seems like blind eyes opened. I'd been arguing as there were no sun shining, but my eyes were opened and there it was bright and clear. I tell you what, argument is no good, an unbelieving man don't know what you're talking about. He thinks of things just as he sees them, and don't understand what it's all about. I never did."

"No: the carnal heart is at enmity with God, and knoweth not the things of the Spirit."

"How can he? I've been thinking, it's like this, sir. I'm a driving a horse; I've had it a long time, and love it. Well, I may try to, but I can't understand its mind, or spirit, or instinct, whatever you call it. I'd like to, but I can't. And the horse loves me and knows me, but it can't understand my spirit, though likely enough it wants to. We can't get to know one another's thoughts, but there's one thing that horse does know, and that's when you touch the rein. Now, sir, 'twas just like that with me. I did not understand these things, but when God touched me, I had to yield whether or no. I could not help myself. Then when I yielded, He put life in me, and I began to understand. That baby has got the life of a man and the spirit of a man; it can understand something, though not much yet. That's me, sir. I've got life now, and I begin to understand. Seems as if I had learned a new language. I don't know much, but when you talk of these things, I know what you mean."

"As you didn't before?"

"That's it; and now I want to say, for the sake of other men, there are hundreds, there's thousands, who read the papers, and know plenty about the world, but they don't know that God loves them. I tell you they don't know it. They know there's something called religion, but they don't know that there's pardon for them. They don't know Christ died for sinners. Oh! sir, don't forget they don't know it. Nobody ever told them in words they could understand."

After a long pause, the wearied frame demanding rest, he burst out—

"Oh! to think He should have saved me after the life I've led. I can't serve Him as I've served the devil—there's but one thing I must do, and that is what I can do to undo the evil I've done here (pointing towards the next room where his wife and family sat). God give me strength to undo that. Strange don't it seem to think I'll never leave this room, never go down the stairs till I'm carried in the coffin. But there's one thing I know; not all the grave-diggers in London could dig a grave deep enough to hold my spirit, no coffin can hold it. God will have it. Seems to me I've been like a great cake of wax, not all the knocking and argument in the world can get it to run through a hole; but light a candle and how soon it runs. That's it; logic couldn't break me, but the love of God melted me right away. I couldn't stand that, and I'm sure God taught you what to say."

Long we sat in this room, learning lessons of simple trust by the bedside of him who so long had resisted God, but who now, vanquished by his grace, was entuned with the grand theme of the love of God. After a sweet time of prayer around his bed, we left, with the music of the angels ringing in our hearts, for "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth."

The indefatigable secretary had another case in his note book, imperatively demanding a visit, and he kindly invited me to accompany him on a first interview with a liberated convict. What manner of man we were to meet neither of us knew; only that on the preceding day he had been discharged from Wormwood Scrubs on special licence, which to the initiated means sickness unto death. The address noted led us to a most respectable suburb and a quiet, genteel street. Then we knew it must be one of those sad cases where sin has entered and blighted a respectable home. Yes, so it was; the discharged convict we found lying in a well-furnished room, nursed by a sorrowing mother, who had only received her erring one from prison to die. No money was wanted here, only the ministry of the Christian messenger. So ere long an opening was found for the story of redeeming love, but how cheered we were to hear the sick man respond—

"Yes, that is my only hope, I KNOW" (and such emphasis he threw into the words I KNOW), "He died for me."

"Where did you learn it?"

"In prison from my Bible. In my cell the sins of my life rose up before me, I was broken in pieces till the Gospel I'd heard many a time before came to my mind, and I said: Is it for me? I turned to the Bible and found it was."

The remainder of the interview was very satisfactory so far as the sick man was concerned. I introduce it here briefly to show how Mr. Wheatley went with the definite purpose of pointing the man to Christ. The work had in this case been already done, but that he knew not. He went as he had previously gone to F——, and as he goes continually to others, in his incessant labours, with the message of mercy, the story of the Cross.

Such are two instances, gleaned from many, of the manner in which God is blessing the work of this Mission. As to its social and reforming results, prison, police, and legal officials unite in declaring these to be widespread and beneficial. We learn that this valuable Mission is greatly in need of funds; the wide extension of the work, from the pressing claims made by many willing to be guided to better paths, renders it essential the workers should be liberally and heartily supported. While the hand of the Lord is with them so manifestly they dare not draw back, yet without large-handed helping it seems impossible to go forward.

The superintendent of the Mission is Mr. George Hatton, 12, Ampton-place, Regent-square, W.C., of whom the book referred to, "What Fruit?" may be obtained.

HOLINESS CONVENTION, EDINBURGH.

THE Free Church Assembly Hall was the scene of four animated meetings a day for three days, beginning Tuesday, Oct. 28. At the 9.30 prayer meeting each morning the Bible Exposition was given by Rev. E. W. Moore. One morning will not easily be forgotten. We were urged in fervent words and with fervid manner to follow our Master as Elisha followed Elijah in the last stages of his life. The places passed were typical of our Christian life; Gilgal, Bethel, Jericho, Jordan. Then follows the enduement with the power of the Master, that we may do his works, nay "greater works than these."

Major Edmonds had the conduct of the meetings. His songs and solos, together with Mrs. Somerton's, accompanied by harp and harmonium, helped many in their devotion of their hearts, their lips, and their lives to the service of God. Others on the platform who took part were Lieut.-Colonel Sladen, R.A., Colonel and Mrs. Pepper, Miss E. M. Booth, Rev. E. L. Hamilton, Rev. A. C. D. Ryder, Dr. Woods Smyth Messrs. S. H. Hodges, Chas. Hoe, Govan, &c.

The object of the Convention being the promotion of Scriptural and Christian holiness, the general subject for the three days was "Pentecostal Christianity." On the first day its privileges were stated thus: Cleansed from all Unrighteousness (Acts xv. 8-9; 2 Cor. vii. 1; 1 John i. 9); Filled with the Spirit (Acts iv. 31; Eph. v. 18); Kept by the power of God (Phil. iv. 6-7; 1 Peter i. 5). On the second day: Its Conditions: Presentation of the body or surrender of the will to God (Rom. xii. 1, 2.) Abiding by faith in Christ (John xv. 4); Obedience to the Spirit (Numbers xiv. 24; Rom. viii. 14).

On the third day the subject was to have been Its Results: (1) Unity in the Churches; Love to the Brethren. (2) Self-sacrifice for the world; Love to Souls. (3) Growth in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. But at the earnest request of some students the subject was changed to the Baptism of the Holy Ghost. It was set forth by more than one speaker that the baptism of the Lord Jesus was promised to be with the Holy Ghost and with fire, and that this was claimed in the early Church, as at Samaria and Ephesus in the history of the Acts. The Church of the present day is too apt to be content with a baptism somewhat corresponding with the baptism of John the Baptist.

Many showed their earnest desire to claim this filling with the Holy Spirit by standing on their feet. At the closing meeting many professed to have received definite blessing at the Convention. In private as well as in public numbers who had come from distances far south and far north testified to the mighty power of God. R.

SOUTHEND.—A Freehold site has been purchased here by the "Unpledged Abstainers' Union," and has been conveyed to trustees for the erection of the Union Hall, for which there is great need in this place. The Union, at an expense of over £100, have already erected here a granite drinking fountain, and a granite drinking trough for horses, dogs, &c. The treasurer is Bishop Gregg, Southend, Essex.

A HOME WITHIN A HOSPITAL.

THE funds for the establishment of Bolingbroke House were provided by those who wished to give to sick persons the advantages of hospital treatment and nursing, with home surroundings, upon paying such a reasonable fee as their means allowed, and so relieve the great free hospitals. Hitherto six gentlemen have acted as a medical staff, and treated all cases, but as this was believed to limit the usefulness of the Institution, they very considerately withdrew, to enable any qualified medical practitioner to send in a patient under his own special care and treatment.

Trained nursing, with proper sanitary surroundings and hospital treatment, generally in the best air within the four-mile radius, are such obvious advantages to patient and doctor alike, that now that Bolingbroke House is available to any qualified practitioner, we may expect all its beds to be constantly occupied.

It meets the special need of those who fall sick in lonely lodgings. It is a home within a hospital, and it gives a helping hand to those who in time of sickness are willing to help themselves.

The Honorary Secretary, Mr. J. S. Wood, Woodville, Upper Tooting, S.W., will send a prospectus to anyone writing for it.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
J. Erskine Clarke, Trustee.

THE CHURCH AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

IN our last issue we mentioned an appeal issued by Major-General Haig: it refers primarily to the evangelisation of Southern Arabia and the Somali tribes on the opposite coast of Africa. We subjoin the complete passage from which we quoted, and which applies to foreign missions anywhere:—

"A most perplexing feature of the revived Christianity of the present day is the comparatively feeble impulse it has given to the work of foreign missions. To many this statement will seem the reverse of the truth, because so many have actually gone forth into the heathen field where a century ago there was hardly a single labourer. But does the number of these bear a fair proportion either to the vast increase of Christian workers as compared with former times, or with the vastness of the foreign field? The contrary is the fact. Although communications with every part of the world have been so wonderfully extended, and the fact of the existence of nearly 1,000,000,000 of heathen and Mahomedans is being daily more and more forced upon our attention by information pouring in from every quarter, it seems as if nothing can rouse English Christians to anything like an adequate comprehension of the true state of the case.

"Almost all our sympathies are absorbed by the work at home; few seem to be capable of looking beyond the narrow seas that surround our little island, and taking in the thought that, whatever the need of labourers here, it is infinitely greater abroad. It is pleasant to live in our comfortable homes, and to have some nice handy little sphere of labour which, while it keeps us interested, and furnishes occupation to our energies, calls for just as little self-sacrifice as suffices to flatter our self-esteem. It is quite another thing to go abroad, to suffer physically, mentally, spiritually, not to know what home or comfort mean, to have no fixed income it may be, but to look to the Lord for support, to labour without sympathy from those around us, unknown and unheard of, and with the heart often sick with long-deferred hope of fruit. But which is nearest to the Apostolic life? which most resembles the life of the Lord Himself? Yet there are some—a few—who would, if they could, choose this life. May this appeal reach them!"

DR. OSWALD DYKES is giving a course of lectures on "David" in Regent-square Church, on Sabbath mornings.

GERMAN EVANGELISTIC SOCIETY.

DEAR SIR,—May I convey, through you, my warm regards to the kind friends who entrusted me with gifts to the amount of £500 when I visited England last spring? That visit was memorable in more ways than one. I learned personally to know and love dear Mr. Moody, as well as other brethren of different sections of Christ's Church, whom I had long desired to see face to face—Dr. Saphir and Mr. Spurgeon among them.

It is due to those English friends who have manifested so much sympathy in our work here—a sympathy which I trust and hope will continue and increase—that I should give from time to time a few details of our progress. Soon after my return home last April we invited a North German named Papké, who had been trained and prepared in Switzerland, to join us in our "Johanneum," at Bonn. This is the name we have given to our evangelistic centre. We found Papké so ripe for active service, that we sent him on after a short interval to our friends at Berlin, where he has been, since June, very busily engaged in the much-neglected northern district of that capital. He works in connection with two valued members of our staff, Count Pückler, and Count Bernstorff, giving addresses in a hall which seats about 500, holding Bible-classes and prayer meetings for young and older men, and helping in Sunday-schools also. His wife is similarly engaged amongst women. The special gifts, and the steady, faithful service of this good man, are much valued by us, and blessed by God. He holds every Sunday morning an early meeting for the outcast and homeless, to whom a free breakfast is given.

In the large hall of the City Mission-house, which seats some 1500, our gifted and zealous friend, the Rev. F. von Schluembach, is now carrying on his evangelistic work. This "German Moody," as the Americans style him, worked with us two years ago in several districts with marked success, and the fruits of his labours are very apparent, especially in the Christian Men's Association, which he formed. He will from time to time give valuable help to various Y.M.C.A.'s in some of our northern towns, though his chief labours will be in Berlin itself, where we hope that God will again own his efforts with very blessed results, as he graciously did in 1882-3.

In August last the Evangelical Society in Bern agreed to give us for some months the help of their much blessed evangelist, Rev. E. Schrenk (formerly missionary of the Basle Society in West Africa). He is now holding daily evangelistic services in Bremen, a very hard soil, where he is so valued that he will have to remain there for the whole of his leave of absence. In the great awakening at Basle two years ago, when hundreds were brought to Christ, Schrenk's penetrating preaching was the chief instrument.

I must also mention, that in connection with another of our friends, Herr von Oertzen, in Hamburg, eight evangelists are now working in the province of Schleswig-Holstein, where encouragements are not wanting.

A medical doctor from Westphalia, named Buescher, who studied in Philadelphia, and was for a time private tutor in a Christian family at Southampton, has resolved to devote his life to evangelistic work, and has taken up his residence in our Johanneum for about a year to prepare himself thoroughly.

My friends will remember that I purchased the house, chapel, schoolroom, students' rooms, and extensive garden ground for £4000. Nearly £600 of this sum has now been paid, and current expenses have been met as well as the cost of expensive repairs. The premises now present a very inviting appearance, and foreign friends are heartily welcomed. Will our English friends continue to strengthen our hands by prayer and sympathy?

MISSION TO LEPERS IN INDIA.

A SMALL, but deeply-interesting pamphlet, under the title "Lepers in India" (J. F. Shaw), fell into the hands of a lady in Brighton just two years since, and the harrowing facts therein related stirred her up to make an effort on their behalf. By circulating the facts of the case among her friends, so lively an interest was excited on behalf of the poor sufferers (of whom 135,000 exist in India) that it was determined to establish an Auxiliary Society in Brighton, the head-quarters of the Parent Society being in Dublin. During the first year the sum of £147 14s. 4d. was transmitted to the Parent Society, and this has led to the establishment of a new Asylum at Lohar-daggar, Chota Nagpore.

It is confidently believed that many would gladly help if they would but read the above-mentioned little book. They would then see for themselves the magnitude of the evil with which, by God's help, the Society is dealing. It is a cause of the utmost thankfulness that those poor creatures, destitute as regards this world, are very graciously dealt with by our heavenly Father. Many of them have been brought to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. The missionary in charge of the new Asylum mentions that the six inmates already received are rejoicing in their new home, and that the spiritual part of his work is most satisfactory. Lepers can be supported in the Asylums at the small cost of £6 per head per annum. The hon. secretaries in Brighton are Miss Hornbuckle, 3, Alexandra-villas, and Miss Mohun, Talbot House, Clarendon-place.

"EPHPHATHA, THAT IS, BE OPENED."

SUCH is the "motto" of the Dublin Protestant Deaf and Dumb Association, for the propagation of the Gospel among the adult deaf and dumb. The claims and liabilities of this Society are not large. The expenses of the past year were not more than £250, but as the receipts from all quarters amounted only to £200, it is evident that more support is needed. The attainment of this object ought not to be difficult, seeing that among the patrons of the Association are the Archbishop of Dublin, also the Bishops of Cork and Down.

The objects of the Association are to secure or the deaf and dumb the privilege of Divine worship conducted in a language they can understand; to promote their intellectual culture by courses of lectures on week-day evenings; to assist the deaf and dumb of all religious denominations in obtaining suitable employment; to provide an interpreter in case of dispute between them and their employers and others; to visit the sick at their homes and in hospitals, and grant pecuniary relief in deserving cases. The annual report shows "that the only effectual means of imparting to them scriptural teaching is by conducting services in the finger-and-sign language, and that such public services are an absolute necessity if they are to receive edifying religious instruction in a place of worship." The Bishop of Meath says, "Mr. Maurice Hewson, one who is afflicted like themselves, discharges the duties of Bible-reader and teacher among his afflicted brethren. His work includes Sunday and week-evening services, which are well attended by a most attentive congregation. This indefatigable worker has been set apart for his duties by the Archbishop of Dublin, whose heart would be greatly cheered if an increased interest in his labours was shown." Any help towards this deserving work may be sent to Mr. Hewson, 21, Christian Union-buildings, Dublin.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS IN CHINA.—The Franco-Chinese War is doing serious injury to Mission work. The general superintendent of the Wesleyan Missions in the Canton district, states that the work of preaching the Gospel there is practically put a stop to for the present, and that at Fatshan both the Wesleyan and the London Missionary Chapels have been dismantled and partly destroyed. In the province of Quan Tung many chapels have been destroyed. The native Christians are suffering great persecution.—Christian Commonwealth.

EASTERN KABYLIA.

PASSING the night on the deck of the steamer from Algiers to Bougie, we saw the coast ablaze in various places, from incendiary fires of forests, showing that a good deal remains to be done to conciliate the former occupiers of the soil. The road from Bougie to Setif passes through the romantic Chabet-el-Akhira (the Gorge of Agony), sublime and terrible, running for six miles and a half in a narrow pass, the mountains rising perpendicularly on each side over our heads to the height of about six thousand feet. It emerges at the French village of Kerrata, which has a Thursday market; this, of course, means a large gathering of the people from neighbouring tribes. Our object is to penetrate the Kabyle-speaking country as marked on General Hannoteau's language map. This region is about eight times as extensive as the Kabylia of Jur-Jura. The diligence puts us down at the little village of Tizi-n-Bechar, and we mount to Takitount, where there are a fort and a few houses. The fort sustained a siege in 1871, but all is perfectly tranquil now. A little one-roomed cottage has been placed at our disposal, and we have to live a gipsy kind of life, doing our cooking in the open air. Sundry visitors approach us—a wild cat, a toad, immense African spiders, dogs, magpies, &c.

We are 3500 feet above the sea, with a panorama of mountains all round us. The eye is satiated with the weird and uncommon scenery. We drink in the health-giving breezes of these heights, and we get the waters of a ferruginous aerated spring, about two miles off which we find good for my wife's weak throat.

We have had pleasant, and I hope profitable, intercourse with some respectable Mohamedans, who speak French, and can read our Arabic Scriptures—indeed, I may say, have formed friendships with them, entered their houses, seen their women, which is no small concession. But, oh! the desolate condition of an Arab woman. One said recently to my wife, "We are here in a dungeon." Oh, what room for Zenana work! A missionary is useless for one-half the people. Arabic is soon picked up. But it has been a great disappointment to find so wide a divergence between the Kabyle spoken here and that with which I am somewhat acquainted. It has been an impediment to our intercourse. It may be that my imperfect pronunciation has added to the difficulty; but they are the same people, wear the bournous, having the same habitudes. To-day there is a universal celebration of the "Fête de Moutons," a feasting day. Still, with the assistance of a friendly Kabyle from Tizi-Ouzon, they have understood my reading of some selected passages of Scripture. When one looks into the faces of these dear people one regrets being hindered from making known to them the glorious tidings of redeeming love. On asking two young men in the neighbouring Wednesday's market what language they spoke in the villages around, they said it was the Chaonia, but it seems to be a mixture of Chaonia, Kabyle, and Arabic, and all seem to understand the latter, so that a missionary will need to learn Arabic to make his way.

Another disappointment has been to find that in this wide range of country there are no picturesque villages crowning the tops of the mountains, as in Kabylia proper, but two or three thatched houses on the slopes. The people are widely and sparsely scattered, although the tribes are occasionally numerous; for instance, the Beni Sloman have a population of 5600; the Beni Smail, under whose rugged summits we pass, 2260. The district at the foot of the great Babor, nearly 6500 feet high just before our window, 12,360; Tabafort, the feminine of Babor, to whom the natives assign a wife, 4800 inhabitants; Dehemcha, 5300; Beni Idder, 7000; Beni Ahmet, 7050; Beni Foughal, 6650; no inconsiderable number of immortal beings, besides many other tribes less numerous. The mountain-tops of most of these tribes are visible from hence, but this spot would scarcely be a good centre to reach them. About an hour from here there is the village of Amoucha, a French colony and market on Sundays; about two hours Ain Rouah, also French, and a market on Sundays. At two hours and a half Ain Habessa. To characterise the French villages one need simply to say they are without God and are perhaps more difficult to reach than the Mohamedans.

There is a considerable Arab population scattered amongst the Kabyles, but they are gradually becoming more sedentary, living in huts on the mountains in winter, and spreading abroad in their black tents in the summer.

We must give up our exclusive attention to those we have been accustomed to call Kabyles, as well as to their language, and take in to our wide Christian sympathies the so-called Arabs; they are here so mingled together they can be scarcely distinguished. The souls of both are equally precious, and there is no one to care for their eternal well-being. What a call there is here for returned Indians, Christian men who have come from Arab-speaking districts, with the love of Christ in their hearts. Oh, "come over and help us."—Yours affectionately in Christ,

Geo. Pearse.

BROKEN FETTERS.

A RECORD of the Prison Gate Mission at Manchester lately published, tells of the work done during the past two years. The results have abundantly justified the undertaking, and warrant its continuance. Many a woman, sin-stained and weary, not daring to think of the past, has heard the story of Jesus, and of his power to deliver from sin. Many of these come again and again, still led captive by Satan, but they cannot forget what they heard. The establishment of a Home for rescued babies is contemplated before another year.

A register of events connected with the Mission shows how empty the exchequer sometimes is, and how generously God meets the need at the time. "Last night there was an empty purse, but we had the most restful certainty that provision would come. To-day's answer was a beautiful 'Yes.' A postal-order came for 5*s*, and so our dinner was secured to us. Indeed, for months back it has been not only the daily but the hourly provision."

The number accommodated in the Mission House is fourteen. The aim is to convey them from the prison gate to the Mission, keep them there if necessary for a short time, and to find them employment, or keep them out of temptation. A branch work has sprung up during the year in the form of a Mission among the children of criminals and little girls growing up in bad houses. Among the rescued women two are now holding positions of trust; several are steadily working in laundries, and one is a nurse.

"Cases" are selected, that the reader may know something of the Godlessness, impurity, drink, idleness, and lawlessness, out of which the prisoners come. One is represented as a very ignorant, degraded woman, constantly in and out of prison. Another is cursed with a most ungovernable temper. Of another the pamphlet says, "She was born and bred in crime, had been trained from a child to thieve, had her first term of imprisonment when quite young, got five years' penal servitude when sixteen, and has spent eighteen Christmas days in prison." Surely no one can deny that here is a field of Christian effort worthy of the most consecrated servants of the great King. We cannot but thank Him that He has prompted some to take it up. The address of the Superintendent is Mrs. Macalpine, 39, Higher Cambridge-street, Manchester.

MEDICAL ASPECTS OF ALCOHOL.—Under the auspices of the Women's Union C.E.T.S., for lectures to ladies upon the Medical Aspect of Alcohol in relation to health, will be given on Saturday afternoons, November 15, 22, and 29, at 3.30 p.m. The first one by Mr. C. Symes Thompson, M.D., F.R.C.P., by the kindness of the Lady Brabazon, at 83, Lancaster Gate, W. The last two by Dr. Oliver Leeson, at the Vestry Hall, Kensington High-street. Admission will be by subscription tickets, which, with syllabus, may be obtained from Miss Haslam, Palace Chambers, Bridge-street, Westminster.

AN AUSTRALIAN BIBLE-CARRIAGE.

By JOHN HAMBLETON.

[The following is a portion of a long letter received from Mr. Hambleton; in our next issue we hope to give the remainder.]

THE crowd admired the well-built and beautifully finished piece of workmanship with letters of gold upon a white ground, made by Mr. Singleton, of Ipswich, Suffolk. But the Word preached from its platform, and the Bibles and Testaments with Gospel books distributed and carried to the homes of many that evening, will be recorded in heaven as seed cast upon the colonial waters to be seen after many days. Truly it was a solemn time in the history of the writer. The man was still living and in the crowd, who thirty-seven years ago erected a theatre for me to furnish and rent from him, and now he was seeing the Word of God exalted and a new carriage filled with heavenly seed-corn to be sown throughout the length and breadth of the land. It was a glorious time, and the children of God rejoiced to see the eagerness with which the people bought up the cheap Bibles and books. How good of the Lord to permit us to give such a testimony to his Word and work!

The carriage was so well packed by the builder that it came out without a scratch, and although the Fort George, in a great storm, had men washed away from the wheel, boats lost, the saloon flooded, furniture destroyed, water down in the hold, and the ship nearly lost, yet the Bibles, Testaments, and boxes of books were all right, and not any damaged. We are now in full harness for the work, and with the firm belief that God, who has brought us here through many trials by the way, has a great work for Bible-carriages and Gospel preaching through this land where Larrikinism or lawlessness is rampant; for I can testify after the work was over that first evening, the language and ways of the boys were beyond anything I had ever seen in the darkest slums of England.

This is the result of schools where the Bible is not allowed, and the children are educated without God or the Scriptures which are able "to make wise unto salvation through faith that is in Christ Jesus." A teacher in one of the State schools told me only yesterday that it was more than his bread was worth to expound a lesson from the Scriptures, and another paid teacher also said that he dared not put a text upon the walls of the school to be read by the boys. Thus "larrikins" grow up without God or the knowledge of his Word. When an opposing scientific infidel taunted us with our inability to put down the mischief done by the larrikins, I told him that the law was made for evil-doers, and that the police and magistrates were supposed to do that; they were God's temporal ministers who should not bear the sword in vain; but we were preachers of the Gospel, to tell these boys of the love God had to them, while He hated their sins. The boys listened to something new, and came delighted to help us push the carriage into the stable-yard. There is a great field before us in this work.

A GREAT SERVICE TO PUBLIC MORALITY is being rendered by The Times in opening its columns to discussion of the evil resulting from the facilities afforded by the Postal Telegraph system for betting on horse races. If the existing facilities were withdrawn, a great blow would be struck at the crying evil of betting.—Rock.

Dr. BARNARDO'S HOMES.—A meeting was held at the Edinboro' Castle, Rhodeswell-road, E., last Monday evening, to receive from Dr. Barnardo an account of his visit to Canada and the far North-west, to promote the emigration of young children. Dr. Barnardo has returned after four months' absence, and has succeeded in opening a branch institution at Peterboro', Ontario, capable of accommodating 150 children. He has also selected 5000 acres in the far North-west for the purpose of establishing an industrial farm, upon which older lads may be trained for agricultural pursuits. He is now in communication with the Canadian Government upon the subject. We shall give details of the meeting in our next issue.

NATIONAL THRIFT.

A PUBLIC Meeting relating to Thrift and its Advantages was held in St. Giles's Mission Chapel (Mr. George Hatton's), on Thursday evening last. Mr. Samuel Morley presided. A letter received from Mr. Gladstone's Secretary stated that the Premier was in cordial sympathy with the movement, and wished for it great success.

The object of the Thrift Society is that of making Thrift a national habit, the means employed being a widespread dissemination of literature on the subject, the establishment of penny banks and provident dispensaries throughout the country, thrift lectures, conferences and meetings, the advocacy of life assurance, and the purchase of annuities, &c. The audience was composed of the right class, and appeared greatly to appreciate what was advanced.

The Chairman said: I am sure that a very large amount of the misery endured by the poor is self-inflicted, and quite believe what a friend recently said to me in reference to a certain street: "These people might be out of this wretchedness in a fortnight if they'd keep out of the public-house." This is not a crusade on the part of the rich against the poor, but a pure desire to help them. I am perfectly convinced that drink does more harm than all other evils put together, and that if it were got rid of we should scarcely know England in five years. I am able to get through an immense amount of work, and this I am sure is due in part to the total abstinence which I practise. Many poor children are but half clothed because the parents spend their money in evil indulgences. In conclusion Mr. Morley urged the people to live under their income as far as they possibly could.

Lord Byron, Chairman of the Committee, trusted the Society would one day be known and recognised as one of the leading institutions of the country, but this depended mainly on the people themselves.

Mr. J. C. Sherrard said thrift meant self-denial, a determination to waste nothing, carefulness in small things as well as great, the appropriation of all our time, our opportunities, and our money. For the attainment of these good habits there must be training. The servant who opens a parcel by cutting the string and tearing the paper has never been so trained. It was a fallacy to think it useless to try and save out of very small earnings. He knew a costermonger who was once in destitution, but now has three vans and several men working for him. There were many of other such cases. It must, however, begin in the home, and children must learn it from the example of their parents. Moreover, at the bottom of all the principles of thrift must lie the Gospel of Christ.

Dr. R. Paramore followed with an address of much interest, bearing on health. There is no greater hindrance to health, he said, than the evils flowing from improvidence. By foregoing indulgences men may become happier, healthier, and more useful. Pure food, pure drink, and pure air, are essential to health, and to these must be added the bath. Butchers' meat is not necessary. Oatmeal is one of the best articles of diet. Fish is good. There is a great amount of waste in food through ignorance. Food which is cheap can be quite as nourishing as more expensive diet.

A paper was read by Mrs. C. L. H. Wallace, upon "Thrift in Food." Vegetarian diet was strongly recommended. If the working classes could only be persuaded to adopt it systematically the amount of general distress would be largely diminished. Lentils, oatmeal, haricot beans, she urged as being cheap and good. Mr. T. A. Denny thought everybody should put something by for sickness and old age. If people would spend all their money on drink, he certainly could not pity them when they came to want. It was also a great waste to smoke or chew tobacco. Let the people learn to cook their food by boiling rather than roasting, and they would save a great deal in so doing. I instil habits of thrift into my boys, said Mr. Denny, and would urge you all to do the same.

The Chairman, in responding to a vote of thanks, said his blue ribbon was occasionally the subject of remark among members of the House of Commons, but he found it a means of bearing a quiet testimony, which he was quite sure told in the right direction.

LESSONS FROM AN OLD BOOK.

DR. MONRO GIBSON ON ECCLESIASTES.

AMONG the gentlemen who officiate as lecturers throughout the winter months to the young men at 186, Aldersgate-street, City, no one we daresay stands higher in the popular esteem than Dr. Monro Gibson. With the grit and hard-headedness that characterise his countrymen, he combines an unusual quantum of the warmth and bonhommie that find much favour in these southern regions. His lectures last season on "Rock and Sand" were a great success, and well they deserved to be. This winter, on Monday evenings, he is giving a series of talks on the book of Ecclesiastes in its relations to current thought and life. If one may judge from the introductory lecture delivered on Monday week, he will score another success; at any rate he will again deserve one. His audience was large and most appreciative; it would have been little to their credit if they had been otherwise.

It is no use, said the wide-awake and genial doctor, expecting to profit thinking young men, unless what we bring to them bears upon the questions of to-day. But in the Bible we can always find this. In speaking about Ecclesiastes I am not prepared to pin my faith to the "3000 years old" mentioned on the bills. I am sure at all events it is more than 2000 years old; and that is old enough for our purpose. It is a book very little read, still less understood, and very much abused and perverted. If I went through it chapter by chapter, I would keep you the whole winter, so I must select. Let us first take a look at the book as a whole; afterwards we may proceed to choose illustrative specimens bearing on the questions of to-day. As to the authorship, there is a difference of opinion among competent commentators, whether it was written by Solomon himself, or whether it was the product of some poet of later time, who threw it into the form of the confession of the Jewish King, who more than most people had experienced both the glory and the vanity of earthly things. However this may be, and it is not a matter of vital moment, the lesson of the book remains the same.

The key-note it strikes is not a very promising one. "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity." At the close, however, we have God—"The spirit shall return to God who gave it." The book is a good illustration of one of its own sayings: "Better is the end of a thing than the beginning thereof." It is described as "the words of the preacher," and many pious souls have been puzzled over its queer sermon. It is still the happy hunting-ground of infidels and those who sneer against the Bible. If I were to preach seriously from some of its texts, you would turn me out. For instance: "I know there is nothing in life, but that a man should eat and drink and enjoy all the good of his labour." That is rather startling. So is this: "A man hath no pre-eminence over a beast. All go into one place." "Be not righteous over much"—no fear of any of us being that. It is sad to find passages of that kind twisted into good, pious teaching. As there are some who wrest the Scriptures to their own destruction, there are others who wrest them to their own edification. We want a little more honesty in dealing with the Scriptures. It would be a great deal nearer the truth to call this book "the words of the sceptic," than "the words of the preacher." Not indeed as supplying the sceptic with arguments against inspiration, but as showing in a very striking way what scepticism is and what it leads to. It stands out like a lighthouse amid the dark wastes, to warn voyagers on the stormy sea of thought and life of its dangerous rocks and shoals. It is not a voice from the pulpit, but a voice from the dark waste. When we get to the end we find there is light—not indeed like the light of the sun, as in the Gospels, or even of the moon. Still there is light enough in this beacon to bring the tempest-tossed mariner into the harbour. When he gets there he will find a home, a church, a pulpit, and a preacher in it, to tell him of salvation, and of a land where there shall be no more sea.

This book is a message from the wastes, showing us how crooked and dark is the wanderer's path; a hand pointing men away from the vanities of earth to the Father of their spirits, that they may find the rest which is to be found in Him alone. It is the outcome of the sad experience of one who had the opportunity of making trial of all the pursuits and pleasures and philosophies of the earth. So it is always fresh, for the dark night is ever with us. And it does seem as if the night of unbelief were darker in this generation than it has ever been in the history of the world before. So this old book is one for the times; and many of the writings of the great thinkers and poets of our day are like unconscious echoes of its voice.

Dr. Gibson proceeded to cite passages from Ecclesiastes, which express the views of modern unbelief in its varied phases. Chap. ii. 24 might be the creed of current secularism; chap. iii. 19—22, the creed of materialism and agnosticism; chap. ix. 2, 3, of pessimism. The great lesson of the book is this: only in God can the spirit of man find peace and rest, and satisfaction and home. It is a commentary on the words of St. Augustine. "Thou hast made the human heart for thyself; therefore it is ever restless until it finds its rest in Thee."

At the close of his very interesting and profitable talk on this old book, Dr. Gibson read, with genuine feeling and much effect, some selected portions of Lord Tennyson's "In Memoriam," showing how the mental experiences of the poet, as expressed in that marvellous production, were singularly akin to those of the writer of Ecclesiastes. Both fought their way through the darkness up to light; one by the flowery pathway of worldly pleasure, the other by the rough road of bereavement and sorrow. Living in the blaze of the Gospel day, the Laureate reaches a brighter goal than the ancient sceptic preacher. The former only gets as far as remembering that God is his Creator and the ultimate end of his being. The latter (in his "Prelude," composed after the Poem) thus sings, with his foot on the solid rock of simple trust:—

> "Strong Son of God, immortal Love,
> Whom we, that have not seen thy face,
> By faith, and faith alone embrace,
> Believing where we cannot prove."

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

Belfast.—Mr. D. A. Black has been appointed Secretary of the Association here, in place of Mr. McCann, promoted to the Travelling Secretaryship for Ireland.

Lowestoft.—At a very interesting gathering lately held in the rooms of the Association, Mr. Walter Wild was welcomed as resident permanent secretary. Mr. Wild was formerly in connection with the West London branch.

Stockton.—The Mayor lately presided over the twenty-second annual meeting of this association, and was supported by ministers of various denominations. The report showed 70 members and 200 associates, a slight decrease on the previous year. In the course of his remarks, the chairman said he had been a total abstainer for 43 years.

South Branch, 9, Fentiman-road, S.W.—At the close of a most successful and encouraging summer season of open-air preaching in the Clapham-road, the workers and friends met at the rooms on Wednesday, October 29, for praise and testimony. Rev. W. W. Cassels spoke on open-air preaching. Young men are cordially welcomed to all the meetings at this branch.

MISS ELLICE HOPKINS IN GLASGOW.

THIS earnest advocate of social purity has held a series of "White Cross" meetings in Glasgow. The first, in the Christian Institute, was attended by over 300 leading clergymen, doctors, and laymen. The City Hall was crowded on the following evening with young men. Fully 2500 were present. Before going on to the platform, the hall-keeper said, "You will have trouble to-night; there are a good many students present, and they have their sticks with them." Miss Hopkins had no sooner sounded the first word, "Brothers," than there was perfect stillness, and for fifty-five minutes she kept the large audience riveted. Often the applause was so hearty that her voice was not heard. The address appealed to the manliness and chivalry of those who were present, and deep was the impression that was produced. Before separating, the young men present were requested to write their names and addresses on the back of the hymn leaflet, signifying their willingness to join the "White Cross Army," and about 700 names were handed in.

On the following Thursday Miss Hopkins addressed a meeting for mothers in Free Church College, on Friday one for young women in Bethany Hall, on Monday, Nov. 3, for ladies, in Kelvinside Free Church, and on Tuesday a ladies' meeting at Pollockshields. These meetings were all very largely attended. Much good has resulted from this effort, and we ask God's children to pray for a rich blessing on future meetings for students, young ladies, working mothers, and two Conferences of Christian workers.

SOLDIERS IN DOVER.

DEAR SIR,—I had much pleasure in again spending a few days with my much-esteemed friend, Miss Wright, at the Soldiers' Home, Dover, for some Gospel meetings. After an absence of over two years it is delightful to see how the good work amongst the men is progressing, and how many soldiers, both at home and abroad, are able to date their spiritual birthplace at the Dover Home. I was shown most interesting letters received by Miss Wright from soldiers whose regiments are stationed in different parts of the world, who, having received blessing through the Home themselves are now earnest workers amongst their comrades abroad.

A young soldier in the East Kent Regiment, who was brought to the Lord through the Home whilst in garrison at Hong Kong, has been made a great blessing to his comrades, having led many to the Saviour. One of these writes: "Has been the means in God's hands of pointing me and two of my comrades to Jesus." After speaking of the change and joy experienced, he adds: "Will you please pray for me and my other two comrades, that God may keep us from falling, and give us strength to serve Him humbly all our days, even till the end. We pray God to bless your labours. Had he not have done so in ——, we might have been still outside the fold." This young man had been a bitter opposer of the Gospel, and had even persecuted the young soldier who had unwearingly followed him up in faith and prayer until he saw him brought to the feet of Jesus.

The Home has been an untold source of blessing to scores who have passed from "the grimy grip of Satan" (as one characteristically expresses it) into the Kingdom of God's dear Son. We had the pleasure of meeting about ninety of the men at tea, and also held some Gospel services, where several, we trust, have been brought to the Lord, and were anxious to bring others to share in the blessing. It is delightful to witness the zeal of the new converts, and to hear the first breathings of prayer on behalf of their fellows. None but soldiers can realise the difficulties of a soldier's life, and the besetments held out to allure them to ruin in their leisure moments. The well-disposed are so thankful for their little haven of refuge and kind welcome from the Lady Superintendent, who is indefatigable in her efforts for their good. With Bible and singing classes, &c, her wise counsel and private conversations have been the means of rescuing from a life of drunkenness and evil several who were walking in the wrong way. She had also been much used to the soldiers' wives, holding mothers meetings, and visiting the women in their own homes, many of whom are in a state of great misery, because their husbands, who have married without leave, having gone to other parts, leaving these mostly to shift for themselves.

There are upwards of 4000 soldiers garrisoned in Dover, not including the artillerymen at the Castle. The Home is carried on amidst many difficulties and pecuniary pressure just now, owing to the deaths or removal of several subscribers. Should any of the Lord's stewards feel disposed to contribute to this excellent work, communications or money sent to Miss Wright, Lady Superintendent of the Soldier's Home, 22, Castle-street, Dover, would be most thankfully received.—Yours most truly,

M. E. Bonnycastle.

UNION HALL MISSION.

ON Tuesday, November 4, a large number of Christian workers assembled together at Union Hall, Carlisle-street. After tea, a good time was spent together in prayer and praise. Mr. Bilke mentioned how much cause they had for praise to God for the manifest blessing to souls through the past summer in the tent work. Since these had been taken down, God had been most graciously working in the Union Hall, the Gospel Hall, and the Queen's Park Hall. They had abundant cause for thanksgiving, and looked forward to the winter work with expectation of still further blessing upon all departments of the work in the five halls of the Mission.

Dr. Robert McKilliam (of Blackheath) then gave a most practical address on "The Lord's attitude towards the world, and his leadings as to work in the present day." He expressed the opinion that God is about to give great blessing upon all his work in this great metropolis during the coming winter.

A special week of prayer was arranged for at Union Hall, from November 9 to 16. It is hoped to follow this by similar meetings in each of the other halls. Mr. Bilke's address is 18, Greenhill Park-villas, Harlesden, N.W.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For a continued and wonderful deliverance from complicated troubles.——For an awakening at Brading, Isle of Wight, during a recent Mission.——For the £10 from "Hope" in The Christian last week, a direct answer to prayer for that sum, if it pleased God to send it, through The Christian.

PRAYER.—For blessing on the Thursday evening services for young women in warehouses, at Cross Key-square, Little Britain.——For blessing on meetings being held at Godmanchester, by Mr. Henry Lakin.——For a minister in great distress of soul; he fears that he has never been saved himself, though he has for years preached to others. ——For a husband, who with an earnest desire to see the Light, is still struggling in doubt and darkness.——Our dear and faithful brother, Mr. George Fuller, of Sermon-lane, asks the prayers of our readers to almighty God for his recovery to health and strength, from a serious illness. He is a worker who if taken away would be very greatly missed.——That clear guidance may be granted to a worker who has a call to go abroad and also to stay at home.——For blessing on Gospel services at Barrhead, N.B.

GIRL'S TEMPERANCE CLUB, BELFAST.—In 1880 twenty young ladies in Belfast banded themselves together to promote the principles and practice of Temperance among those in their own class. They have been very successful in their efforts. The annual Conversazione was lately held in the Hall of the Botanic Gardens, when Lieut.-Col. Craig presided over a large and influential assemblage. The Chairman gave an earnest address, setting forth the prolific evils that flow from the drink, and the benefits of abstinence. Rev. Dr. Magill also spoke. We learn from the report of the Chairman's address that the Club has now over 260 members and associates. The idea seems an excellent one, and we shall be glad to hear of its adoption in other large towns.

WORKERS TOGETHER.

"I do not frustrate the grace of God."—Gal. ii. 21.

NOT in the little things
Of daily life?
I may accept the sword, but not
The pruning-knife.
Does my heart daily hear
The still small voice?
The "ifs" and "buts" within his Word,
Are they my choice?

Within the tiny threads
So closely wove,
Do I discern the golden light
Of tender love?
Do I refuse the grace
That telleth me,
Through microscopic mercies, all
His heart to see?

Do I accept the specks
Of gold, and use
Them as I would a mine of wealth?—
Do I refuse
The little chastenings,
The look, the call,
The gentle touch that would restrain—
Do I accept them all?

Dear Father, help thy child
To work with Thee,
In all thy plans and purposes,
And thus to be
No hindrance, but a help;
That no "would not"
May cross thy great "I will," and thus
Thy life-work blot.

APOSTOLIC METHODS.

DEAR SIR,—Upwards of a year ago you inserted an extract from a letter from Dr. Nevius, American missionary at Cheefoo, indicating his inexpensive and Apostolic methods of spreading the Gospel in the part of China where he has long and successfully laboured. I now send extract of a letter from a lady missionary from another region of China, whose testimony to the value of Dr. Nevius' plans, may interest your readers. As we need to learn from one another what are the best means of reaching "the ignorant, and them that are out of the way" at home, so, too, in heathen lands, brethren may have much to learn from one another. Yours sincerely, M.

EXTRACT.

"We are all getting much valuable information from Dr. Nevius. I am so glad to find that he thinks with me that preaching in our sense of the word is of little avail yet; that teaching and questioning are the methods for conveying the truth to our young Churches. He has a most elaborate method of managing the country stations; his great idea is to teach the people and make everyone of them teach, a plan I always advocated at home among the young women and in the Sunday-school, and I try to do it here; I always press it upon every woman in hospital who learns a text or a hymn or some Christian doctrine, that she must teach that to others.

Dr. Nevius has a great deal of unpaid work; this also commends itself to me as good for this covetous people. I feel more determined to try to follow out these things: what has been done can be done; and though Dr. N. says he has had years of pushing, insisting, and much hard work, I am sure it is worth while, if we can only get the people taught and really interested in the Bible. I believe the reason of much decay in old stations is just here: there is no food, no interest, no occupation for the body of the people. I hope our visit will be of real profit, not only to us, but to the work."

A YOUNG WOMEN'S INSTITUTE has been opened in Pyrland-road, in connection with the Mildmay Branch of the Y.W.C.A. Many young women are already associated with it.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

THE CANTON OF ZURICH has re-introduced the penalty of death for murder.

ROUEN.—The Sailors' Reading Room here is changed to 36, Quay de Paris, instead of 8, Grand Port.

BALTIMORE.—The pastor of one of the churches here is projecting the establishment of a "Bethany Home" for orphans on the plan of Mr. Spurgeon's institution.

NEW GRANADA.—Bogota, the capital, has a population of 96,000. According to the last census all are Romanists, with the exception of 112 who are Protestants. Only one-third of these can read and write; the rest are absolutely illiterate.

SUNDAY, October 26, was observed in the State of New York by many Churches and ministers as "Prisoners' Sunday;" sermons were preached intended to awaken a wider and more intelligent interest in the welfare of prisoners.

LUCKNOW.—The Indian Witness reports a very marked manifestation of the power of the Holy Spirit in connection with some recent conference meetings at Lucknow. Many professing Christians entered into a deeper and more real experience of the spiritual life.

A LARGE BEQUEST.—Miss Carrie Welton, a young lady who lately perished in a snowstorm on Long's Peak, in Colorado, bequeathed her property, amounting to about 200,000 dollars, to the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

WELLINGTON, CAPE COLONY.—There has been a revival of religion at Wellington, in South Africa, by the instrumentality of Dr. Andrew Murray, so well known as a leader in the Dutch Cape Church. It is hoped that the seed thus sown of a deeper piety may also take root in Stellenbosch, where, as is well known, there is a truly earnest Dutch Christian community.

VICTOR HUGO.—A correspondent of the Journal de Genève speaks of an interview with Victor Hugo. Referring to his age (83), M. Hugo said he was waiting his death with calmness and confidence. His faith in God was unshaken, and he looked forward with certainty to a reunion with the dear ones he had lost. In these days of materialism and negation it is refreshing to find the greatest literary Frenchman boldly affirming his spiritual beliefs.

MR. MOODY.—The correspondent of an American contemporary thus refers to the evangelist as he appeared at a recent Convention in Boston: "We have heard him preach frequently since he first entered into public service, but never has he seemed to us so peculiarly impressive and tender as since his recent return from Europe. There is a loving tenderness betrayed in each sermon, and an appeal so earnest for immediate decision, which is almost irresistible."

SWITZERLAND.—The International Society for the Protection of Girls is widening its sphere, by having correspondents in all the countries in which young Swiss women go to gain a living. "Never," says the Journal du Bien Public, "was this protection more necessary." Paris, England, Holland, Russia, and Italy are held up as a sort of "El Dorado" before the eyes of the victims, and the uncertainty of information has launched hundreds of the unsuspecting into an ocean of troubles, amid which the most frequent result is shipwreck for time and eternity.

GAUBERT, FRANCE.—About three hours by rail from Paris the station of Orgères is reached, near which is the village of Gaubert, where a new church has been opened; the only Protestant church for many miles round. It tells of the precious days of religious liberty that France now enjoys. On Sunday, October 26, a large party of friends from Orleans, and some from Paris, were present at the opening service, which was largely attended. The Mayor and many Roman Catholics and other strangers were present, and at the evangelistic services afterwards at least 400 persons listened to earnest Gospel appeals. Mr. Kruger is urgently in need of an evangelist for the wide district around, but the means are lacking. Prayer is asked that the new church may continue to be a shining light amidst the surrounding darkness.

CENTRAL AFRICA.—At a meeting o fthe Church Missionary Society Committee, Bishop Hannington and two helpers, about to proceed to Central Africa, were taken leave of and commended to God. In his recent address to the Geographical Society, Mr. Joseph Thomson describes the Masai tribe as very fierce and powerful. The missionary, he says, in that region has his work cut out for him, and will have to exercise much patience.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

MR. J. B. GOUGH began in Boston, on October 13, his forty-third season of public lecturing.

ONTARIO.—In this Canadian province the tide of Temperance opinion continues to gather strength and volume.

JERSEY CITY, U.S., is said to be infested with gangs of young idle roughs who, under the influence of strong drink, lie in wait for passers-by with thievous and even murderous intent.

MAJOR POOLE recently revisited Stroud, the scene of his successful Mission this spring, to deliver a Gospel Temperance Address; the Subscription Rooms were crowded to their utmost capacity.

MELBOURNE.—The Southern Cross says that in the first pitched battle between the Victorian Alliance and the dram-sellers, the latter have scored a victory. The right, however, is bound to win.

MADRAS.—In this presidency the Temperance movement is spreading. The wearing of the blue ribbon has increased its popularity, and exercised a strong influence on public opinion.

REV. PHILLIPS BROOKS, of Boston, said at a recent Temperance meeting there that nothing was more disgusting, or more disheartening to the cause of humanity, than the selfish, luxurious man denouncing Temperance "fanaticism."

THE CURSE OF SOUTH AFRICA.—Rev. Wardlaw Thompson, who has lately revisited the country, says brandy is the greatest curse of the natives in South Africa. Half the chiefs in Basutoland are dipsomaniacs through strong drink.

THE Municipal Elections just held will affect local restrictions of the drink traffic according to the state of Temperance sentiment in each place. Four out of the five candidates at Leeds connected with the liquor trade were defeated.

UNITED STATES.—A correspondent of the New York Weekly Witness says that the liquor traffic is carrying the country to ruin at a rapid rate. If the people do not rise and rid the country of this curse, God will surely punish the nation by a greater curse than the Civil War.

A BLUE RIBBON RAILWAY.—At the opening ceremony of an Australian railway in September last, a bottle of water was substituted for the bottle of spirituous liquor that is usually broken on the engine on such occasions. The driver of the engine wore the blue.

THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS at Exeter Hall, under the auspices of the National Temperance League, have commenced for the winter season: they deserve the support of all who are interested in providing wholesome recreation for the people.

"A BREWER'S EXHIBITION."—Such is an announcement which comes to hand, and we are fascinated with it as with something horribly grotesque. Have we not just given a characteristic exhibition of the brewer's work—a stabbed wife, a drunkard's suicide, a father slain by his son's hands, and a child starved by a drunken mother? Here are indeed exhibits to be gazed on with advantage. But at the Agricultural Hall, a corpse mangled with the knife, or a dead child of starved proportions, are voted too unhandsome. The exhibition is not of results; these are carefully kept out of sight. It is one of causes. It is an exhibition of brewing and distilling, with samples of malt, hops, and the like perilous stuff. The death's head and cross-bones are not there, but the visitor who fails to see the grinning skull and the ominous shanks starting from the decorous trade machinery and appliances must be of poor imagination.—National Philanthropist.

PLUMSTEAD.—Mr. R. H. M. Jackman, of the London Stock Exchange, delivered an address at the Mission Hall, Plumstead, on Thursday last, to a large and attentive audience. Notwithstanding there are well-attended revival meetings being held in the immediate neighbourhood, God is working mightily in this place.

RAILWAY SERVANTS IN INDIA.

SIR,—At this time, when the subject of extension of the railway system in India is attracting public attention, it seems opportune to consider what means can be used, and efforts put forth for meeting a great want, viz., that of a due provision for the religious needs of the large number of railway employés. Their duties require them to live in isolated places along the various lines, and they are consequently deprived of the privileges of worship, &c., enjoyed by those who reside in central stations. The latest official return shows that there are employed on the several lines of railway in India close on 8000 Europeans and East Indians. I shall, I think, be within the mark in saying that at least one half of these, with their wives and families, are permanently located at small stations, where there is no stated ministry, and where opportunities for public worship, afforded by the periodical visits of a minister of the Gospel, are comparatively few. Unless there happens to be some earnest officer or subordinate at one of these small stations, able and willing to conduct Divine service on Sundays, and to interest himself in the well-being of the community, it usually results in the people becoming careless in the matter of religious observances, unmindful of the Lord's day; and the spiritual life, if any ever existed, falls to a low ebb.

I do not for one moment ignore the agencies which are at present in India, such as the Additional Clergy Society, Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society, and others. Railway employés benefit, to a certain extent, by the faithful services of the agents of these societies, clerical and lay, but "the labourers are few," and they have, besides, other fields to occupy, and the large Missionary Societies rightly confine their work chiefly to the natives of India.

What seems to me to be needed is the employment of railway Scripture readers, who would, under competent direction, go about on the line visiting among the scattered families, and especially the sick, hold services and meetings as occasion offered, and assist, generally, in ministerial and parochial work. Such a body of men, if earnest and zealous, well instructed in the Word of God, understanding the circumstances, and in sympathy with the class of people among whom they laboured, would be a power for good in the land, and exercise great influence. I feel sure that most of the railway authorities would countenance and support any scheme of this kind for the well-being of the "out-stations" staff, if carefully considered and matured. I would appeal to those of your readers who are interested in the highest welfare of the railway employés, to prayerfully consider the question, and to give their views thereon.

If in Christian England it has been found necessary to supplement the work of the Church by establishing a Mission, especially for work among railway men "on the line," how far greater is the call for some such agency as I have suggested out in this country, where ministers of the Gospel are so few, and distances so great?

That there would be difficulties met with in forming a Railway Scripture Readers' Society, or Railway Mission, I am fully aware, but that there is real need for something of the sort must be generally acknowledged, and will, I am convinced, be endorsed by those who have worked for the Master among railway employés, and know something of their peculiar circumstances and difficulties. Any communications or suggestions may be sent to me, care of my brother-in-law, Dr. Kirkpatrick Picard, 59, Abbey-road, St. John's-wood, N.W.

POTTERNE, WILTS.—An eight days' Gospel Mission has been held in this village by Mr. H. Murch. Many who were never known to enter a church or chapel have attended the meetings. A children's service on Sunday afternoon was a particularly pleasing feature of the Mission. The promoters of this special effort feel they have abundant cause for thanksgiving.

Letters to the Editor.

A NECESSARY PROTEST.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me most earnestly to disclaim all participation in the Costume Bazaar and Exhibition of Giants and famous "Illusionists," held last week in the Brighton Dome and Corn Exchange for the benefit of the "Albion Hill Home for Female Penitents," but extensively advertised for the occasion under the name of a Home for Friendless Girls, whereby our Brighton Association for the care of Friendless Girls, and many similar associations throughout England, have been hopelessly implicated in proceedings of which we entirely disapprove.

Alas! alas! that it should have come to women dressing up over the unspeakable degradation of their own womanhood, and fancy costumes in aid of the restoration of the temple of the Holy Ghost, and an exhibition of giants and conjuring tricks for the same sacred purpose, and that this should be sanctioned by the names of some of the highest in the land.

Surely this is the world within the Church with a will. Surely if it is necessary to resort to such means, to raise money for work so sad, so sacred, and by every consideration of modesty and right feeling, so silent and hidden within the veil of the temple, as Rescue work, there must be some terrible unreality somewhere in our Christianity.

But of this I am sure, that unless the Church will protest against this increasing substitution of the methods of the world for the methods of Christ, this disastrous superficiality will sap out the very heart of a movement on which, more than on any other, the sanctity of the family, the purity of the home, and the life of the nation depends.—Very faithfully yours, ELLICE HOPKINS.

THE JEWS IN BESSARABIA.

DEAR SIR,—A few lines from me, in reply to Bishop Titcomb's letter in THE CHRISTIAN of last week, may not be amiss.

I am grateful for the sympathetic tone of the letter, evinced equally in the dissuasive part as in the persuasive. First, then, as to my going to Kischeneff. Personally, I have no wish to go, as the work of the Mildmay Mission at home grows so rapidly, and I seem to be needed here, but I remember the work is the Lord's, and He will look after it. Much prayer is also being presented to the Lord for his guidance, and I shall not go unless He make the way plain.

Now a word as to Mr. Rabinowitch coming over here. I have received many letters from Christian friends mostly in full sympathy both with my going out to see the work, and with the proposalto bring Mr. Rabinowitch over here. Two or three have suggested that either my going or his coming might possibly compromise him with the Jews, or in some way injure him personally, as suggested so considerately by Bishop Titcomb. Under these circumstances, I thought it might be well to consult Mr. Rabinowitch himself; so I wrote a few days ago, asking a variety of questions, such as whether our coming out there, or his coming over here, would in any way compromise him with the Jews, or injure his work; whether now or in the spring would be preferable as to time; and what language he would prefer in publicly addressing Jews or Christians, &c. When I receive an answer to these questions, I will communicate it to you.

It would be highly injudicious to lionise Mr. Rabinowitch at the May Meetings, or indeed anywhere else. We have not thought of doing any such thing. We regard it as undesirable that he should identify himself with any society or church, but that in private life he should be associated with the most spiritually minded of all denominations; and that his public addresses, whether given to Jews or to Christians, should be given in halls, such as the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, Exeter Hall, Strand, and the Conference Hall at the West End.

I have now only to thank the Lord and also the readers of THE CHRISTIAN for contributions already given and promised to the extent of about half our needs. We have received a post-card from Warsaw, asking us, if we go, to take that city on our way, where there are 130,000 Jews.

Faithfully yours, JOHN WILKINSON.

79, Mildmay-road, N., Nov. 6.

[We have received letters from Mr. Frederic Yeats Edwards, Treasurer of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, and from Mr. A. J. Lev, expressing the same views as those of Bishop Titcomb.]

THE GOSPEL IN FRANCE.

DEAR SIR,—To pass in silence the letter of M. le Pasteur Vernier in your issue of October 30, would be to accept the astonishing assertion that "almost every revival which has occurred in France within the last few years has been produced directly or indirectly by the instrumentality of the Salvation Army." It is true that the word "almost" seems a saving clause, but, even with this qualification, it is supremely unjust (I may say so for our Pasteurs who are more directly engaged in the Lord's work, either to their churches or in Mission services, and who will not probably reply for themselves), to put forward the comparatively recent work of foreign missionaries, before the unceasing earnest efforts of Christian men, who have borne the heat and burden of the day, not to speak of the labours of such men as MM. Armand de Lille, Théodore Monod, Saillens, R. W. McAll, and others.

M. Sainton's name having been mentioned, it is only just to say that he was greatly blessed in his ministry before joining the Army, which after a short time he left, in order to return to the Mission Intérieure, in whose service he continues to work with blessing. If the revival at Mazamet, Vabre, Pierreségode, and several villages in the department of the Tarn (in one of these villages all the inhabitants save one being converted, for whom prayer continued to be made day and night) is due to the indirect influence of the Army, what shall we say but that we are thankful? But private letters in our possession attest to the longings, the ardent prayers, the "travailing in birth" of the pasteurs and Christian men in these different places, of prolonged meetings, one and another seeking pardon and peace in Christ, praying for themselves or their neighbours, the peasantry in patois or broken French, resulting in the conversion of hundreds, 200 having joined the Eglises Libres du Tarn, and that before the arrival of the Salvation Army in their midst. I simply give the facts without comment. It does seem strange, however, and I may say, not very seemly, that the devotion, labours, and spiritual life of those who have the greater right, if right there be, for recognition, should be so entirely overlooked.

Yours very truly, M. A. P.

SUFFER THE LITTLE CHILDREN TO COME.

DEAR SIR,—The interesting account of Mrs. Webster in THE CHRISTIAN of October 30 has stirred me up to ask my Christian sisters if they cannot do a somewhat similar work among children of their own class. Those who have not tried it little know the eagerness of ladies' children to learn about Jesus. It is such an easy and delightful work, and is done in one's own home, so that those who are not very strong are saved the necessity of going out. Even those who are weak in body can speak a little word for the Master, or rather do a glorious work for Him on Sunday afternoons in their own drawing-rooms

Our house is very small, but it is wonderful the little space children can squeeze into. I often have forty children. The tiny mites sit on little camp stools (which are shut up and easily put out of sight in the week) all round me, and the bigger ones sit at the back, often two sitting on one chair. Nearly every available chair is brought in, and not a corner is left unoccupied. Ladies will find that with a few kind words to their servants they will feel that the arranging of the room is their part of the Mission work, and as acceptable in God's sight as the mistress's part in taking the class.

From three to half-past the children are generally arriving, as the dinner hour in some houses makes it late before they can start; during this time the very little ones stand round the piano while I teach them by heart a baby hymn. At half-past three we begin with two, or perhaps three, hymns for all, the little ones joining in the choruses. Some of the elder ones take it in turn to play the hymns, and this they consider quite an honour.

I have a short extempore prayer which the children repeat after me. Then I tell them a Bible story illustrated by a large picture pinned on the wall, and which I find helps wonderfully to keep the attention of the little ones; the coloured pictures can be bought at the Religious Tract Society or Sunday-school Union. I never speak longer than twenty minutes, and then close with another hymn and short prayer.

Twenty children in the class belong to the "Children's Scripture Union," and more than that number take in Our Own Magazine, which I give out the first Sunday in the month. I am just beginning to take that Sunday for a special address about the Scripture Union, as the members need a good deal of reminding. On other Sundays I give them a children's picture leaflet, and sometimes a tract or little book each to take to the grown-up people at home; father and mother will seldom refuse to read what the little ones take home with such delight to them.

I would gladly answer any questions or do anything I could to help any ladies in starting these classes. I am sure they will experience much joy and happiness in leading the little ones (who as a rule are rather a neglected class) to a saving knowledge of the truth. Yours in Him,

(Miss) ALICE MAY BARBER.

FAITH HEALING.

DEAR SIR,—It seems to be my duty to reply briefly to the remarks on my papers on "Faith Healing," by "A Searcher after Truth" in the last number of THE CHRISTIAN. First, let me observe that the difference between us is less than the writer seems to think. I admit the occurrence of cases of faith healing, but object to the conclusion drawn from them that all persons may now be healed by faith. He believes that the rule of Christian experience, with regard to bodily infirmity, should be faith healing, but admits that there were exceptions in the Apostles' time, and that, therefore, there will be exceptions now.

I am not prepared to deny that faith healing was the rule in the early Church, but I think that the number and character of the cases which your correspondent treats as exceptions point to an opposite conclusion. Paul, Timothy, Trophimus, and Epaphroditus, as physical sufferers, discovered to us, not formally as the representatives of a suffering class, but incidentally, in the course of a few epistles, cannot reasonably be regarded as "four cases" of exceptional infirmity, to be ingeniously accounted for, or put on one side as unimportant by reason of their paucity.

It seems to me that few things could be more painfully suggestive of pride and fanaticism than the opinion, which is sometimes expressed by Christians of very ordinary character and experience, that the bodily infirmities of these apostolic men were the proof and consequence of some sins or follies, if only of ignorant asceticism or contempt of the laws of nature. The suggestion of your correspondent, that as we are not likely to have Paul's abundance of revelations we should have nothing to do with his thorn in the flesh, is less objectionable but hardly more reasonable, for it is instantly neutralised by the consideration how small a measure of revelation, or supposed revelation, is sufficient to "exalt" many a modern Christian. The apostle's experience illustrates the Divine method of discipline, and therefore something akin to it may be expected in every spiritual life.

If then God had and has two purposes in dealing with the bodies of his people, viz., to give evidence of Christ's power and to perfect through suffering, we can only leave it to Him to determine the particular cases in which these objects shall be severally effected; but I submit that the probability is that the evidence (which it is God's way to make sufficient for faith, but not overwhelming) will require the few cases, and the perfecting by suffering the many.

I regret one or two of the omissions from my papers noticed by your correspondent. None of these was, as he inclines to think, an intentional avoiding of a difficulty, but the limitation of space made it impossible to deal particularly with many texts, and I preferred to consider the matter broadly in connection with God's method and purpose in human suffering. My attention, however, being called to the omission of the constantly quoted verses in James, I immediately added to the reprint of the articles now published, at the request of many readers,* two pages of exposition of that passage, which I will not occupy space by repeating here.

If your correspondent will re-read what I wrote on Matt. viii. 17, he will see that I did not pass over what he calls the "strongest faith-healing passage, with not even the shadow of an exposition." I showed that while Christ demonstrated by the miracles recorded, his power over the body and his purpose to deliver man from all diseases, it is not for us, according to the teaching of Scripture, to claim immediately and fully all the blessing that his presence on earth is bringing to man. These miracles were the "signs" which illustrated and explained to faith the grace, which it would know how to receive at once or to wait for until "the day of redemption." The writer of the epistle to the Hebrews (iv. 15) seems to have referred to these words of Isaiah and of Matthew, and to have understood them, in their present application, to mean sympathy and support of Christ, rather than the removal of infirmities.

Your correspondent asks why, in 2 Chron. xvi. 12, Asa is blamed for seeking "not to the Lord, but to the physicians." I answer, because every one who worthily believes in the Lord will in sickness, as in any other trouble, go to Him first and to the physicians only as his agents, while all unbelievers will, like Asa, make the physicians the object of their faith. If faith in God required men to despise remedial agencies, how was it that good King Hezekiah, going to God first, was told to lay a lump of figs (means now recommended as a most powerful curative) on the boil from which he was suffering? and how is it that Luke was known to the early Church as "the beloved physician"?

I had not, as your correspondent supposes, forgotten the promises of physical health made to ancient Israel. I see in them a necessary provision for the extraordinary wilderness experience of the wandering nation, but also the Divine ideal of physical blessing for the earthly people whose whole experience was to be typical of spiritual things. That ideal was never realised. Disobedience forfeited the promises, and the loss was shared by the righteous, who suffer not only with but for the unrighteous. If it were otherwise, what place could there be for the Old Testament promise of Ps. xli. 3: "The Lord will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing; thou wilt make all his bed in his sickness." That sickness may even be the consequence of Divine favour (Dan. viii. 27). The original promises to earthly Israel are not, I submit "the property also of modern Israel," any more than is the promise of the land of Canaan to Abraham, but types of far greater spiritual realities, and the foretastes of ultimate physical realities which will together make up our eternal inheritance.

Let me say, in conclusion, that I believe nothing is more needed by the Church in this age of manifold activity, than a knowledge of the dignity and power of suffering in fellowship with Christ. "Wherefore let them who suffer according to the will of God commit the keeping of their souls to Him in well-doing, as unto a faithful creator."

Yours faithfully in Christ,

Eastbourne. J. T. B. Tinling.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. W. Spencer Walton writes: "We have had a season of great blessing at Notting-hill, and much fruit."

Rev. Walter Bradbury has concluded a month's Mission at Ore, near Hastings. He also assisted Rev. W. Haslam at the Silverdale Mission, Sussex.

Luton, Beds.—William Catlin has been here on a three days' visit, for special services, in Ashton-street Iron Church. The Bible-readings on Sunday, and dissolving views on Monday, were much appreciated.

The Church Army.—At the recent Diocesan Conference at Truro various speakers expressed a strong sense of the value of the work of the Church Army, some of them giving personal testimony to the results of its operations.

Stranraer, N.B.—Evangelistic services, conducted by Mr. F. E. Marsh, were held in this town, commencing on Sabbath, October 19, and continuing every evening for two weeks. The interest in the meetings grew and deepened, with much blessing, night after night. This was especially evident during the second week's meetings in the Free Church, not an evening passing without manifest tokens of the Lord's presence. Many believers have received a quickening through these special services, and it is hoped this will prove the beginning of a good work in the town this winter.

Cambridge.—The "University Mission," conducted by Captain Baring, began on Sunday week with an evangelistic meeting in the large Guildhall. There was held at the same time a service in St. Michael's Church, in connection with the University Society for Promoting Purity of Life, at which Canon H. S. Holland, of Oxford, preached a powerful sermon to a crowded congregation. But a large number of men met in the Guildhall, and certainly not in vain. Without any skilled "wisdom of words," Captain Baring spoke with the power of the truest spiritual directness and earnestness, and commanded steadily increasing attention as he went on. Many men stayed for a quiet after-meeting. Daily last week a "Bible-reading" was held at the C.M.U. room in the afternoon, and an evangelistic meeting at the Guildhall in the evening.—Record.

Notices of Books, &c.

Goodwill to Men, and other Christmas Cheer. 6d. 7, Paternoster-square. One paper, by Rev. P. B. Power, is worth the money; and the same may be said of others. They are all good and useful, and we cordially commend this Christmas Number of "The Fireside."

A good little book to place in the hands of youth is found in Public Notices and Cautions. 9d. J. Gadsby, 17, Bouverie-street. It is full of wise counsel, Scriptural teaching, and valuable hints for the conduct of life. Each chapter has a quaint and expressive illustration at its head, attracting attention to its theme.

Pictures, Prose, and Rhymes for Children of all Climes. 3s. 6d. Sunday School Union. A capital collection of children's pieces, with numerous illustrations of animal life and other subjects that the young delight in. The language is of the simplest kind, and the book, being strongly bound, is suitable for all.

Further Recollections of an Indian Missionary. 7s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. Rev. C. B. Leupolt has here furnished a continuation of his experiences in the Mission field. Like the former volume it is full of intensely interesting material, and gives a realistic description of the habits and customs of the natives. No one could read it without profit.

Lectures on the Tabernacle. By J. E. Hawkins. 1s. Strength and Comfort for the Children of God. By Mrs. Yapp. 1s. James E. Hawkins. The first of these little volumes sets forth the sacrificial and priestly work of the Lord Jesus with much force and clearness. The second is composed of jottings from Bible Readings, and will be found to contain profitable food for thought.

Twice Bought. By R. M. Ballantyne. 3s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. A thrilling story of adventure in the Oregon goldfields. A thirst for gold, in this case, leads to drinking, gambling, and stealing. The hero's life was bought on one occasion by the gold of his fellows, and he lives to learn that the Saviour also had bought him by blood; hence the title. It is a capital book for boys and young men.

The Annual Volume of The Welcome (7s. 6d. S. W. Partridge & Co.) forms a very elegant and entertaining book. It will ornament the drawing-room table during the day, and in the long winter evenings be a cheerful and profitable companion. The literary contents are so varied that differing tastes will be met, while everybody will admire the finely-executed engravings that are scattered so profusely over its pages.

The Offices of the Holy Spirit. By Dougan Clark, M.D. 1s. 6d. Partridge & Co. This is the fourth edition of a work which has had a considerable circulation on both sides of the Atlantic. The work of the Holy Spirit is discussed in relation to the unconverted world, to the individual believer, and to the visible Church. The reader will find much that is helpful to devout and earnest inquiry into the teaching of Scripture on the vital questions involved in the subject treated on.

Play: A Picture-book of Boys, Girls, and Babies. Pictures by Edith Scannell. Verses by Samuel R. Cowan, M.A. Messrs. Marcus Ward & Co. This is indeed a book of play, pure and simple. No lurking moral, like a bitter kernel coated over with sugar. Its bright pictures and merry verses will give the little ones of "Babydom" unmixed pleasure. Wherever the School Board penetrates to make nursery literati, we trust Marcus Ward will follow; he will be at least as welcome.

The Gospel and the Child. By Andrew Simon Lamb. 3s. 6d. James Nisbet & Co. A book which deserves to be carefully and prayerfully read by parents and teachers. The writer insists strongly on the necessity of putting the Gospel before children as "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," and leading them to Christ both for justification and sanctification. He attributes the want of success attending much that is called religious education to the fact that even those who are Christians themselves give their children only moral and not evangelical training. The author also brings out with great logical clearness the true meaning of the word "belief," not simply the assent to certain facts as acknowledging them to be true, but the acceptance of them in a way which must entirely remodel the life. This book will be welcomed as a help by many who are craving for a higher standard of family religion.

"Four-square;" or, The City of our King. Nisbet & Co. A little book of Christian verse. The main topic is the future abode of the redeemed. Hence the title. The writer employs various metres, the shorter ones with most harmony. Though in parts involved, the book may be of comfort and use to many. A spirit of true devotion and deep love to the Saviour prevails throughout. (2s. 6d.)

Weapons of Christian Warfare. Sermons by the late Rev. William Thornton, M.A. Hatchards. In a preface written by Rev. B. F. Smith, Chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury, these sermons are described as directly aimed at the humblest intelligence, and yet marked by an accuracy of thought and a felicity of language which invest them with a charm for the most fastidious. This witness is true. The volume abounds in clear and striking exposition of Divine truth.

Annie S. Swan is rapidly becoming one of the most prolific and able religious tale writers of the time. Considering the quantity of matter that comes from her pen it is a marvel how she keeps up the high standard of excellence. Two of her stories lately published by Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier, of Edinburgh, are very superior specimens of high-class fiction. Carlowrie (5s.) is a delightful sketch of country life in the Scottish lowlands, with glimpses of the more artificial life in high circles in London. The interest of the reader is enchained from first to last, and the dénoument is thoroughly satisfactory. In Ursula Vivian (3s. 6d.) we have the life history of four young ladies, who are introduced to us on the point of leaving boarding-school to begin the serious business of life. The heroine of the tale as depicted by Miss Swan, is, we fear, more an ideal than a real character. We do not look upon this as a fault in the book. There is plenty in life, as it is, to hamper the development of noble purposes and aspirations. It is well that our tale-writers should lure us onward and upward by representing what life might and ought to be, in spite of adverse circumstances.

MESSRS. CASSELL & CO.

Land of the Pyramids. By J. Chesney. 2s. 6d. Cassell & Co. In the form of a personal narrative, a capital description of Egypt is here given. It is well adapted for young readers, and being freely illustrated will prove an attractive and acceptable volume.

Jingles and Joys, for Wee Girls and Boys. By Mary D. Brine. 5s. Cassell & Co. Who would not be a child again if he might hope to become the happy possessor of such a splendid book as this? The "jingling" rhymes embrace almost every conceivable theme that is dear to the youthful mind; many of them are most amusing, but we have not met with a stupid or nonsensical stanza in the whole book. Every page sparkles with pictorial gems, and the book will certainly give "joy" to all the wee boys and girls into whose hands it may fall.

Among the books for children lately issued by Messrs. Cassell & Co. there is an attractive and instructive series, dealing with varied aspects of the natural world, and of young life. Some Farm Friends will awake the envy of town children by its alluring accounts of the pet and other animals to be found in rural districts. The contents of Creatures Wild and Creatures Tame are sufficiently indicated by their suggestive titles. Those Golden Sands set forth the many charms of the seashore. Indoor and Out, and Schoolday Hours, tell of happy seasons both of work and play. Little Mothers and their Children may be described as a complete guide to the treatment and training of dolls. Our Pretty Pets treats of domesticated animals. The books are profusely illustrated, and only cost 1s. each.

MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON.

Story after Story. Hodder & Stoughton. Very interesting and instructive, and beautifully illustrated. Our boys and girls will give this book a hearty welcome. A suitable book for a prize or Christmas present. (3s. 6d.)

The Children's Pastime. By Lisbeth G. Seguin. Hodder & Stoughton. Quite a nursery treasure. Clear print, good pictures, by Millais and other artists, and a marvellous variety of entertaining stories—some merry, some pathetic, but all teaching good lessons. (3s. 6d.)

The Story of the Life of Jesus. Told in words easy to read and understand. By the Author of "The Story of the Bible." With 40 full-page illustrations. Hodder & Stoughton. The Gospel story, with occasional brief explanatory remarks, is here told in language intelligible to the young. It is profusely and in some cases ably illustrated, but the representations of the Lord Jesus are not to our taste; Christ Jesus in the Wilderness, unseen by any human eyes, is too sacred a subject for illustration, and the picture so described might stand for Abraham just as well. (3s. 6d.)

SCARLET ANEMONES. By L. T. MEADE. Hodder & Stoughton. A very pretty story for children, telling how a child was lost and found again through his love for the bright flowers. Some useful lessons on the power of simple faith and believing prayer run through the tale, and the danger is shown of departing from strict truthfulness. Altogether a charming little book. (1s. 6d.)

THE TWO SISTERS. By L. T. MEADE. Hodder & Stoughton. A rather romantic love story, in which a devoted sister plans an act of self-sacrifice, and is rewarded by finding it needless. The heroine seems to have thought she might treat the gift of a good man's true love much as she might a Christmas card—rub off her own name, and pass it on to some one else! (1s 6d.)

CHEERFUL SUNDAYS. Hodder & Stoughton. A good book, with a good name, full of beautiful stories, poems, and pictures, covering a wide range of subjects, but all of the healthiest tone. Any mother will do well to put this book into her children's hands; or, better still, to gather them round her and read it to them herself. She will have her own heart stirred to a fresh love of things pure and true. (3s. 6d.)

THERE'S A FRIEND FOR LITTLE CHILDREN. By JESSIE F. ARMSTRONG. Hodder & Stoughton. A sweet, simple, natural story. The sketch of quiet Christian home-life in the country, as contrasted with the life of the London poor, is very touching. One lays the book down, feeling that the earnest clergyman, the poor, tempted, struggling father, and the little child who has found the Friend, and leads her father to Him, and through Him to temperance and happiness, are living human souls with whom it has been good to spend an hour. (2s. 6d.)

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

LENORE ANNANDALE'S STORY. By E. E. GREEN. Religious Tract Society. The intention of the writer of this tale is good, and considerable interest is created in the telling of it. Like many others, however, it is marred by a profusion of improbabilities. A judicious revision of the book would have improved it. (5s.)

STORY LAND. By SYDNEY GREY. With 32 illustrations by Robert Barnes. Religious Tract Society. There will be no lack of Christmas presents and New Year's gifts and school prizes of a very dainty kind this season. This is a very pretty story book, with good morals, and clever coloured pictures. (6s.)

THE SWEET STORY OF OLD. By HESBA STRETTON. Religious Tract Society. The families where Hesba Stretton's "Wonderful Life" has been read by the elder children will welcome this book for the little ones. The Sweet Story is told chiefly in the very words of Scripture, linked together by words of explanation and comment adapted to the youngest minds. The chapter on the beatitudes will make some hard sayings clear to the little readers. The brilliant pictures add to the attractiveness of the volume. (3s. 6d.)

THE DOCTOR'S EXPERIMENT. By the Author of "Boys of Highfield." Religious Tract Society. A capital book for boys, full of incident, but not unreal or sensational. The writer enters thoroughly into boylife, its dangers, delights, and difficulties. The "Doctor," be it understood, is a schoolmaster, the "experiment" is performed, not on a quivering quadruped, but a strangely unmanageable boy. How it succeeded, we leave the book to tell. We would heartily recommend it to parents and prize-givers. (5s.)

PRESENT DAY TRACTS. Vol. V. Religious Tract Society. These tracts are arrows from the hands of spiritual giants. We fervently hope they may be sharp in the hearts of the King's enemies. Tracts 26, 27, and 28 are defensive, proving with holy logic that only God could be the author of the Hebrew Scriptures; only John, son of Zebedee, the inspired author of the fourth Gospel; and that all prophecy points ultimately to a Divine Redeemer reigning on this earth. Tracts 29, 30, are vigorously aggressive, and deal heavy blows at the agnosticism of Herbert Spencer, and the fatalism of another school. Tract 25 is an admirable analysis of the Parsee religion. The brief marginal notes are no small help in following the lines of argument. (2s. 6d.)

ALMANACKS AND ANNUALS.

ALMANACKS.—John Ploughman's Almanack, compiled by Mr. Spurgeon, is still our first favourite. For real originality and the condensed essence of witty wisdom, there is nothing like it, so far as we know, in the whole category of calendars. Spurgeon's Illustrated Almanack, in small book form, is also good. The daily texts are chosen after a novel plan. Mr. Spurgeon gives us a portrait of his mother, and lauds her in a right filial way. Both these almanacks are published by Messrs. Passmore & Alabaster, 1d. each. Cassell's Illustrated Almanack (6d.) is much more than a mere calendar; it comprises a poetical and pictorial record of the seasons, and other genuine attractions of a varied kind. The People's Almanack (1d. Religious Tract Society) is a capital pennyworth, well illustrated, and packed full of tit-bits of valuable information. The great feature of the Sunday School Illustrated Almanack (1d., Sunday School Union) is a fine engraving, showing scenes in the life of John Wicklife. The Friend of Missions Almanack (1d., S. W. Partridge & Co.) has a number of fine illustrations, representing Africans, Albanians, Hindus, Egyptians, and Turcomans. The daily memoranda furnish a valuable list of the leading events in the annals of missionary effort. The newest thing in this department of literature is The Bible Searching Almanack (1d., J. F. Shaw & Co.). A well-chosen text for each day is given, but the reference is left blank, with the view of the passage being "searched" out day by day. The idea is a capital one. We hope every Sunday-school teacher in the land will present each of his or her pupils with a copy.

ANNUALS.—Little Snow Flakes is the children's Christmas number of the "Sunday Magazine." The stories, poems, and papers are sensible, and seasonable, and the numerous pictures are marvellously fine. Good Cheer, the Christmas number of "Good Words," consists of a complete story, by Mrs. Oliphant, which, judging from a cursory perusal of it, is neither better nor worse than the average fiction of the day. It is choicely illustrated by Robert Barnes (6d. each, Isbister & Co.).

CHRISTMAS CARDS.

MR. J. E. HAWKINS has for some years past taken a foremost place in the production of these reminders of the sacred season. Each year marks an advance in the quality, and those just issued certainly seem superior to all that have gone before. There may be selections that aim at more elaboration and variety of scope and design, but we have found none to excel those of Mr. Hawkins in a combination of artistic grace and beauty, with the setting forth, in fitting framework, of the glorious truths of the Word of God. Many of the Christmas cards of the present day are works of art and nothing more. These are also artistic gems, but they invariably cluster around the one great central event of the world's history. Where all are so good it is well nigh impossible to particularise. Amongst the most attractive and highest priced are Loving Kindness and Tender Mercies, a very choice packet of text cards, printed in 14 colours and gold, artistically ornamented with groupings of flowers. The Peace of God, rich landscapes set in flowers (3s. per packet of 6), Sevenfold Blessings (3s. 6d. per packet of 7), Looking unto Jesus, beautifully printed in colours and gold, with choicely illuminated texts (2s. per packet of 6); The Lord our Shield (2s. per packet of 4); Messages for the Children, &c., &c.

Another attractive packet comes from Mr. J. G. Wheeler, 88 Mildmay Park, N. They are cheaper, and not quite so highly finished as those of Mr. Hawkins. There are some very pretty reward cards for children; the combination of blue and gold and of blue and silver are welcome novelties. The neat and pretty packet entitled The Blue (6d. for 12) ought to be in high favour at temperance gatherings. Mr. Wheeler announces that he has now adopted the distinctive title of "The Ruby Series" for all his cards.

THE ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children,

Now Sheltering, Educating, and Training over 1,300 Poor Boys and Girls,

WILL (D.V.) BE HELD

THE SECOND WEEK OF DECEMBER, 1884.

A few Articles have already been received, but much more will be needed, and the aid of all is earnestly needed.

We would remind those friends whose busy fingers are at work on our behalf, that shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby clothing are particularly valuable additions to the clothing room of our Bazaar, being much asked for and readily sold. Of course besides these we shall be glad to receive pictures, jewellery, old coins, old china, curios, musical instruments, and fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, books, drawings, bric-a-brac, and other examples of the thousand and one tasteful ornaments which are required to furnish bazaar stalls.

It is not necessary, we hope, again to remind our friends that, as in former years, the Sale will be conducted in strict harmony with the objects in view—no raffling or other doubtful measures being adopted to ensure success or to bring in money.

All gifts should reach us AS SOON AS POSSIBLE, but in any case not later than Saturday, 1st December, and should contain inside the parcel, a complete list, with the name and address of the donor, so as to ensure acknowledgment. Carriage should be prepaid, and a separate advice of the despatch of the parcel should be posted to us two days beforehand. All articles and communications should be plainly addressed to 18 to 26, Stepney-causeway, London, E.

The Anchorage.

HEBREWS vi. 19.

To shelter respectable Young Women in Trouble.

FOR rules of admission to the Anchorage House, and full particulars of the work of the Anchorage Mission, and for trained servants, apply (by letter only) to Mrs. H. STUART-WORTLEY, Rosslyn House, Grove End-road, N.W., London.

Many of the young women admitted being mothers or about to become so, the extra care they require, and (when friendless) the help that the Mission must give towards paying for their infants at nurse during the first few months of the mother's return to service or other occupation, causes the work to be unusually costly, and subscriptions are much required, sent either to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley (President of the Ladies' Committee) at her private address as above, or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

AMIE; or, Heavenly Wisdom. By ELIZA RICHARDSON. Tinted Covers, 6d.; cloth, 1s.

We have commenced our permanent Hall, the cost of which, including everything, will be about £1000. Mr. Samuel Morley has promised £200, other contributions raise the sum to £500.

The District is very poor, and can help but little. During the past nine years, this work has been blessed to the salvation of many.

PASTOR COILLARD ON THE ZAMBESI.

THE following letter receeived by Mrs. Malan, and kindly forwarded to us for publication, will be read with deep interest:—

Dear Madame Malan,—You will remember the place where I date this letter. It is where we camped for four months, six years ago, and where our dear Khosana died. The only inhabitants of this dense forest were lions, which troubled us not a little, and swarms of the Tsetse fly, which compelled us to send back our bullocks the very night we arrived. No human beings, save the few natives attached to a very humble trading establishment, consisting of a tent and a hut. We are here again, not on the same spot, but four good miles nearer the river Zambesi. During the last six years the Tsetse fly has moved a little further.

You may well imagine with what feelings we made our pilgrimage of affection to the old Leshoma. We had difficulty in finding the spot where we had camped. The place was overgrown with grass and brushwood; of the hut which we had built, and of the strong palisade, which we had made to fortify ourselves against the attacks of the wild beasts, nothing remained but the charcoal which strewed the ground. But the large mahogany tree is still there, a few yards distant, to testify that we lived and suffered there. It bears on its trunk deeply engraved this simple epitaph:

"KHOSANA,

DIED

We arrived here the day before yesterday, but it was yesterday evening only that we found a suitable place to camp. It is lovely: a sandy plateau beautifully wooded, from which the eye rests upon the valley winding below, the densely wooded hills around, and eagerly gazes at the blue hills on the horizon beyond the Zambesi river. That is the land of duty to which we are called, and towards which our hearts tend. Tears and hopes, conflicting emotions, fill our hearts in gazing at them. What is awaiting us there? God knows. If there are hardships, privations, trials, afflictions, and bereavements, in store for us there, there is also grace to bear them, and blessing. Meantime we raise here our Ebenezer: "Hitherto God has helped us." We will consecrate ourselves anew to his service, bodies and souls, living and dying, and, girded with his strength, we shall fearlessly go forth.

Our journey from Mangwato has been a long, tedious, wearisome, and fatiguing one. It has lasted over two months. Two months in the wilderness! It is hard to travel in this land with clumsy, heavy, loaded waggons, and tired oxen, but still harder to lead an exhausted caravan. The people whom we brought from Basutoland got so weary that every time we stopped I dreaded the moment we had to make a new start. Every morning, when I awoke my men at three, I had spent already half an hour in communion with my God. But even then at the door of my waggon I found in the unwillingness and dilly-dallying of my men much to try my patience and my temper. Fortunately, I found in our evangelist Aaron who joined us at Seleka, an assistant full of energy. Our two artisans, Middleton and Waddell specially—one English the other Scotch—vied with each other in activity and zeal. They took upon themselves all they could, and certainly more than I expected, of the burden of the journey. With them and my colleague Mons. Jeaumairet we are a happy family. Pray the Lord that He may be pleased to keep each of us in health and strength for the sake of his work.

On the whole we have had a journey (from Mangwato) remarkably free from accidents and adventures. We only lost four of our bullocks, which is certainly a small proportion compared with our heavy loss at the Marico in March. We saw the footprints of elephants, giraffes, zebras, and quantities of antelopes, but saw nothing of the first and little of the others. The roaring of the lion was heard only once in the dead of the night by those who have a light sleep. We had more mishaps with our donkeys, several of which died, or were devoured by hyenas. But since we left Mangwato none of us have been ill. We had not plenty, but the very day the food of our people failed we arrived here, and we had hardly unyoked our oxen when natives arrived from the river and brought corn, beans, and nuts to sell.

As soon as our temporary installation here is completed, I intend to start for the Barotsi Valley with Mon. Jeaumairet and some of our natives. We have no time to lose, if I must come back and bring our party beyond the Zambesi, and settle down before the rainy season begins. We half expect M. Arnot to come down, but of course shall not wait unless we hear of his coming.

I am obliged to stop abruptly, in order not to miss the opportunity for the post. We may not have another one for many months to come. I will write on my return from the Barotsi Valley, please God. Yours in the Lord,

Leshoma, July 26. F. Coillard.

Limehouse Ragged School.—This school was established in 1856, under the auspices of the Ragged School Union. We are doing a good and useful work among the poorest of the inhabitants of the East-end. We have various agencies at work, auxiliaries to the Sunday Night School, which all require supporting. Donations will be thankfully received by Mr. T. Dalton, 642, Commercial-road, Limehouse, E.

Rescue Work in Dublin.—The Rescue Home (3, Cowley-place, Dublin) was founded shortly after Mr. Moody's first visit to Dub in, and has since then been able to give a shelter to many who were willing to leave a life of sin. Owing to the Christian teaching and help they have found there, many of those poor fallen ones have received Christ as their Saviour, and are now leading different lives. We have lost friends by death, and the pressure of the times renders it still more difficult to keep up subscriptions once willingly given. We earnestly appeal for help in this undertaking.

HOMES OF HOPE, Nos. 4, 5 & 6, Regent-square, Gray's-inn-road, London, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

The applications are most distressing, and the funds are quite exhausted.

SIXPENCE, POST FREE,
Or LARGE EDITION (cloth), for 1s. 3d.

TWELFTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "The Christian," WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of Miss M. L. FAIRS, of Margery Hall Farm, REIGATE HILL.

The correspondent in this case was Mrs. E. Smith, of Hazel-bank, Reigate, who, taking very kind interest in this young woman, recommended my treatment to her, and wrote me on her behalf.

She came to Coombe Lodge March 20. She had then bad "cough for two years, spitting of blood had commenced nine weeks ago, greenish expectoration, pains in the side and shoulders, breathing short, appetite failing, losing flesh." Report on examination: "Lungs and heart weak, but case hopeful with care." A sister had died of consumption.

The patient followed the advice given her to the letter, and improvement was soon reported. In the middle of April Mrs. Smith writes me:—"You will be glad to hear that M. L. Fairs is very much better," and in May she writes:—"The girl is wonderfully improved. I trust she will continue the medicine till you pronounce her perfectly well." She also adds, alluding to another case, "the poor wife and mother for whom you sent medicine is already decidedly better." Mrs. S. is connected with mission work, and greatly interested in the welfare of the poor.

The patient continued till well. On September 22 Mrs. Smith writes:—"You will be pleased to hear that M. L. Fairs is now quite well, and comfortably settled in service."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

HOW TO STUDY THE BIBLE.

Some Thoughts and Suggestions on Profitable Bible Reading.

Price 1d. 7s. 6d. per 100.

"I don't think there is a book in the world we neglect so much as the Bible. Merely reading the Bible is no use at all without we study it thoroughly, and hunt it through as it were for some great truth. Read the Bible, my friends, as if you were seeking for something of value. It is a good deal better to take a single chapter and spend a month on it, than to read the Bible at random for a month."

WORKS BY ANNA SHIPTON.

The Brook in the Way.

A Volume of Original Hymns and Poems illustrative of the Christian Life.

THIRD EDITION.

Beautifully printed on toned paper, and elegantly bound, 3s. 6d. (post-free).

REVIEWS.

"They are songs of the heart, and will be read with greatest pleasure by those who live nearest to Jesus."
Christian World.

"These simple and strong writings hold into the most vivid light especially the following truths; viz. the sphere and power of faith; the certain prevalence of prayer; the particular providence of God; the proposition that nothing is secular which is sacred enough to be mentioned to God in prayer; the necessity of continual labour for Christ; the vital importance of seizing opportunities to do good, and to illustrate in the life the difficult and Christly graces of forbearance, forgiveness, and that charity, or love, which literally 'beareth all things.' By various arguments, by numberless touching and startling incidents, these truths are brought to view. There is something in the revelation of such implicit confidence in God and His writter word that staggers the philosophy of materialism, and does mightily brace the faith of believers."
The Christian at Work.

Whispers in the Palms.

A Volume of Hymns and Poetic Meditations.

FOURTH EDITION.

Beautifully printed on toned paper, and elegantly bound, 3s. 6d.

"We sincerely hope these 'Whispers' may prove soothing, comforting, and encouraging to the souls of all who may be drawn within the sphere of their utterance."
British Workwoman.

Waymarks of My Pilgrimage.

"The various chapters are mines of richest experience. The author lives at the feet of Jesus, or rather in His bosom, and she receives intimations of guidance which none but such can know."
The Sword and Trowel.

"Those readers especially, who by sorrow or suffering are 'shut in' from active service for Christ, and who often lament that they can do so little for Jesus, will find in these books much instruction and comfort, and learn something of the mysteries of God's dealings with His chastened ones. Those who mayhave read the books will appreciate the aptness and beauty of these remarks, and any who may yet read them will, I am persuaded, do so with an increased interest."—New York Advocate and Guardian.

RAILWAY MISSION WORK.

The Railway Mission, 186, Aldersgate Street, London, E.C.

President: RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.

Vice-President: T. A. DENNY, ESQ., 9, CONNAUGHT-PLACE, W.

Treasurer: S. GURNEY SHEPPARD, ESQ., 28, THREADNEEDLE-STREET, E.C.

We desire to enlist the sympathy of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN for the work of our Mission among Railway Employés.

This Mission is so evidently of God that we have considered it a great privilege to support it to a large extent; but the progress has been so rapid, and the claims are now becoming so numerous and urgent, that we feel it to be only right that we should invite others to become partners with us in this extensive and growing work.

There are about 370,000 employés on the Railways of Great Britain and Ireland, and there are only about eighty different places where Missions are established for the men and their families.

Numerous testimonies as to the readiness with which the Mission is received by the men could be given, but we select one or two amongst many which are constantly being received at the office.

A lady in Swansea recently wrote: "We cannot measure how far the good done has stretched. I heard yesterday that all the porters but one at one station seem to have decided for the Lord; they are so happy together, it does not seem like the same place. I could praise God all day long for two cases—most dear to my heart—but there are numbers."

A foreman at Westbourne-park writes: "I thank God 'The Railway Mission' ever came here, not only for myself, wife, and children, but for my mates, many of whom, a short time ago, were with me going the downward road, but are now on the 'up line' for glory."

From T. C., Doncaster, October 27, 1884: "I do praise God for the great blessing we all received throughout the Mission. It was a grand sight on Sunday night; but especially to know that among those that came to the Saviour was the wife and son of ——. We pray that you may soon come down again."

It is also necessary that a hall like the one erected at Westbourne-park, which has proved very successful, should be erected at West Brompton. The Railway men are collecting money amongst themselves for this purpose, and two ladies who know and have watched the work there, have given £300 towards it. One of these ladies, Miss B. L. E——, Cromwell-road, S.W., writes: "I have been deeply interested in the Railway men living at West Brompton for the last seven years, and have seen several turn from darkness to light, especially during the last eighteen months; many who were lukewarm Christians, are now burning with love to Christ, and desire to make that love known to others. May our dear Master turn many hearts to help us!"

From many parts of the country letters are received, asking the Secretaries to come and help; but they cannot do so for lack of the necessary means.

In all, we need at this time more than £1000, and pray earnestly for immediate help. We shall be glad to send our last Report, and The Railway Signal, to any applicant, both of which give some idea of the magnitude of the work, the need for it, and its claims upon the Christian public. Cheques should be made payable to the Treasurer, and sent to the Office of the Mission, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.; or to the Bankers, Messrs. Ransom, Bouverie & Co., 1, Pall Mall East.

T. A. Denny.
Vice-President.

"I have examined with care the views for Biblical Illustration. . . . The Engravings are very beautiful. In clearness, accuracy, and general effect, they surpass, I think, any I have seen. The places represented are all familiar to me; and I have been particularly struck by the fidelity with which your artist has reproduced Frith's admirable photographs."—J. L. Porter.

Foxe's Book of Martyrs.

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of Primitive and Protestant Martyrs in all parts of the World.

EDITED BY
Rev. J. MILNER, M.A.,
With Essay and Additions by Rev. Ingram Cobbin, M.A.

With Twelve Full-Page Illustrations.

"As a complete edition of Foxe's Martyrs, this is by far the handiest and most attractive we know. In paper, type, illustrations, and binding, the book does great credit to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, to whom the Christian public are indebted for this timely publication."—Primitive Methodist.

"Messrs. Morgan and Scott have just published a new edition of Foxe's Book of Martyrs, which deserves a word of greeting. The present edition extends far beyond Foxe's times; having been enriched by the Rev. J. Milner and others; and brought down to the present century by the Rev. Ingram Cobbin. Altogether it is a cheap and complete Book of Martyrs, well printed and elegantly bound; and suitable for a gift-book."—Record.

"We cannot but express the desire that the circulation of this volume may be as extensive as its merit so well demands. It is elegant in the upgetting; and paper and print are a credit to its enterprising publishers."—British Friend.

"The book is full of teaching, spiritual and far-reaching; and we have much enjoyed reading it. The work is a good five shillings'-worth."—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in The Sword and Trowel.

"Of this work we can speak very highly. It is not a mere description of Temple Ritual and Jewish Ceremonies; but is more of a commentary and exposition; and is rich in evangelical teaching. The illustrations in colour and gold are exceedingly beautiful."—Christian Age.

"The reading of this book has been to us a precious means of grace; and to all who love truth sweetly told we advise its study. It is full of Christ. The truths of the Gospel gleam on every page; and we feel that we shall be doing good work for any Christian brother whom we may induce to read it. Nothing seems strained; all comes out naturally. Of the get-up of the book, the binding is good, the printing is exquisite, the illustrations are elegant, and taken altogether we have not derived for some time so much pleasure and profit in reading a single volume."—The Baptist Messenger.

John, whom Jesus Loved:

A Sketch of the Character, Writings, Theology, and Influence of the Beloved Disciple.

BY
REV. J. CULROSS, D.D., M.A.,
Principal of Bristol Baptist College.

"In Dr. Culross' new work, entitled 'John, whom Jesus Loved,' we have found a book. It is part of our appointed suffering in this present life to be compelled to winnow heaps of literature, with great result in chaff and dust, and small gain in bread-corn; and therefore our rejoicing is the greater when grain comes to our garner as clean provender in good weight and measure. It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes; but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."
Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in The Sword and Trowel.

"Thoughtful chapters based on the leading incidents in the life of John. The admirable manner in which the subject is treated, and the excellence of the ideas themselves, should win for this work a large share of attention."—Rock.

"In a series of nine chapters of singular freshness and beauty the various aspects of the life, labour, and teachings of the beloved disciple are traced. While a tender affection for the subject of the work is evident, anything like hero worship is carefully avoided, and it is never forgotten that 'the servant is not greater than his Lord.' For the young Christian just entered upon the new life, as well as for the more advanced believer, the book is invaluable."

The Christian.

THE CHURCH IN THE WOOD.

[The following touching epistle was lately written by a country pastor to a friend in London.]

OUR own life is one of continual need, and has been for the fifteen years we have been here, but it has afforded our gracious Father many opportunities of showing us that our help cometh from Him. I am thankful to say we have had a few very encouraging instances of the reception of Christ by the very poor and needy.

It is a great happiness to visit lonesome cottages where the bereaved and orphan are, and spend an evening with them, just as a visitor, not hurriedly, but hearing them out, and, with a few of Sankey's hymn-books, get the young ones together in the chimney corner, and sing and talk with them. Some of these scenes have been worthy of both painter and poet. How I wish my memory could retain the words of the children and poor people, when perfectly at their ease they talked of heavenly things.

I read "Mother's Last Words" to an afflicted little group of orphans down deep in a wood, at a cottage called the Furnace House—the only remains of an iron industry of past centuries. The dear woman had passed through a furnace of affliction, but the Holy Spirit had graciously refined her. Many happy times I had with her and her little ones in her illness. When she lay dying on her poor bed in the tiny room close under the roof, the little window was open to the wood, all loveliness, with its wealth of pine, and beech, and oak, and poplar, and hazel—a prophecy of the Paradise to which she was going. The soft summer air waved the little blind stretched across the open pane, and reached the faded cheek and cooled the heated brow. One could hear the sound of the murmuring brook hard by, that had rippled on when the iron-works were in their glory, and the furnaces roared as they separated the metal from the dross. The furnaces had gone, the sound of the hammer, and the din of work. Now, amid paradise restored, the stream sang on a restitution song of "No more curse, no more sighing, no more pain, for the former things are passed away."

Our dying sister passed from the furnace-house of affliction to the paradise of God. "Speak a word to my children when I am gone! They will need a word of counsel, for they are all so young."

I thought of this scene when one dark night recently I made my way down into the wood; the trees overhead cast their dark shadows: the scene was in keeping with my spirit. I stood still to listen to the utter stillness of the air, only broken by the sound of falling drops of dew from the trees upon the leaves below.

When I reached the lonely cottage I found the three little orphans alone. Their father, poor man, a carter, was still far from home with his horses, and the little orphans, about the ages of six, ten, and eleven, were keeping the house all alone. At first, no answer to my knock. I said, "It's Mr. S——." I hear a little voice saying, "Winnie, open the door. It's Mr. S——." I am soon admitted, and an explanation is given why they had been so still. "Father said we were not to open the door to anyone, unless Mr. S—— came down."

Poor little dears, how glad they were of company. Soon seated round the little fire in the large chimney-corner, with the little one on my knee, and the little boy opposite, and his sister by his side, we settled ourselves for a pleasant evening.

"What shall we sing?"

"Safe in the arms of Jesus!" said the girl. This we sang.

"What shall we read?" "Read the story of the Raising of Lazarus," said the boy. The story led naturally to a talk about the dear departed mother. "Perhaps she's with us to-night." Oh for a painter's brush to catch and retain the animation that lighted up their worn faces! Now I found that the mother's counsel and prayers were bearing fruit. Rarely among the children of the poor have I seen such a clear perception of spiritual truths. How the sentences were finished for me!

The time passed on and warned us we must go, but a quarter to ten was a late hour to leave little children in such a dilapidated cottage and such a lonesome wood; but their poverty would protect them. Nay, their Father on high has them under his wing. Returning through the wood I hear an approaching footstep. "Is that you, K——? Oh, it is Mr. S——. I'm very thankful to you for coming down to see the children. I'm sorry to have to leave them alone, but had nobody to go and stay with them. I do sit at home when I can, and read to them. I should be thankful for you to come down when I'm at home."

The following night I went again by appointment. He was reading the Gospel to his little ones. He told me a year ago he could not read at all, but his wife and children had been his teachers. On this occasion it was most interesting to see the anxiety that his little girl evinced that the father should understand all that was said. Anything that struck the child she repeated to the father, and often did her eyes turn from me to him to see whether he shared in her own interest. I felt the truth of the words, "a little child shall lead them."

How much we lose by hurried visits, both in understanding the sorrows of the poor and in making ourselves understood by them.

We do love the country work. It differs very much from London work. The town methods cannot be adopted here. Our congregations are small, and it costs much to get evangelists, and they do not care to speak as a rule to the few, and we have no evangelical gentry to aid in bearing the expense of lectures or Temperance movements. But in our smaller gatherings, prayer-meetings, and sewing meetings, and, I ought not to forget, our open-air meetings on Sunday evenings, we have very much that is exceedingly interesting.

Where have I wandered to? and you such a busy man. Forgive my long note; and, while I am writing, let me ask an interest in your prayers.

IDOLS IN THE PULPIT.*

WHY is preaching often followed by such poor results? Who is to blame? Perhaps everybody.

Remember, the preacher has before him a very mixed audience. A select number of his hearers, perhaps, do not go with the multitude, but the rest are afflicted with avarice and pride, with envy and jealousy; many are slanderers, some are intemperate, lustful, or indifferent, and then there are the merely orthodox people, further off from the kingdom of God than all the rest. With such a congregation is it to be wondered at if sermons are followed by small results?

On the other hand, the non-success of the pulpit may be the fault of the minister. Instead of attaching the blame to his people, he should perhaps turn to himself, and there see the reason why his harangues fall powerless on the great mass of indifferent hearers. Has he not often got Rachel's box of idols with him in the pulpit? If so, how can his ministry be blessed? What power can he have over souls when he urges on them a faith he does not possess, a self-denial he does not practise, Christian virtues which he fails to illustrate? He may even grow vehement, but he will not convince, even though he be the most orthodox of the orthodox. The Word of Life falling from his lips will be like Elisha's staff in the hands of Gehazi. The staff was laid on the face of the dead child, "but there was neither voice nor hearing."

Idols! where is the pulpit in which they are not to be found? Theophilus has a crowded church, being possessed of exceptional gifts. But when he casts forth his net over his hearers, does he draw it back full of great and small fish? No, it is empty. As he descends from the pulpit he hopes to hear it said that he never preached better in his life. Praise is his favourite idol.

Oh, brethren! we have the hardest of all tasks to fulfil. Our opponent is sin—that weapon of hell; but we may wield another that is mightier—grace. God will only furnish us with this, however, on condition of our leaving all our idols, even the smallest, behind us, as we ascend the pulpit. Oh, then we shall not fight an unequal fight with sin; then we shall know how churches are revived, and deserts turned into a fruitful field.

Having reached the last stage in my career, with what bitter regret I look back, and see that too often I have made my pulpit like Rachel's box. Those accursed idols have paralysed my strength. But I know also that when I have shaken myself free of them my ministry has been abundantly blessed; and this is my consolation in my old age. Let me tell you of one instance.

Some years since a pastor wrote and said that a movement was beginning in his church, and he wanted me to go and preach there—a fresh voice would do good. I started, but when at some distance from his parish my conscience suddenly awoke. "Wretched man," it said, "what are you going to do in that church? Preach to others, when you ought rather to preach to yourself? Have you given your own heart to God? No, for you have not given Him an idol that you love better than Himself; go back." I was about to do this, when suddenly, making a violent effort, I said, "Lord, here is my idol, I sacrifice it to Thee."

* An old Minister's Reflections and Confessions. Taken from a speech by Pastor F. Piraux père, delivered at Lausanne.

Immediately deliverance came. Profound joy filled my soul. I was a different man. I ascended the pulpit, and for a week proclaimed the counsel of God. A great revival resulted, and that church became one of the most flourishing, through the Christian life of its members.

SPURGEONIC THOUGHT GEMS.

BRICK WORSHIP.

WHEN you have displayed all your skill in architecture, can you secure any more of the Divine presence than the disciples had in the upper room? Can you get as much of it? A tasteful building may be a way of showing your pious regard for the Lord, and so far it may be justifiable and acceptable; but take care that you do not regard it as essential, or even important, or you will make an idol of it. If the church or chapel be esteemed for its form or tastefulness, it will become a mere exhibition of skill and industry, and so be no more sacred than the house of a greedy merchant, or the palace of a profligate prince. No chisel of mason or hammer of carpenter can build a holy place. Without either of these a spot may be none other than the house of God and the gate of heaven.

EVIL INFLUENCE.

Every ungodly man ought to reflect upon the mischief which he has caused to others by his evil life: his wife has been hindered from good things, his children have grown up without the fear of God, his companions with whom he has worked and traded are hardened in their wickedness by a sight of his wickedness, youthful minds have been seduced from virtue by his vice, simple hearts have been led into infidelity by his unbelief. O men, you know not what you do. You let fly sparks, but what the conflagration may have already been none of you can tell. Carelessly, O man, hast thou cast the thistledown to the wind; but what harvests of the ill weed have come and may yet come from thy single handful, who can tell? Are there not some in hell through thine influence? Are not others going there through thine unhallowed teaching? O thou whose hair is snow-white with sixty or seventy winters, how much of ruin hast thou wrought already? How much more is still to come?

THE TERROR OF THE LORD.

Conviction of sin wrought by the Spirit of God is more powerful than argument. I had religiousness, but I never drew near to God in spirit and in truth till I had seen and almost felt that drawn sword. To feel that God must punish sin, that God will by no means clear the guilty, is the best thing to drive a man Godward. To feel that sword as it were with its point at your own breast, its edge ready to descend upon your own being, this it is that makes the guilty plead for pardon in real earnest. Men cry not "Lord save," till they are forced to add, "or I perish." I could wish for certain preachers that I hear of, that they were made more vividly to realise the terror of the Lord in their own souls. He who has felt the hot drops of despair scald his throat, has had it cleared for the utterance of free grace doctrine. If some men had more fully felt that they were sinners, they would have made better saints.

IMPOSSIBLE SPIRITUALITY.

I frequently meet with impossibly spiritual people who hate the mention of money in connection with the worship of God. The clatter of a collection jars upon their sublime feelings. The mention of money in connection with the worship of God is more dreadful to them than it is to God Himself; for He saith, "Thou hast bought Me no sweet cane with money;" and again, "None shall appear before Me empty." To these pious persons money saved and hoarded is abundantly pleasant; their only objection is to giving it. In this they somewhat differ from David, who paid to Ornan for the threshing-floor on which to build a temple of God six hundred shekels of gold by weight. It is a very curious thing, is it not, that one man should show his spirituality by his liberality, and another should pretend to do it by the reverse method?—Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, No. 1808.

THE SECRET OF VICTORY.

MANY who have to combat with adverse circumstances and strong temptations will perhaps be encouraged and stimulated to stronger faith by perusing the following extracts from an address given recently to a large gathering of University students at Cambridge, by Rev. H. C. Moule:—

"There is in college life, for many reasons, a special risk of manifold self-indulgence; waste of time and means; indifference to the claims of dependents; laxity in little duties. There is the risk, in the field of emulation, of great growths of self-consciousness and self-seeking. And then the even darker temptations—the sin of dark streets and lanes; and not that only, but the invasion of at least the imagination by secret impurity; not begun here, indeed, but liable here to terrible development. How shall we overcome? We shall not overcome by intellectual force or refinements, good gifts as these things are. Literary perception, logical precision: these things are dust in the wind against the power of sin at the springs of thought and will. And as to modern substitutes for Christianity, however gravely meant and reasoned, whatever else lies against them this surely lies, that they have no inmost secret for purification of thought and will at the springs. What can I say? I can say—Jesus Christ. With absolute certainty I say this, that our Lord Jesus Christ is able to deal, and to deal thoroughly, with the worst temptations you can bring Him."

In reference to the links between the power of Christ and the individual soul in its personal conflicts, the same speaker thus strikingly sets forth the truth:—

"There are conditions to his action. You must in a very real way come to Him; you must take Him at his own terms; you must submit and commit in strong reality. You must in no figure of speech yield yourself to be his slave; that harsh, degrading, glorious word; once deeply repugnant to my own will, now, I trust, as dear to me as word can be. Yes, to be king in temptation you must be slave to Christ; realising that you are indeed his chattel, the chattel of the crucified, atoning, risen Redeemer. But be this, do this, and I venture to affirm you shall be astonished at the work within you which your Master will do. You will adore his mysterious power to break habits at the root. Kindness will have displaced selffulness, patience impatience, purity pollution; your aims will be merged in his. Call in this Divine Keeper of the soul with a full remembrance that He is indeed 'not yourselves;' a Personality infinitely real, One who knows you, and can handle you with a divine personal influence throughout."

PAINFUL, BUT NEEDFUL.

By Pastor FRANK H. WHITE.

"And lest I should be exalted above measure, through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me, lest I should be exalted above measure. For this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me. And He said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me."—2 Cor. xii. 7—9.

PAINFUL, but needful. "Painful," for it was a thorn in the flesh (i.e., in the body, for "flesh" cannot here mean man's corrupt nature). Needful, "for it was given me," says the Apostle, "lest I should be exalted beyond measure." What this thorn was we are not told.* All sorts of conjectures have been hazarded, some of which are in the highest degree improbable; others, simply ridiculous. Luther, Calvin, &c., understood it to relate to the "fiery darts," or wicked suggestions of Satan. Dr. Doddridge supposes that the view which Paul had of the glories of heavenly objects "so affected his nerves as to produce a paralytic disorder, and particularly a stammering in his speech, and perhaps also a ridiculous distortion of the countenance." Chrysostom thinks it must have been a headache, Tertullian the earache. Others, with more probability, judge it to have been "a painful affection of the eye" (Gal. iv. 14, 15), "the trial which was in my flesh."—Canon Farrar.

But it is impossible, in the very nature of the case, to speak with any certainty on the point, and these mere guesses at the truth serve no good purpose. The exact nature of the Apostle's affliction has been wisely withheld from us, one reason for which may be that it should not be possible for us to compare our trials with his, and so, on the one hand (supposing we found we were afflicted in the same way), become puffed up, or, on the other, be unduly cast down. Whatever it was, it must have been the cause of considerable suffering—doubtless some painful bodily affection, which could only be likened to the pain caused by a rankling thorn, piercing and tearing the flesh.

Paul tells us that his thorn was "given" him. "There was given me," as any other good thing; so meekly and uncomplainingly does he speak of his sore trial. He could only regard it as of Divine appointment, and not less so because it was at the same time "a messenger of Satan, to buffet me."

He tells us, also, why it was given him: "Lest I should be exalted above measure" (literally, overmuch uplifted) "through the abundance of the revelations." It follows, therefore, that this holy and devoted apostle (who we have no reason to believe was any more subject to this sin than another) was in real danger of falling into the condemnation of the devil, by indulging in pride of heart. And this, not in spite of his attainments, but on account of them. It was because of "the abundance of the revelations that the thorn in the flesh was given him. Here, indeed, was Satan's opportunity. Thus,

* The word rendered "thorn," and which occurs nowhere else in the New Testament, means a sharpened piece of wood, a stake, a thorn, or prickle. Alford well says, "It seems quite necessary to infer that the Apostle alludes to some painful and tedious bodily malady, which at the same time put him to shame before those among whom he exercised his ministry.'

as old Trapp says, "No sooner was Christ out of the waters of baptism than He was in the fires of temptation; no sooner were the Israelites out of Egypt, than Pharaoh pursued them."

What a solemn lesson for present-day Christians! How far must the best of us be from a state in which there is no need to watch and pray, lest we enter into temptation, when not even the sight of the glories of heaven sufficed to slay the pride of the "chiefest of apostles." ("Lord, who can understand his errors? cleanse thou me from secret faults!") Far from high and heavenly experiences giving us any immunity in this respect, the contrary is the truth. Here, too, we have a proof that painful bodily and other afflictions are in themselves no mark of Divine displeasure, sent as a chastisement for past sins. The most favoured members of the family of God—those who are privileged to enjoy the highest tokens of their Heavenly Father's grace and love, and to see most of his glory while here below, are often grievously afflicted in body. This was evidently the case with John's friend Gaius, else the Apostle would not have said, "Beloved, I wish above all things thou mayest prosper, and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth" (1 John iii. 1).

Have we any just ground for thinking that God has left off to deal with his servants as He dealt with the great Apostle to the Gentiles? May not the reason given for his affliction account for the afflictions which many are enduring in this present time? It surely is not necessary that our trials should be of the exact nature as his. Every thorn is not just the same shape, though all thorns cause pain when they enter into our flesh.

Our "thorn" may be bodily sickness, some wearing pain, or wearying infirmity, or wasting disease. It may be blindness, or lameness, or deafness; perhaps poverty or some peculiar domestic trial; or a sick child; or, what is more painful still, a wayward, disobedient child, a drunken husband, or idle wife; or it may be some one who has risen up to blacken our character, and take away our fair name. No thorn rankles and causes the flesh to smart and fester more than the sharp poisoned thorn of calumny. In a minister of the Gospel, or Sunday-school teacher, it may be want of apparent success, a withholding of the blessing, a failure in some undertaking from which we expected great things to issue. Or, it may be, that God has permitted Satan to obtain some temporary victory over us, that we may be lowered in our own eyes and in the eyes of others, lest we should be overmuch uplifted.

The occasion, too, of the Apostle's thorn in the flesh is instructive. We may learn at least one lesson from it: not to be too ready to speak of our spiritual attainments or experiences; our seasons of near communion with God, &c. It is, to say the least, dangerous. Where is the true child of God who has not proved this? Favoured, perhaps, with some special, it may be extraordinary, manifestation of the Divine presence, the same has been made the immediate subject of talk and self-glorification, and the sense thereof has straightway departed.

"Let no one pride himself on anything he has received from God, for as sure as he does so all enjoyment will be taken away by some keen thorn, which Satan knows how to sharpen so ingeniously, that he will be compelled to feel it, whether he is willing or unwilling."—Hedinger.

Fourteen years had passed away since the Apostle, caught up to the third heavens, heard unspeakable things which it was not lawful to utter (a man may know more than he can speak), yet the matter never seems to have escaped him, until he writes this letter to the Church at Corinth. It is remarkable, also, how little any of the Apostles allude in their Epistles to the many "signs and wonders" which attended their ministry. What a contrast to the false apostles who have risen since, who have made their supposed miracles their chief boast. Contrast, too, Paul's dignified silence, and subsequent modest mention of his rapture, with the inflated style of all mere pretenders to heavenly revelations, such as Mahomet, Joseph Smith, Swedenborg, &c.*

How did the Apostle deal with the "thorn" in his flesh? He did not deal with it at all. He could not remove it. No doubt he wished he could. But any attempt at self-extraction would have made matters worse. What, then, does he do? He prays for its removal. He did not ignore its presence, or try to steel himself against the suffering it caused him. The true Christian is not a Stoic. He is not, neither does he affect to be, without feeling. To him, as to another, pain is pain, sorrow is sorrow. He feels as keenly as does the worldling, perhaps more so, bereavement, poverty, scorn of enemies, neglect, or treachery of friends. It cannot be wrong to feel the suffering of suffering; neither can it be wrong to desire its removal. Paul desired with all his heart to part company with his trial. "For this thing," he says, "I besought the Lord," not once nor twice only, but "thrice, that it might depart from me." Then he ceased. His importunities had a limit. The moment he learned it was the will of God that the thorn should remain he submitted.

His prayer was answered, though not in the way he had hoped. The thorn remained, but something else was added. "And He said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee;" "my grace," not your strength; "my grace," not your powers of endurance; "my grace," not your determination to brave it out. "My grace," and my grace alone "is sufficient." Dr. Hodge renders it, "My love is sufficient."

Payson, in his last days, said, "Christians might avoid much trouble and inconvenience if they would only believe what they profess, that God is able to make them happy without anything else. They imagine that if such a dear friend were to die, or such-and-such blessings were to be removed, they would be miserable. Whereas God can make them a thousand times happier without them. To mention my own case; God has been depriving me of one blessing after another, but as every one was removed, He has come in, and filled up its place, and now when I am a cripple, and not able to move, I am happier than I ever was in my life before, or ever expected to be; and if I had believed this twenty years ago, I might have been spared much anxiety."

Not content with telling his servant that, instead of removing his trial, He would give him all-sufficient grace to bear it, the Lord throws in an additional argument for his procedure, and adds, "for my strength (power) is made perfect in weakness." "My power." Who is this speaking? It is Christ Himself, all the way through. It is to Christ the Apostle prays. It is Christ who answers from heaven, saying, "My grace is sufficient for thee, for my power is perfected in weakness." "My power," who was "crucified in weakness, yet raised in power"—raised, also, to the place of power, or authority, whence I can send forth my supporting grace to my weak and struggling disciples below." "My power," the fruit of my purchase. "My power," that power which I myself wrought by when on earth, and by which I overcame the enemy; the same dread foe whose messenger is now buffeting you; that power by which I endured the cross, and finally overcame death and the grave; the power of my resurrection, the power of the Holy Spirit of God; divine power perfected (completely manifested) in human weakness. Here is one sphere of its operations. Here it "rests," "tabernacles," as the Shechinah cloud dwelt in the frail tent in the wilderness.

As Luther says, "Christ cannot make known his full strength in us until we are weak and suffering. Our weakness need never trouble us. The weaker we are in ourselves the stronger in Christ. It is God's way to manifest his power and majesty by means of nothingness and feebleness. If we have much grace we shall have much suffering, if much suffering much power, and if much power much victory."

To sum up what I have written in few words:—

(1) The choicest believers are often the sorest sufferers.

(2) Such suffering, far from being sent as a mark of the Divine displeasure, or as a chastening for past sin, are quite as often, as in the case of Paul's thorn, intended to preserve us from falling into sin. They are preventive rather than curative.

(3) Self-exaltation is a sin to which the people of God are peculiarly liable, more especially after seasons of high communion, &c., the sin which, of all others, God hates, and is most calculated to hinder blessing, and so must be kept down at all costs.

(4) The prayer of faith must needs be answered, but not always in the manner looked for. The love of God is often more conspicuous in sustaining a suffering saint under affliction than in its removal.

(5) Times of great confessed weakness are not infrequently times of great strength. True spiritual power is associated, not with splendid abilities, not with abundant revelations, not with excessive labours, not with extraordinary experiences, not with ecstatic feelings, not with that something which we all like to have, and which seems to make preaching and praying so easy, often to be attributed to a natural buoyancy of spirit or robust bodily health, making hard work a delight. Not with any of these; but with some painful, wearing, rankling thorn in the flesh, which tears into ribbons all our comfortable feelings, and reduces us to a heap of disjointed nothingness, out of the ruins of which we can only cry, "Lord, it is nothing with Thee to help, whether with many or with them that have no power; help us, O Lord our God, for we rest in Thee." Oh for this true Pauline power, to wait and witness as well as work; power to endure, to bear shock after shock, and not be moved from our hope in the Gospel; power to "cleave to the Lord with full purpose of heart;" or, if too weak for this, power to cling to his feet, in a word, power to be weak. "I have nothing to do," said Alice Bickersteth, when dying, "but to keep clinging to Jesus till I see Him." Dear suffering child of God, let us cling to Jesus till we see Him, then no more thorns in the flesh.

"There shall we bathe our weary souls
In seas of heavenly rest,
And not a wave of trouble roll
Across our peaceful breast."

* The latter has filled books with what he either pretended or fancied he saw and heard in heaven; while the former declares in the Koran that he had been translated to heaven on a white ass; that he had been conveyed from the temple of "Mecca" to Jerusalem, then to heaven itself, where he was commanded of God to pray fifty times a day, but, at the intercession of Moses, it was reduced to three. He then returned to Jerusalem, after having performed a journey of 1000 years in the tenth part of a night."

NATHANAEL.

IT may help us in obtaining light as to our attitude towards the second coming of Christ, if we look at those who were expecting his first coming.

In Isa. lxii. 6, 7, Jehovah declares:—

"I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night: ye that are the Lord's remembrancers, keep not silence, and give Him no rest, till He establish, and till He make Jerusalem a praise in the earth."

We know, therefore, that for the following 700 years there was a succession of watchers on the walls of Zion, and of the Lord's remembrancers seeking the blessing of Jerusalem.

When we come to the end of the period, we find Simeon waiting for the consolation of Israel; Anna serving God with fastings and prayers night and day; and many looking for the redemption of Jerusalem.

John the Baptist comes preaching to a people who had been taught by the watchers that Messiah was soon to come, and saying, "The time is fulfilled, the kingdom of God is at hand; repent and believe the glad tidings."

Nathanael, and Nicodemus, and Joseph of Arimathea, were all looking for the coming kingdom, and when Jesus drew nigh to Jerusalem for the last time, the people generally thought that the kingdom of God should immediately appear.

Now the object of all study of prophecy should be to produce men like Simeon, who was righteous and devout, and the Spirit of God was upon him; women like Anna, who served God with fastings and prayers night and day; watchers upon the walls of Zion, servants waiting for their Lord; a bride expecting her betrothed.

We cannot but be struck with this, that the saints of the Old Testament had no scheme of fulfilment. They did not regard prophecy as a dissected puzzle. Their whole soul was concentrated upon looking for Him who should be the consolation of Israel; their minds were not disturbed by a variety of theories as to how Messianic prophecy was to be fulfilled. The minutest particulars were given as to the Messiah, his forerunner, his birth, his life, his death, his resurrection, his second coming, and his kingdom; but we can see that without inspiration they could not have put them together nor anticipated the order of their fulfilment. They knew that the 22nd Psalm must mean suffering even unto death; but they could not know the meaning even of its central and most significant particular, "They pierced my hands and my feet."

There were no Preterist, Presentist, and Futurist Schools of the prophets; there were no hot discussions, no contemptuous judgments of each other, no bitter animosities between them.

There were some, indeed, who professed to know the how and the whence of his coming. But they were mostly wrong in their conclusions. "And there was a division among them." (See John vii. 40—43, ix. 16, x. 19.) This has an oft-repeated lesson for ourselves.

To those who waited there came revelations. It was revealed to Simeon that he should not see death until he had seen the Lord's Anointed. When Anna entered it was revealed to her that this was He. And she went and told it to all in Jerusalem who were waiting for redemption. The twelve Apostles were probably all men who, like John, and Andrew, and Peter, were waiting, some for the king, one at least, Judas, for the setting up of a kingdom in which he might aggrandise himself.

Jesus reveals Himself to John and Andrew; Andrew goes and tells his brother Simon that he had found the promised Messiah; Jesus finds and calls Philip, and Philip hastens to find and tell Nathanael, "We have found Him of whom Moses in the Law and the Prophets did write."

Can we doubt that John, and Andrew, and Peter, Philip and Nathanael, were some of the latest links in that long line of the Lord's remembrancers, whom He had set on the walls of Zion, and who were waiting for Jerusalem to be made a praise in the earth?

Let us take a glance at one of them—Nathanael. Philip findeth Nathanael as Andrew had found his brother Simon. But then they had sought them out. Why? Because they knew they were interested in the subject.

Nathanael was familiar with Moses and the Prophets, and he knew that the central object of the types and shadows of the Law, and of the visions and revelations of the Prophets, was the Messiah, the Anointed Son of God and King of Israel.

He had been meditating under his own fig-tree of the long past days when Solomon, in all his glory, reigned over a united people, and every man sat under his own vine and fig-tree (1 Kings iv. 25). He had mourned over the condition of his people in the days of Hezekiah, which rendered possible the contemptuous message of the King of Assyria: "Make an agreement with me by a present, and come out to me: and eat ye every one of his vine, and every one of his fig-tree. . . until I take you away to a land like your own land" (Isaiah xxxvi. 16, 17).

But he had also rejoiced in the far-off promises of God by Micah, that "in the last days the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains . . . . and He shall judge among many peoples, and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and learn war no more; but shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig-tree, and none make them afraid."

And he had learned from Zechariah that that day, when they should not only sit safely themselves, but should call every man his neighbour under the vine and under the fig-tree, should be brought about by Jehovah's Servant the Branch, when the great adversary should be rebuked and silenced, the iniquity of the land removed in one day by the Lord of Hosts Himself, and Joshua the high priest, the representative of Israel, have his filthy garments replaced by the garments of glory and beauty, with the fair mitre and its golden plate engraven with "Holiness to the Lord."

Then, led by the Spirit to Isaiah lii., Nathanael of Galilee, under his fig-tree, may have stood up and shouted, as in spirit an inhabitant of Zion, "Awake, awake! put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city; for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean."

Such was the man whom Philip sought and told that he had found the long-looked-for Anointed One in Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of Joseph. What a collapse of all Nathanael's high and holy reveries! "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth, that low-lived and vicious town?" Oh, wise Philip! No argument, but "Come and see."

He came, and coming, heard the Man of Nazareth say, "Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom there is no guile!" Had Nathanael under his fig-tree been reading in Zephaniah, "I will also leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the Lord. The remnant of Israel shall not do iniquity, nor speak lies; neither shall a deceitful tongue be found in their mouth: for they shall feed and lie down, and none shall make them afraid?" Was this promise fresh in the heart of Nathanael that day? Had he been seeking grace to be one of this guileless remnant? Surely Jesus spoke to the thought that was in his heart, so that Nathanael felt at once that he was in the presence of one who saw his inmost thought. "Whence knowest thou me?" for I feel that Thou dost know me through and through. "Before that Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig-tree I saw thee"—saw into thy soul—thy mournings over Israel's faded glories, thy hopes of a coming time of peace and power because of righteousness: I saw THEE. And the words of the Anointed sink down into Nathanael's ears, and enter into the depths of his heart, and his inmost soul leaps out to welcome and "receive Him" (ver. 12).—"Rabbi, Thou art the Son of God, Thou art the King of Israel." For immediately after Zephaniah had spoken about the guileless remnant of Israel, he adds, "The King of Israel, even the Lord, is in the midst of thee." This is the only place in all prophecy where the Messiah had been foretold in these exact words. And so Nathanael, collating this with the second Psalm, acknowledges Him as "the Son of God, the King of Israel."

This was all that Nathanael as yet had apprehended—Son of God—King of Israel. He did not remember the promise to Abraham, "In thee shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." But, Nathanael, thou shalt see greater things than these: shalt see in Jacob's vision more than Jacob saw, shalt see the heavens opened, and the angels of God ascending and descending, not on a nameless wanderer, nor on the patriarch of Israel, but on the Son of Man, whose relationship is to the entire race; the propitiation not for Israel only, but for the whole world.

When the Jewish priests and Gentile rulers are gathered together against the Lord and against his Anointed, thou and the guileless remnant of Israel, above the cross on which the Son of Man shall have been lifted up, and through the darkness of that sudden night at noon, shall by faith see the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man. Through all the coming years ye shall see them ministering to Him in the persons of those who are about to inherit salvation. And when He comes again in the glory of the Father, ye shall see with open vision all the holy angels with Him, ascending and descending upon Him, to do his bidding in heaven and on earth.

Simeon and Anna, and they that were looking for the redemption of Jerusalem, John and Andrew, Simon and Nathanael, and their followers, had set their hope upon Him; therefore they knew Him as soon as they saw Him, and received Him, and with Him power to become children of God. Had they been occupied with systematising the prophecies concerning Israel, would they have been as well prepared to receive and welcome Him?

Oh, brethren, when we think of the more sure word of prophecy in such a light as this, how small, how contemptible appear all our carvings of it to fit our notions of what its fulfilment may or ought to be.

Think a moment of that glorious prophecy which is the crown and glory of all Scripture, that transparent veil whereon are embroidered cherubim and palm trees and open flowers. How we have dishonoured it! How we have made others to shun it, lest every lovely leaf should only be the covering of a thorn!

Shall we not give up our controversies, our childish wrangles in which we make most ado about the things that are least important? Shall we not at least begin to mark out that on which we are agreed, and strengthen one another's hands in God by feasting together on these fat things full of marrow before we begin to crack our dry nuts for dessert?

Only let us be guileless, docile, and teachable souls like Nathanael, and we have the Master's word that we shall see the heavens opened, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man. M.

WORKERS FOR JESUS WANTED.—6.

By Rev. E. BALLEY.

REMEMBER THE REWARD.

"He that winneth souls is wise." "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever." "Let him know that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his ways, shall save a soul from death, and hide a multitude of sins." Jesus is the best and most glorious Master. His is the best and most honourable work; and He gives the best and most satisfactory wages. He gives a reward now, in a happy and blessed state of Christian experience, and has promised a crown of life hereafter.

We sometimes hear of Christian people complaining, "How hard my heart is; how chill and cold my affections are; how dead and powerless I feel." But who ever heard such complaints as these from one whose heart was all aglow with the love of Christ, and burning with an intense desire for the salvation of men? The best way to silence the voice that is ever complaining, "My leanness! my leanness!" to warm the cold heart, to revive the drooping spirit, and to make the soul fat and flourishing in the ways of the Lord, is to set to work, and do something for Jesus. This will give a tongue to speak, a voice to sing, an arm to work, a shoulder to bear burdens, feet to travel, and a mind skilful to manage difficult undertakings.

It is an honour to be employed in the work of the Lord; to be a means of saving souls from death, and hiding a multitude of sins. To do this would be worth a lifetime of labour and toil. A life spent for the spiritual good of men is far more valuable than one spent in seeking to be rich and wise in secular knowledge. The labour of one will cease, but the result of the other will sparkle for ever as a gem in the Saviour's crown. Oh, how great, glorious, and honourable will be the reward that will be given to the man who is the means of leading one soul to Christ, to heaven, and to everlasting life.

If you heartily work with Christ and for Him, He will take you up into His chariot of truth, in which He is passing through the world, which is made of grace, lined with love, covered with mercy, whose wheels are earnest endeavour, and which is drawn by the winged steeds of burning and glowing zeal for the honour and glory of God. With Him you will ride through the storms of life, having all afflictions and foes beneath your feet. As you approach your happy and peaceful home, and your work is done, the pearly gates of the Holy City will fly open, and you will enter amidst the shouts of angels and the welcome of Jesus, who will say, "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful in a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Before the gates close you will look back upon the scene of your past life, and bid a last adieu to all you are leaving behind. "Farewell sins, sorrows, temptations, doubts, and fears; farewell flattering and deceitful world; farewell all my foes, ye can trouble me no more; farewell Christian friends. till we meet before the throne in our Father's home." When the gates shall close, the music of your song will fall fainter and fainter on the ears of those you leave behind, till it dies away in the distance, and many are led to say, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." "God is not unrighteous to forget your work of faith and labour of love. Let us not be weary in well-doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

If you fail to work for Jesus, remember the curse pronounced against idlers of old, "Curse ye Meroz, said the angel of the Lord; curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof, because they came not to the help of the Lord against the mighty." In the last day will there not be a curse against those who have done nothing for Jesus? When life is past, the day of account is come, and nothing has been done for the saving of men, will not Jesus say, "I gave my life a ransom for you, I pardoned all your sins and saved you, I called you to work in my vineyard, but what have you done for Me? Have you brought one beam for my house? Have you placed one living stone in my church? Is there one orphan or fatherless child whom you have comforted? Is there a widow whose heart you have made sing for joy? Is there a home into which you have brought peace and hope? Is there a poor outcast wanderer whom you have reclaimed? Is there one soul in all the glorious company before the throne in heaven, who will bless you for ever as the means of his salvation? You have had the poor, the hungry, the naked, and the destitute with you, and you might have fed, clothed, and helped them. You have had the sorrowing and distressed with you, you might have comforted them. But you have left these things undone." How will you meet these charges? Will you not remain silent with shame while Jesus will say, "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to Me."

Do not be idle. To be idle is to bring the curse of God upon you. To be idle is to be cruel to the souls of men, as cruel as it would be to leave a wounded man to perish by the wayside when he might be saved. To be idle is to neglect to glorify God, "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." To be idle is to be unlike Christ, who said, "I must work the work of Him that sent me while it is day; the night cometh when no man can work." Listen to the solemn admonition which says, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might, for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, whither thou goest."

Dear reader! if you are a child of God, can you look round and see the multitudes in the road that leadeth to destruction and put forth no hand to arrest them, never utter a word of affectionate remonstrance or entreaty? Have you no bowels of compassion, no heart to pity the perishing? You may wonder when told that Nero was fiddling while Rome was burning; but your inconsistency is far more sinful, because it is of more serious consequence. Humble yourself before the Lord with your face in the dust. Cry to Him that your sins of omission may be pardoned. Let the past suffice. Turn aside all hindrances; go forth in the name of the Lord. Like Paul on Mars' Hill, rebuke the wickedness of men; and by prayer seek to bring down the blessing of God upon those who are dead in trespasses and sins. Every day look to the Lord for guidance and help; do something for Him; something for the benefit of your fellow-men, and never lose an opportunity when you might do some good; so shall you escape in the last day the condemnation of those who do nothing for Jesus.

NOTES ON SCRIPTURE.—19.

THE MAN-CHILD.

QUESTIONS.

SIR,—I feel very great difficulty in accepting the interpretation of Rev. xii. given at page 6 of your issue of the 30th ult., that the "Man-child" represents our Lord, for the following reasons:—

(1) The scope of the book appears (i. 19) to be limited in time, to things present (when the Apostle wrote), and future, and not past.

(2) The scene of the birth, and of the rapture of the child, is "heaven," not earth.

(3) If the child be our Lord, how avoid the natural sequence that "the woman" is the Blessed Virgin?

(4) If Satan, on, or immediately after, the Lord's Ascension was debarred from appearing with the "sons of God" in heaven, and consequently has come down to earth, "having great wrath," and (as the "woe" of ver. 12 clearly intimates) equally great power to harm God's creatures here, and especially the saints, how is it that his ability to afflict men seems now to be less than when Christ was on earth?

(5) Are we to believe that Satan knew the time of the Second Advent at, or shortly after, our Lord's Ascension, and so calculated that he had "but a short time," if the more than 1800 years that have since elapsed can be so termed by any created being?

(6) I should be glad if the brother who wrote the article would kindly explain his view of the vision. C. S. King.

REPLIES.

(1) In Rev. i. 1, things are to be revealed which must shortly come to pass, in consequence of what has already taken place—the incarnation, death, resurrection, and ascension of Jesus, and the consequent expulsion of the accuser. In chapter xii. the Revealer, in foreshowing the overthrow of Satan, shows retrospectively his enmity against Jesus, out of which grew his enmity to his people—as Haman's enmity to Mordecai produced his enmity to his people. Had the persecution of the woman and her seed by the serpent been told without showing the previous enmity to Jesus out of which it grew, a very important element would have been wanting. Prophecy does not merely foretel events, but shows the causes which produced them and the principles which underlie them.

(2) According to the flesh, Jesus was born of the Jewish nation, and they say, "Unto us a child is born." He was also the outcome of the Church of God, not merely the Jewish but the patriarchal and primeval Church, the Church of all time, which is symbolised by the woman, and whose place is heaven and not earth. "They that dwell upon the earth" throughout the book, are the men of the world, who have their portion in this life.

(3) The woman, as shown above, is evidently and necessarily symbolic, and not the individual mother of Jesus.

(4) I do not think Satan's ability to afflict man is less now than when Christ was on earth. The history of this dispensation shows his awful wrath and malignity; witness the savagery of Pagan Rome, and the demonic cruelties of the Inquisition. We are living in a time of quiet, but we know not how soon the rage of Satan may burst forth again in violence; meanwhile our comfortable classes know nothing of the agonies of poverty in civilised countries, especially our own, and religious people are ignorant of the devilish infamies perpetrated all around them.

(5) The measure of the time is not according to man's estimate, but Satan's; "He knoweth that he hath but a short time." His creation may have been ages before that of Adam. To him 2000 years would be a short time. A man of fifty who knew that he must die at seventy would know his time was short. It is 1800 years since Jesus said, "I come quickly," and since the Apostle said, "Yet a little while and He that shall come will come." In comparison with eternity all time is short.

THRIFT IN FOOD.

AN ADDRESS

By Mrs. C. H. L. WALLACE.

NATURE'S object for the first twenty-five years of a man's life is to construct an edifice that should last in health and activity for at least a century. To do this, she requires bricks that she can appropriate for life purposes. There must be nothing rotten in them. There must be no shoddy. There must be nothing tainted, and there must be nothing infectious. One of any of such bricks means ruin, decay, or early death. Food, to be properly understood, must be viewed as the bricks and mortar of the human structure. As the house-builders of the age are erecting tumble-down buildings from a false economy, so are we, as a nation, building tumble-down organisms, through our ignorance and prejudices concerning the philosophy of food. The result is that our hospitals and infirmaries are crowded to overflowing, and instead of going back to Nature for new bricks of the right sort, we fly to the doctors, who gives us stuffs that are not foods and can never be appropriated for sustaining vitality or building-up purposes.

Fortunately for our consideration of thrift in food, it is a fact that we can build up our organisms most healthfully and lastingly upon those foods which are the cheapest in the market. The most despised foods (despised often on account of their money cheapness) are the very and only foods which nature asks as materials for building up and supporting the human organism. That physical element known as force, required by man to enable him to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, is only to be obtained in a lasting and enduring manner by keeping the organism well nourished. During the growth of the organism, a great deal of this force is undoubtedly appropriated for building-up purposes, hence it is that young people require more food and more sleep than those somewhat older. Still, their food and the food of the adult must contain a due proportion of those constituents known as bone-formers, heat-producers, and flesh-formers. The young and growing require these for building-up the adult, for repairing waste tissue, and supplying force. Now if these are the three principal elements which comprise man's organism, it is most essential to know from what sources it is best to derive them.

The osseous tissue, or bones, of the animal kingdom are built up from the mineral and saline elements derived from the vegetable kingdom. The vegetables themselves derive these direct from the earth, and prepare them, as in a chemical laboratory, in a form easily appropriated by man for life purposes. This is the only way that Nature has provided for man to enable him to take minerals into his organism with benefit. All attempts to take them in a direct form are the result of fallacious theories. Now we find that the largest amount of mineral or bone-forming matter is contained in that very portion of wheat which the nation in its improvidence and unthriftiness casts away as waste—I mean the bran. Bread, which is called the staff of life, when made of white flour is but a rotten reed. It is a delusion; it is undermining the physical force and longevity of the nation, and is the basis of a large number of diseases. The mineral matter contained in flesh and fish are not appropriable by any but the purely carnivorous animal, to which category man does not belong.

The flesh-forming materials can be most economically obtained from what is known as pulse, which consists of lentils, haricot beans, and pease. Lentils contain 24 per cent. of flesh-forming element, haricots 23, and pease over 22 per cent., while it is well known (independent of chemical demonstration) that those who try to live upon flesh alone, instead of gaining weight and making flesh, rapidly lose it. Thus it is that those who subsist entirely upon grains, pulse, vegetables, animal products, fruits, and nuts, regain lost health, sustain strength, and in time enjoy a condition of physical regeneration. With regard to pecuniary considerations, of course the non-flesh-eaters can live far less expensively than those who patronise the roast beef of old England.

Those who wish to understand true thrift in food must study the literature of the vegetarian. Meanwhile, they might pay a visit to one of our numerous vegetarian restaurants in London. One gentleman, Mr. Reid, of Jewin-street, E.C., is able to say that he has at his restaurant, known as "The Garden," already supplied over one million vegetarian dinners. In High Holborn, close to Great Turnstile, is a new restaurant, known as the "Porridge Bowl," where the manager undertakes to provide a substantial dinner of three courses, with bread, for the small sum of sixpence.

True thrift in food means to provide ourselves with the greatest amount of nutriment with the least possible quantity of labour to organism, and at the smallest monetary cost, not forgetting to endeavour to choose such things as require but little trouble and expense in their preparation. True thrift in food would enormously decrease both illness and poverty, and this blessing may extend over the whole nation. I will quote one appropriate sentence from "Sir Richard Phillips' Million of Facts," which clearly demonstrates this.

"There are twenty-nine millions of cultivated or capable acres in England and Wales, five and a-half in Scotland, and thirteen in Ireland—in all forty-seven millions five hundred thousand. Every acre will support a family on vegetable diet; but in flesh and vegetables three acres are required to live in plenty. The United Kingdom might therefore support 250 millions of inhabitants on vegetables, or 80 millions on fish and vegetables, without resorting to the 30 million acres of uncultivated soil."

In a little tract entitled, "Is the Land Overpeopled?" Professor Newman, remarking upon this statement, says that it is "certain that under wiser dietary and improved land tenure, we could as easily feed 60 millions in the three kingdoms from the soil itself as we now feed 30 millions by the aid of excessive importation," while Mr. W. R. Greig affirms that "the amount of human life sustained on a given area may be almost indefinitely increased by the substitution of vegetable for animal food."

MR. MOODY'S BOYS.

DEAR SIR,—Your readers will, I know, like to hear something of Mr. Moody's home and institutions here. It was too late to see anything the night I arrived, but Mr. Moody came into my room just before sunrise the next morning, threw the blinds open, and showed me in a moment the beauties of Northfield in their autumn dress. All round it are hills, wooded to the very tops, the foliage varying through the different tints of scarlet, green, orange, crimson and gold. Just below the house flows the Connecticut river, and meadows and orchards, laden with fruit, are on every hand, for the soil at Northfield is some of the most fertile in Massachusetts.

Mr. Moody's house, though rich in home comforts, is quiet and unpretending, but as I sit at my bedroom window, I see on all hands large and handsome buildings which have sprung up during the last five years. A lecture hall is nearly opposite, two large mansions and two more buildings (owning 250 acres of land) are on my left. Mr. Moody's own house is often pressed into the service also. Here are being trained for Christian work about 150 young ladies, many of them without means. I should like to write of their bright, happy faces, their careful and excellent education, and the tone of cheerful piety which pervades the institutions, but my subject is the work done at another and more distant group of buildings. Shortly after the early breakfast, Mr. Moody drove me over to see the boys' school, situated across the river on "Mount Hermon."

His feeling is that every Christian man should have his own work in the vineyard clearly defined, and that he should during his lifetime make all possible provision for the gap that will be caused by his own death to be well filled up. To this end he is planting a colony for training promising lads into capable evangelists. Five homes have already sprung up, besides a lecture hall and a house devoted to culinary purposes; and another large educational hall is half finished. One of these houses has been built with funds given by two English gentlemen; another by an American lady; others by the trustees of funds devoted to Christian work. Several American gentleman have also helped largely.

We drove to the lecture hall, and found a company of lads and young men there, whose ages varied from 10 to 24. Every face grew brighter as Mr. and Mrs. Moody appeared, and one of the pleasantest things was to see them; and afterwards, as we went about the houses, how the lads would linger about with some excuse to exchange a smile, a word, and a laugh, with their friend. The freedom and joyfulness with which nearly every face turned to him was delightful.

Mr. Moody took the Scripture lesson. He asked questions on the characteristics of each of the first eight chapters of St. John's Gospel. "The first thing is for a Christian to know how to lead a soul to Christ. So give me your favourite Gospel text out of each chapter. What incidents does it contain? What is its principal lesson?" The answers were promptly and excellently given. After this I went to a black board, and said, "Let the first boy who knows what I am drawing speak." I began by drawing a single curved line, when a number of voices at once called out, "The Holy Land." I found it almost impossible to puzzle them with city, river, or mountain.

"Let the English boys stand up," said Mr. Moody; and quite a large number of smiling boys stood up, rescued from our crowded slums in London, Manchester, and Liverpool. I saw also North American Indian, Greek, Irish, Scotch, Armenian, and Russian boys.

"These boys are happy all the year round," said Mr. Moody, "skating and snowballing are coming on now, then comes the pleasure of maple sugar, then come baseball, football and cricket. They have just got a splendid new cricket set from Mr. E. K. Studd."

"Do these boys pay anything?"

"Very few of them. Most are orphans, and those who have father or mother living are sometimes worse off than those who have none."

"And how do you get these lads?"

"In all sorts of ways. They are all more or less picked boys, who seem to have some special gift that will turn to God's service. You can polish a diamond, but you cannot make one. It has to be found. If a boy proves himself bad and idle, he has to leave Mount Hermon. We have been obliged to send away two or three."

"Do you take only converted boys?"

"Oh, dear, no. Some of them come as Unitarians and some as Roman Catholics. But it is not generally long before a boy gets converted in this home. Professor Sawyer is the head of it, and under him are the teachers—nearly all ladies. For they cost less money and have more influence and patience with the lads than men would have."

"How do you teach them to preach?"

"Religious instruction is given in the first place, and they have a professor for elocution. Some of the elder ones are already at work in the villages around."

"Do they do lessons all day?"

"No; only in the morning. In the afternoon they do farming, and play. I am glad to have my own boy brought up here with the rest. It is the kind of education I believe in. We have some very choice boys indeed here."

"How well they sang!"

"Yes; we make a great point of that."

"Where do you need help most?"

"I want to pick out promising boys wherever I can--strong, intelligent, well-behaved lads of about fifteen years old. Try and get me some more from England. Here they are kept away from town temptations, and have every chance. I will take boys without means, or boys whose parents and friends will pay for them. Each boy costs about thirty pounds a year. I want to find Christian people, too, who will undertake to support special lads; and I want funds to enlarge and extend the work. My heart is in it, and God's blessing is upon it."

I could write much more about the Mount Hermon School, but I must not take up more space.

I feel sure that you will be glad to receive contributions from your readers for so blessed a work—dearer than almost any other work to the man to whom we all owe, under God, so great a debt.

I am, dear Sir, truly yours,

EDWARD CLIFFORD.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION IN NAPLES.—The work of the Mackean-Bentinck Evangelical High School for ladies, Naples, is very warmly commended by many friends who are acquainted with it. It is conducted by Mdlles. Beck, one of whom is now in this country soliciting help for the completion of a new school building. When that has been freed from encumbrance the institution will be self-supporting. Any friends of Christian education in Italy who are disposed to help in this matter may send their contributions to Mr. Donald Matheson, 120, Queen's-gate, S.W.

AMONG THE ROMAN POOR.

THE Seventh Report of Christian Work among the Poor at Rome, by Mrs. J. Wall, has reached us. Steady increase in the regular work of the Mission has marked the past year, and much gracious blessing has attended the sowing of the good seed. The Report is mainly made up of facts and incidents gathered from personal visitation, and from the Medical Mission. A new hall has been opened in Trastevere, in every way adapted for the purpose. "The aged and infirm are most regular in their attendance; those who are able to work come when not employed, but a regular and continual stream of attendants is provided in the persons of those who come to Rome hoping to find work, and who, having no settled home, find their way into our meetings. These are welcomed. We teach them portions of God's truth, and Gospel hymns at every service, and our hearts are often cheered by finding how they are remembered."

The Medical Mission department has done great service. Mrs. Wall says: "The number of attendances for aid and relief numbered last year 3000, of which number 1000 are new patients; and this may be taken to represent influence over 10,000 of the poorest and most needy in that part of Rome. Our avowed object is to give advice and medicine to the poor, gratis, at our dispensary; to visit sick cases at their homes, and provide what they need; to provide a home and attendance for the sick when needed; and to instruct all who will accept our services to look to Jesus as the Great Physician. A second Dispensary has been opened in another part of Rome by Mr. Wall, where Gospel preaching is also carried on."

One or two cases of blessing taken from the Report will be interesting to our readers: "A poor contadino was brought nearly to the grave through fever. He had formerly attended our Gospel services. He refused the ministrations of the priest, and exclaimed, 'My God, I have heard thy Gospel; therefore if the Protestant religion be false, here I am, forgive me; but if it be true, give me grace to heal me.' After four days he was cured. He firmly believed that the Lord healed him, and he set out at once for Rome in order to testify to the goodness of God."

"M. C. and her husband gave up going to the Romish Church, and came to our meetings. During the husband's last illness the priest got admission to his room and pressed him to confess, but in vain; he was firm, having put his whole trust in the Saviour. One thing he said was, 'I have taken the crown from the head of Madonna, and put it on the head of Christ.' His wife was so impressed with the peace and joy which he manifested in prospect of death, that she also resolved to become a follower of Jesus."

"L., an old man of eighty, came to our dispensary for medicine, then to our meetings, where he heard of Christ. His heart was touched with the story of Divine love, he believed in Jesus, was baptized in his Name, became a member of our church, and is walking in the light of God."

In this way, continues the Report, God is graciously working in the hearts of these poor people, many of whom have trusted in Jesus in their last moments. The Mission also includes a shop, where the work done at the Mothers' Meeting is sold. Many are thus helped toward an honest living, while waiting for a situation. Mrs. Wall will be thankful for any materials for the shop, including calico, print, flannel, dress material, and haberdashery. Parcels may be sent to the Baptist Mission House, 19, Castle-street, Holborn, from whence they will be forwarded to Rome. In another part of the city the poor are entreating that a third Mission hall may be opened, which will be done, says Mrs. Wall, when the means are provided.

Mrs. Wall's address in Rome is 35, Piazza in Lucina.

SO TIRED!

SO tired, so tired of the world,
Sick of its babel and noise;
Its mirth dies in madness,
Its songs end in sadness,
And false are its friendships and joys.

So tired, so weary of sin,
Galled by its bondage and chain;
With conscience tormenting,
For ever repenting,
Yet sinning again and again.

So tired, so tired of myself,
Longing for rest and release;
Lord Jesus, receive me!
I truly believe Thee,
That Thou canst give pardon and peace.

So tired—so tired of this strife,
Struggling 'twixt doubt and belief;
Too near for endurance,
Too far for assurance,—
Come nearer, Lord, give me relief!

. . . . . .

Christ is close to thee, weary one,
Dearly He bought thee,
Long hath He sought thee,—
Decide, ere the day is done!

EVANGELA.

PIONEERING IN DAKOTA.

WRITING from Glendive, Montana, U.S.A., on October 25, Mr. J. M. Pamment, late of the Open-air Mission, says:—The American Home Missionary Society, in connection with which I now labour, has been in operation for fifty-eight years, doing good work all over the continent in establishing churches and supporting the pastors partially or entirely. The year just closing has been the most notable year in the history of the Society. During that period 192 men have been sent into different States, in addition to those already in commission, making a total of 1342. These 192 men report, as a result of their first year's work, 123 new churches established, more than that number of Sunday-schools organised, besides many out-stations and congregations supplied for the first time with the stated preaching of the Gospel.

In the North-west the need for such an organisation will be seen from the following facts:—

The wonderful migration into Northern and Southern Dakota in the spring and summer of 1883 will never be forgotten. From 3000 to 6000 people arrived every day for successive weeks. There were ten long freight trains every twenty-four hours crowded with household goods. Three million acres of land were occupied in one season. Towns sprung up like magic. One hundred and eighty new post-offices were opened in a single year. This was again repeated in the present year.

This hurrying tide of humanity has been followed as far as men and means would allow, but a larger supply of both is required to keep pace with the ever-increasing need, to supply these people with the means of grace.

Glendive, where I am stationed, is a small city of 1000 inhabitants, surrounded by hills, with the Yellowstone river flowing past it. There are only Methodists and Independents here, and I anticipate cordial sympathy with the young minister just lately arrived to take charge of the Methodist church. May I ask for an interest in the prayers of your readers? A line from those to whom I am personally known, or any Christian literature, would be welcome here.

TORQUAY Y.M.C.A.—At the recent Annual Social Meeting in connection with this Association, Mr. Thomas Henry, secretary, reported a membership of 255; about 9000 persons had attended the Sunday evening evangelistic services. Warm words of counsel and encouragement were spoken to the assembled friends by Mr. T. Viccars, chairman, and several ministers.

SNUFFERS.

A SERMON FOR THE CHILDREN.

(1 Kings vii. 50.)

YOU smile at such a text, and no wonder! But snuffers were very useful in the Temple; they kept the lights trim and bright. Therefore they are spoken about again and again in the Bible. We don't see snuffers very often now in the city, where we burn gas. But every boy or girl has seen them in the country, at all events, where candles are used. They look like a pair of scissors carrying a box on one leg and a lid on the other. The lid "snaps" the wick, and shuts it into the box and extinguishes it—just as charitable people keep unpleasant things to themselves, and so quietly put an end to their offensive odour.

Now you see what snuffers are for; they are for making a dull light shine brighter. When the candle has been burning for some time it seems to get dull and drowsy; then "snap" go the snuffers, and the light gets bright! There are snuffers which do that for boys and girls, and men and women, too, for that matter. There was that sum you worked out on your slate. It was all wrong. What did the master do? Rub it all out! That was the "snap" of the snuffers; it made you brighter; you took more care over your sums next time. It was the same when you were "taken down" in the class over that half-learnt lesson. That humbling was the "snap" of the snuffers; it made you master your lessons better next time.

You see these men lopping the trees? Why do they do that? To make them bear more fruit; the trees are the better for the sharp snuffers—and so are you. Never be discouraged. When anything happens you don't like, think of the snuffers, and let your light shine out all the better. When mother chides you, don't think she wants to find fault. It isn't that, but she sees your light needs the snuffers; and so she is using them kindly, gently, to make you a brighter, better boy or girl.

Sometimes you are the snuffers. That's funny, but it's true! There's your little brother, for instance; he is not half so wise as you, and sometimes he makes mistakes. Put him right; but take care how you use the snuffers. If you use them carelessly, you may put out the light altogether. What I mean is this—you may so discourage him that he won't have any heart to try to do better. Therefore use the snuffers gently. Don't call him "stupid" or ridicule him. Trim the light kindly and neatly—don't be rough and put it out.

Remember, God wants your light to shine that others may get blessing by it, so you must expect Him now and again to trim it. Look at that candle: it has been burning for hours. What a long, burnt wick it has got hanging over. It doesn't give any light—and—pah!—what an offensive smoke comes from it. But it is quite content. It says, "Why should I part with any of my wick? It's mine, and I mean to stick to it, whether I give light to others or not."

That's the selfish candle, and the selfish boy or girl is just like it. Come, quick, the snuffers! We must teach that candle that it was not made to please itself, but to give light to others. And that is what God does with every one He loves. By one way or other He tries to trim their light that it may shine the brighter. Think of this when any trouble comes; God wants to make use of it to make you braver, better, purer, more faithful and more loving; so, whenever you fail, don't be discouraged; just take it like the "snap" of the snuffers, and resolve to do better next time.—J. R. Howatt.

HOW NICE THAT WILL BE.

"Please, ma'am, there is a poor woman at the door, who wants to see you," said a servant, entering the sitting-room one evening. The lady addressed rose up at once, and went out into the hall, where she saw one of her poorer sisters in Christ, whom from time to time she had assisted in various ways.

"Well, Mrs. Harper, I hope nothing is the matter?"

Mrs. Harper was a bright Christian who usually was full of joy and praise, but this evening she looked very sad, and presently the tears began to flow, and at first she could hardly speak. At last the trouble came out, and, indeed, it was a relief to her to talk it over with someone.

"I have lost my little Jack, ma'am," she said, weeping; "he was only taken ill with croup on Monday, and died last Wednesday; and though I know it is well with him, and that he is far better off now than in my poor home, I cannot help grieving for him and missing him so much."

Then she sat down, and told the lady all about her little Jack, how he died, though not without many tears, for her heart was as yet very sore over her loss. He was only eight years old, and such a good, bright little fellow, she said. His brother, who was rather older than he, looked up to him in all things, and the two were very good friends. Jack used to be ever on the alert to help someone, and though such a little boy, would often get up early in the morning, without being told, before anyone else was down, and light the fire and set the breakfast. Then he would say, "Can't I do something else to help you, mother?" and never seemed so happy as when he thought he was saving her trouble. Think of that, you little boys, who grumble at posting a letter, and who don't like running upstairs to fetch father's slippers or mother's work-basket!

But Jack took cold, and became very ill. Croup, that terrible enemy of childhood, seized him, and he struggled in vain for life. "Mother," he said, on the Tuesday after he was taken ill, "I think I shall die to-morrow, God has called me, just as he called little Samuel." His mother asked him if he was afraid to die, but he said, "Oh, no." Then she told him how he would be for ever with the Lord Jesus.

"Ah, yes," said the little fellow, "and how nice that will be!"

He died the next day, and how glad his father and mother were, to think that their little Jack had not feared to die, but was safe with Jesus. I wonder how many of those who read these words could say, if they thought they were going to die to-morrow—"How nice that will be!"

REV. J. AND MRS. MOUNTAIN.

THESE friends have been in Cape Colony upwards of two years, going from place to place evangelising. The work has been difficult and severe, the roads are so rough, and conveyances so uncomfortable. Mr. and Mrs. Mountain have settled down in each place they have visited to earnest Christian and Temperance work. No such thorough evangelistic work has been done here since the remarkable visit of Rev. William (now Bishop) Taylor, of the Methodist Episcopal Church of America. Many of the ministers acknowledge the benefits received to their churches. Great prominence has been given to Temperance work. Mr. Mountain was the first to introduce the Blue Ribbon movement into the Colony. What is specially admired in these evangelists is that they go to many of the small places, which others pass by. Hundreds will bless the day they met these servants of God.

They have just finished a series of successful meetings in King William's Town and East London; they are now in Natal, from which they go to New Zealand. The work in this Colony has told considerably on their health; several times Mr. Mountain has been prostrated, and Mrs. Mountain has also suffered much. Your paper is a very welcome visitor in these parts.

Yours faithfully, R. Workhouse.

THE AUSTRALIAN BIBLE-CARRIAGE.

By JOHN HAMBLETON.

GEELONG.

AFTER waiting patiently for the arrival of the sailing ships from England bringing out the books and Bible-carriage, yet occupying the time in Gospel meetings, we are now in full harness to commence the work which for many years has pressed upon my heart. Geelong is some 45 miles from Melbourne, a quiet town compared with the busy capital of Victoria, yet a far more beautiful place; when the bar is removed, should the world go on a little longer, it will be the finest harbour for shipping in all Victoria. It was at this town, in the year 1847, that the writer, as an unconverted young man, planted the first theatre, being then in the service of Satan; and yet, strange to think about, when the young men of his company who had imbibed the infidel principles of Tom Paine, mocked and blasphemed the Scriptures, he at that time in ignorance and sin fought for the Book which in childhood he had read at his mother's knee. It was then the Lord first spoke to him (in a night vision) in December 1847. Now, in August 1884, the first Bible-carriage from which the Gospel shall be preached through the land, is opened in Geelong.

At the opening of the "World's Fair," in Hyde Park, London, May 1, 1851, amongst the millioned multitudes of humanity congregated together to the opening of that great exhibition, were representatives of all nations, then under the strong delusion of the time having arrived when peace—peace and safety, should be inaugurated, and war amongst nations should cease. One poor sinner, unknown by all, and knowing none, stood groaning and trembling in soul for that peace which this world cannot give. He was under deep conviction of sin, having been only six weeks before in theatres and gambling-hells of California. Yet he had in his pocket the manuscript of an essay which he had written purporting to show the people of England how the Chinese nation might be evangelised from Australia. Before conversion, he had seen and spoken to many who had found their way to the diggings at California, and the labour markets of Australia were beginning, previous to the gold discovery there, to speak of advocating a Chinese labour emigration to Australia. The thoughts penned in that manuscript were to this effect: Let depôts for boys be established in the great seaports of England and Scotland, bring all the Arabs of the streets and pauper boys from the workhouses into these emigration depôts, send out batches with a sufficient number of mechanics to teach them trades, and catechists to teach them the Scriptures. Begin a school first at Geelong (where he had a small theatre built). Give them some acres of land. In a few years the produce sent back to England would first empty the workhouses of the old country; second, return all expenses of emigration; third, give the boys a home for the future, and, fourth, teach them the Word of God, so that the Chinese, coming in contact with them, would in time themselves receive by the Spirit the Word of Life and become missionaries to their own land and nation.

BALLARAT.

We waited at Melbourne for a whole month to know from the Lord if it were the place to begin work. But the Melbourne door was shut. The Lord directed us first to preach the Gospel at Geelong, brother Brewster and his wife being received by brother Manders, an evangelist from Dublin, who has settled down here, and who has laboured with us also in the Gospel while waiting for the arrival of the ships. When the books arrived, we were directed to Ballarat, a city of magnificence, which has sprung into existence since the gold discovery, 1851. There the Lord found a cottage for myself and wife, with a garden full of splendid fruit trees and vegetables, and containing rooms for the furniture, and a large room for the boxes of books, at 10s. per week. We took it for six months, seeing clearly that this city is the great centre of a large mining population, with townships on to Sandhurst. Here Christian brethren received us gladly, and gave us a large Mechanics' hall, in which we have had already large meetings, and some souls for Christ.

There is also, ten minutes' walk from my house, a Chinese camp, for there are great numbers of Chinese scattered in all the mining towns. I was yesterday in conversation with two young Chinamen I met on the road. One of them could speak pretty well in English, and read a portion of the New Testament when shown to him. He knew Jesus as his Saviour, and had been baptized recently by a missionary who has been labouring amongst the Chinese located here; the other, an intelligent little fellow, could read a text card in the Chinese characters, but could not read English. I told the other one to tell him how he was converted, and we separated in the road with a hearty shake of the hand, and I wished them God-speed.

On Friday next I go on to Geelong, about sixty miles from Ballarat, where the two brethren, Manders and Brewster, have put the Bible-carriage together, it having been brought by a lighter from the ship Thyatira, up Hobson's Bay to Geelong. We have some Christians coming together for a cup of tea, and to wait on God for his blessing upon the work of our hands, which he has given us to begin. Although on the 4th July last my sixty-fourth year was passed, my spirit is now as willing to begin this new work for Christ as when in Liverpool 1854, with Reginald Radcliffe and others, the Lord gave us a glorious revival, and a soul-saving work which has not ceased ever since.

Frank Brewster, the young man who has come out with me, has been six years at Bible carriage work. When Henry Moorhouse bought the first large carriage, he took it in hand to work it, and the Lord blessed and prospered his labours.

But this Bible-carriage work, on a small scale, the Lord gave me to commence, after the Liverpool revival in 1855. We began it at Manchester, and from that time it was deeply impressed upon my heart that it would be the very work for the Australian Colonies; but the Lord's time had not yet come. He had a thirty three years' work for myself and my two sisters to do in England, witnessing for his truth there.

Then the heathen lands of China, Japan, Burmah, are for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth (Australia, Tasmania, New Zealand, New Caledonia, New Hebrides, New Guinea, and all the new Islands of the Pacific Ocean) for his possession.

THE PURPOSES OF GOD IN MODERN GOLD DISCOVERIES.

When God would lead an earthly people from Egypt to Canaan, He told them of the land flowing with milk and honey, and out of whose hill they might dig brass, &c. So when the time drew near for the winding-up of the present dispensation in Christendom, and making preparation for the millennial reign of Christ, this part of the world, unknown in the centuries of European apostacy during the dark ages, but now discovered, and, in the purposes of Him who knows the end from the beginning, receiving the nucleus of its population from Europe, holds up to the natural heart of man the commodity at the head of Christendom's traffic—GOLD. (Rev. xviii. 12.) This magnet draws thousands of unconverted to the spot, while it fills the coffers of the rich ones, who in the death, mourning, and famine judgments, soon coming upon and already at the doors of Christendom, will see their rusty gold heaps which they have heaped up for the last days (James v. 1, 2, 3) to be a witness against the covetousnes and idolatry of Christendom. Gold, but no bread. Death, mourning, and famine (Rev. xviii. 8) are the three things exchanged for gold in the coming crisis. The executioners will burn her with fire, and will then, joining the last Infidel Anti-Christ, make war with the Lamb; but the Lamb shall overcome them, for He is the King of kings, and Lord of lords.

Already the Bible is prohibited in State schools. God commanded the Israelites to teach their children and children's children the letter of the Word. It was to be as frontlets between their eyes. Rising up, lying down, going out, coming in, on the door-posts the laws of Jehovah were to be seen. But in modern lawlessness, to please popish priests and infidel blasphemers, God's orders have been ignored,—this written Word, which Jehovah has given for the rule and guidance of mankind, and to be the only code of laws under the reign and rule of the Lord Jesus Christ, by which the millennial nations will be governed. But now, philosophy, infidelity, and democracy are becoming so learned and wise in their own conceit, that the Bible is to them a thing of the past; nevertheless we know it to be a thing for the future. And although Popery, as one of the unclean spirits struggling to live and rule, has organised a system to establish, in sending out by almost all steamers their creed-priests, nuns, and Papists, in all the agricultural districts of this New World; more than the mining districts, yet the democratic element out here is too strong for them, and the thorns under the pot of Christendom in Europe must and will crackle in Australia, but the democratic executioners will themselves be judged by the mighty angels in flaming fire, when the Lord Jesus comes to the great battle of Armageddon, which will follow the judgment of the woman, or Christendom, after the Church has been taken (the Marriage of the Lamb, Rev. xix. 17; Matt. xxv. 10), which will be between the judgment of Christendom (Rev. xviii.) and the judgment of the beast and false prophet (Rev. xix. 20).

THE BIBLE CARRIAGE

will preserve the incorruptible seed of the written word. As the Word of God contained in the Book must be preserved, and this new and rising Empire is destined to survive the judgments of Christendom, when England's Bibles will no longer be sent here, the universal conflagation on earth being the burning of the tares in their own bundles,—then it will be found that a famine, not only of bread, will be felt in Europe, but also a famine of the Word, or Bread of Life. So this work of the Bible-carriage is not only to evangelise the Colonies by preaching the Gospel, but to preserve the seed-baskets, which will be found very precious when the writer and present labourers will be in the presence of Him in the glory, by whom they have been called to work and suffer for his name's sake, while spreading the good seed of his coming kingdom and glory.

Yes, dear brother, do not think me either theoretical or fanatical. Political or ecclesiastical creeds of men, philosophy or man's wisdom may invent codes and laws of their own for the government of fallen man, but they only labour in the fires of vanity.

The Scriptures, given by inspiration of God, are the destined laws and rules of Government during the reign of Christ, when God will put his laws in their hearts, and write them in their minds. Then will come the universal happiness of the human family, with the Lord Jesus at the head; for He will have the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession.

BARBICAN MISSION TO THE JEWS.—On Monday evening, the 10th inst., the Annual Social Tea was given by Mr. and Mrs. Warschawski, at Albion Hall, to a large company of Jews, with their wives and children, representing various nationalities. Over a hundred were present, exclusive of believing Israelites and other Christian friends. This was to inaugurate the new Reading-rooms above the Hall, which are now open daily (Sundays excepted) for the benefit of Jews in that locality. The tables are furnished with Bibles, Christian literature, and newspapers in English, Hebrew, and German, also with writing materials. Classes are held twice a week for instruction in English; and a Sewing-class for Jewesses, under the supervision of Christian ladies, assisted by a converted young Jewess. The meeting was presided over by Mr. Rivolta, Blackheath. Dr. McKilliam, Messrs. Jordan, Warschawski, and Ashkenyi, addressed the attentive listeners in English and German respectively.

Notes and Comments.

AFTER the distressing rumours of General Gordon's capture and death, it is very gratifying to have certain news of his safety. Now that he is in communication with the relieving force, we trust the warlike disposition of the Soudanese may be abated, and the removal of the Egyptian garrisons effected in a peaceful way.

Among other things mentioned by Dr. Barnardo at his Welcome Home Meeting at the "Edinburgh Castle," was the statement that he had been compelled to return from Canada much sooner than he would otherwise have done by the repeated tidings which reached him of the low condition of the finances at home. We are sorry also to hear that the funds have not yet improved very much. We have no doubt, however, that Dr. Barnardo's return will serve to remind many friends of the poor children, of the channel into which their benefactions may very suitably flow. All communications should be addressed to Dr. Barnardo, 18, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

We have frequently been asked of late for details as to the movement for providing penny dinners for destitute children. A pamphlet on the subject has reached us, the perusal of which we would earnestly commend to all who take a practical interest in this question. It contains much reliable information, as to what has been done and can be done in the preparation of nutritious and satisfying meals for children at a penny per head. Rev. W. Moore Ede, The Rectory, Gateshead, whose letter to a Newcastle paper is given in the pamphlet, says:—

"During the week 479 dinners were provided at a cost of 396½ pence, thus leaving a balance of 6s. 10½d. as profit. The profit is quite sufficient to pay for the cost of fuel and for the labour of cooking, for some of the girls in the school assist in the preparation of the dinner and in the washing up afterwards, and thus get a good practical lesson in domestic economy. This financial result has not been obtained by placing the children on short allowance. They have had each day as much as they could eat; for, like Oliver Twist, they have been allowed to ask for more as often as they pleased."

The pamphlet may be procured from Messrs. Joseph Causton and Sons, 47, Eastcheap, E.C., price 9d. per dozen, no smaller quantity sold. Another very interesting and valuable pamphlet, "Cheap Food and Cheap Cooking," written by Mr. Moore Ede, is published by Mr. Walter Scott, 14, Paternoster-square, price 1d., or 6s. per 100.

Among the most cheering features of the Christian work of to-day is the number of volunteers offering themselves for missionary enterprise in various parts of the world. A five day's mission, relative to work in foreign lands, has just been held in Cambridge, in which twelve University men, who are about to go forth in connection with the Church Missionary Society, and several others who are soon to embark for China, in connection with the Inland Mission, took part. Among these we may mention the names of Messrs. M. Beauchamp, Stanley P. Smith, C. T. Studd, C. F. H. Battersby, E. S. Carr, and E. F. E. Wigram; some of these were greatly stirred up through the recent labours of Mr. Moody. The meetings held were for members of the University only, and must have tended greatly to awaken a fervent missionary spirit in the hearts of many undergraduates who attended.

Referring to the late Mr. W. E. Dodge, the Rev. Newman Hall quotes the following lines as having formed the favourite motto of that eminent philanthropist. They may serve to guide others to firmer and simpler faith in God as the daily Guide and Helper of his people:—

"Build a full, firm fence of faith all about to-day;
Fill it in with useful works, and within it stay.
Look not through the sheltering bars, anxious for to-morrow,
God will help whatever comes, be it joy or sorrow."

We regret to learn that the church of St. Crispin, which has just been built at Northampton, mainly by the operatives of that town, is to be the centre of Ritualistic teaching and practices quite opposed to the Gospel of Christ. Books are circulated by the vicar and his curates advocating prayers for the dead, auricular confession, and the Real Presence. Such teaching can only further the cause of scepticism instead of lifting up a standard against it.

We are glad to know that the movement initiated in the same town by the Rev. H. Bradford, and commended at the time in our columns, is prospering. Independent testimony reaches us to the value of the work being done in connection with it. Mr. Bradford and his friends have already received in answer to the appeal made upwards of £900 towards building a new Gospel Hall on unsectarian principles, where all are welcome, and where the Word of Christ will be faithfully proclaimed. Those who desire to support the cause of Christianity versus infidelity in Northampton cannot do better therefore than help this deserving effort.

The current number of The Jewish Herald contains a letter from the Rev. A. Sternberg, one of the agents of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, in which he details the results of his missionary tour through Jewish centres in Russia. He testifies to the remarkable thirst for the Word of Life which exists among the more than four hundred thousand despised children of Abraham who people the districts through which he has passed. The fields are white unto the harvest, if only the means are forthcoming for scattering broadcast the seed of the Word. A large and unlimited circulation of the Old and New Testaments is urgently called for. This, combined with an oral proclamation of a loving Saviour's Gospel, in Mr. Sternberg's opinion could not but turn the hearts of many unto the Messiah, the Deliverer whom they daily expect to come. Thousands are craving for Bibles and Testaments, which, as yet, are not provided for distribution.

Mr. Sternberg's own words may well be quoted, and most powerfully appeal to the hearts of our readers:—

"Who will present a few waggon-loads of Bibles and Testaments for Russia? I would gladly undertake to go about from town to town, and from village to village, getting, of course, first the permission of the Russian authorities (which I could obtain, certainly in this district), and distribute the Word of Life among the thirsty souls. God grant that some Jesus-loving hearts may be inclined to respond to this call, and to furnish the Word of Life for the masses of the Russian Jews. Such a work would also tend greatly to arrest the repeated and sudden outbreaks upon the Jews, for it would teach Jew and Gentile that we all have one common Father and one common Saviour, through whom all, both Jew and Gentile, have access to the Father, and once this truth were well promulgated, and thoroughly understood by the people, a great change would come over the whole population, and peace and good-will would be the result."

A correspondent calls attention to the widespread efforts which are being made by clergymen and others connected with the Christian Church to popularise the drama, and to feed the thirst for sensationalism. In one small town of about 5000 inhabitants, quoted as an illustration, two public halls are licensed for theatrical performances, and that with the open sanction and encouragement of some professing Christians. A considerable movement is evidently on foot throughout the country to sustain in connection with religious systems a course of pandering to carnal tastes in the form of amusements of an entirely worldly type. Rome has always adopted such accessories for gaining hold on the popular element, sacrificing spirituality to the one idea of ecclesiastical power and numerical strength. But Protestantism professes to aim at maintaining the spiritual aspect of the religion of Christ, and if it fails to do this is of little worth.

Our correspondent queries how far periodicals, published by religious societies, and specially catering for Christian circles, are culpable for giving prominence in their pages to fictitious and sensational tales. These, interspersed with articles of higher character, written by able and leading Christian men, foster the taste for mental excitement of a harmful kind. That fiction has its place and its practical value few would deny, but great care is required in its adoption by Christian authors, and in connection with Christian literature. The proper limits are doubtless overstepped nowadays in the case of many serials claiming a Christian character.

Among the many signs of an awakening vitality among the Jews is the fact stated by the Jewish Chronicle, that a Conference, attended by Jewish delegates from many of the most important towns in Russia, Poland, Germany, and Austria, has just been held at Kattowitz (Upper Silesia) to deliberate upon the question of promoting the Jewish colonisation of Palestine. The fund in aid of the movement is said to exceed £10,000. Spiritual and temporal indications abound leading to the conviction that "the time, yea, the set time to favour Zion" is close at hand. In view of all that is transpiring we cannot but remember the words of the prophet, "Ye that are the Lord's remembrancers keep not silence, and give Him no rest, till He establish, and till He make Jerusalem a praise in the earth."

In a recent issue of The Citizen, under the heading of "Famous Londoners," a column and a half was devoted to Dr. Barnardo and his work. We are glad to see frank and hearty recognition on the part of the secular press of the immense value to be attached to the efforts made in connection with the "Homes" and the "Edinburgh Castle." The writer says:—

"All this work costs money. Dr. Barnardo's expenses are a hundred pounds a day, and for this he has to rely upon the exertions of the benevolent public, who certainly get full value for their money. It is cheaper to teach a pauper how to earn an honest living than to live on the parish. It is cheaper to prevent crime than reform it, and there is no finer transformation scene in London than that which Dr. Barnardo shows as he points you to the ragged lad or girl growing up in savage ignorance in the slums and dens of the East, and then shows you the same lad or girl in the pleasant cottage home at Ilford or in the boys' home refuges, bright and happy, preparing for a useful career, training to be a blessing rather than a curse to society. It is impossible to realise the good thus done."

A Conference will be held at Mildmay Conference Hall, by the Christian Evidence Society, on Thursday, December 4, at 7.30, on "Unbelief, and the best way to deal with it." Mr. Samuel Morley will preside. Dr. Sinclair Paterson, Mr. Barnard, one of the Society's open-air lecturers, and other friends will speak.

An excellent plan of helping to ameliorate the woes which the "Bitter Cry" of destitute thousands all over the country proves to exist, is suggested by a correspondent who has proved its efficiency. It is for Christian bands to be formed in separate districts, without regard to sect or party, having for their object to visit and assist the poor, under the guidance of city missionaries, where such are at work, and that with a view to cheering and strengthening the hearts and hands of these good men in their arduous task, as well as mitigating the sorrows of the poor. Such methods tend to unite Christians in Christ-like sympathy, and unobtrusively but effectively testify to the practical worth and influence of the religion inculcated by the Gospel of the grace of God.

As a sample of the work done by such means, our correspondent gives the following account of the little society she worked with last winter:—"Our amount for distribution was only about £30, and yet with that sum we were able to make and distribute nearly 200 warm garments; to give two tea-meetings, by which some who had never entered the 'Mission Room' were induced to attend; to help the poor, the sick and aged ones especially, with coal, bread, and grocery, besides rendering special aid to other cases in times of sore need. Not only has relief been thus afforded to the needy, but the hard-working and faithful missionary, with whom it has been our pleasure to work, has been much encouraged, while by his advice mis-application of charity has been prevented."

Miss C. Gough, of 5, Theberton-street, N., by the help of kind friends, continues her most praiseworthy endeavours to interest and help young women employed at refreshment bars and restaurants. A pleasant and profitable evening was recently spent by a number of these friends, at the hospitable residence of Mrs. E. Trotter, Montague-square. Any ladies who would be willing to give their houses for a like purpose during the winter, are desired to communicate with Miss Gough. We learn with pleasure that, by the kindness of Lady Brabazon, Sunday afternoon meetings are about to be held in her residence at Lancaster Gate.

The Bishop of Manchester has lately said some good things anent music in places of worship. Preaching at the opening of a new organ in a church at Prestwich, he said:—

"He recognised, as fully as anyone, the importance of the musical element, but he wanted it to be devotional. There should be nothing in the shape of claptrap attraction. They were getting too much of these things. On great occasions—harvest festivals, dedication anniversaries, and the like—a great display was made; but was the result to edification? Were the people more Christ-like, did they go away more full of love of their neighbours and with a more earnest resolve to purify and ennoble their own lives? He did not feel sure of this, for he had been to services of the sort which he had felt were not 'unto edifying.' They ought to seek first and foremost of all the edification, not merely of themselves, who might be cultured musicians, but of the humblest, the poorest, the most unlearned, who might be drawn into God's house, and whose souls were just as dear to Him as the souls of the highest and most cultured."

In a book just published by Messrs. Chapman & Hall, entitled, "For Their Sakes," and written on behalf of the deaf and dumb, the author, Mr. John St. Ackers, calls attention to the fact that although needing instruction even more than those who hear, they are not included in our national system of education. There are probably some 30,000 deaf and dumb persons in our land, of whom at least 5000 are of school age. Of these 2700 are literally without any education at all. On this point Mr. St. Ackers thus justly writes:—

"Even in England, the education of children, with all their senses, is enforced by the State, and very particular is the Educational Department about the inspection, examination, and help given to schools for such children and to the training colleges, where the teachers of such children must be educated. Yet it takes no notice whatever of the deaf and the blind, of children with one faculty lost, who want and ought to receive increased care and education, although the Act of 1870 includes all children alike. Deep and earnest remonstrances have been repeatedly addressed to the Educational Department, but as yet to no avail The deaf and the blind are in a minority, happily, but minorities now receive scant attention. If only the majority, who can hear and see, would but take compassion on their less fortunate brothers and sisters, or would consider the grave evil to the State from the present neglected education of these classes, a better state of things would soon prevail."

The force of these remarks in relation to the blind as well as the deaf and dumb is obvious. They form a still larger portion of the population, and merit fullest sympathy and aid. Dr. Campbell, the indefatigable president of the Royal Normal College at Upper Norwood, is taking advantage of the lamented death of Professor Fawcett to call public attention to the need for greater efforts on their behalf. At a meeting held in the Hawkstone Hall last week, the Doctor propounded plans for raising a National Fund for enlarging and perfecting the education of the blind in connection with that event. The Rev. Newman Hall volunteered to preach a sermon on the subject and take up an offertory on its behalf forthwith. An example this which it is hoped ministers of every denomination far and wide will imitate. A great obligation lies upon society at large to care for these and other afflicted members of the community.

The heroic and self-sacrificing devotion of professional duty shown by the late Dr. Rabbeth is to be fittingly commemorated by the establishment of medals bearing his name in connection with the London University and King's College. By this means the noble example set by the deceased will be constantly kept before students of the same profession, and prove an incentive to many to emulate its spirit. The Archbishop of Canterbury heads a thoroughly representative Committee for the carrying out of this project.

Another of those grievous calamities which so often befal miners, who toil at the constant risk of life for the comfort of others, has occurred at Tredegar. A reporter, writing from the scene of the disaster, refers to the piety which exists among the working-classes of the district. The colliers, as a rule, are among the most sympathetic and generous class of working men. When a casualty of this kind occurs work is suspended at all the collieries for miles round, and the men with their wives come to render all the assistance they can, and to minister consolation to the bereaved. It is a providential fact that the explosion took place on a Saturday night; had it been in the day, or on any other night, the loss of life must have been terrible indeed.

We would remind our London readers of the meetings at Mildmay Conference Hall this day (Thursday), at 3 and 7 p.m., for confession and prayer.

Mr. and Mrs. Guinness reached Liverpool, on their return journey from America, on Thursday last, the 13th inst., by the steamship Servia. The Lord gave them good success in America in all respects. The Congo Mission is now fully transferred to the American Baptist Union.

The following lines, written by Frances Ridley Havergal, and addressed to a Welsh choir, are worth frequent reproduction:—

"It might be as well if the whole congregation
Could join in the Canticles' grand adoration,
But the few that try at your speed you will find
Are speedily distanced and left behind.
It might be as well for the 'Kyrie' to bear
Some slight resemblance to penitent prayer;
Not tripping it off in cheerful repeat
To a pretty tune with a lively beat.
It might be as well in the hymns if we could Take breath where the writers intended we should,
Not hunting and racing the sense to death
By aiming at singing a verse in a breath."

There are very many choirs not Welsh, the members of which ought to lay these hints seriously to heart. Sometimes singing at evangelistic services is sadly spoiled and degraded by the system of "hunting and racing" which Miss Havergal puts into the pillory. At the same time, slow funereal singing is unsuited to the cheerfulness and joy of the Gospel.

A gathering of some three hundred officials connected with Birmingham Methodists has just been held in that great town, at which the Rev. F. W. Macdonald gave a most catholic and heart-stirring address. He referred to Birmingham as presenting one of the most interesting and inviting centres of Christian life and work, and as claiming special concern. Its wonderful freedom from ecclesiasticism, its spirit of almost defiant liberty, the absence of the artificial social hindrances which embarras other places, were spoken of as affording peculiar facilities for Christian workers. It is gratifying to find a representative man like Mr. Macdonald characterising exclusiveness as one of the great dangers of modern times, and repudiating it. He wittily illustrated the absurdity of mere sectional effort, by the story of a man who sat unmoved under a powerful discourse, while everybody else was in tears, and explained his position by "Sir, I don't belong to the parish!" We need hearts large enough for the common work which this immense population furnishes. We are one only of the working corps in the great army; we are not competitors, but co-operators.

READING FOR RAILWAY MEN.—Dear Sir,—My sister and I are reluctantly obliged to discontinue our work among the railway men; but a friend who is deeply interested in it will continue it in the same way. Since commencing this work in 1877, we have been rejoiced by many warmly taking up the cause of these men. We earnestly ask if there are not others who could help in this important but quiet work for the Master. We would say to those to whom it may be new, that it is only the sending a little packet of books, monthly, costing about 2s. to 3s. a year for each man. The addresses in future will be gladly supplied by our friend, Miss T. Christie, Maiville, St. George's-road, Wimbledon, Surrey. (Miss) M. A. Lowe.

THE MODEL TEACHER IN THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

By JAMES CROIL, Montreal.*

IT may seem trite to say that the teacher ought to be a Christian, but the question has not yet been settled whether, under any circumstances, it is expedient to employ unconverted teachers in the Sunday-school. There are such—men and women of good report who from praiseworthy motives have offered their services, but who would hesitate to call themselves converted persons. They have not made a distinct profession of their faith. They have not yet reached the decisive point in religious experience which enables them to say, "I know in whom I have believed."

Perhaps it is enough to say here that each case of this kind that arises should be judged on its own merits, rather than that a cast-iron rule should be laid down. At the same time, it is claimed that such persons do not properly come under the category of our ideal Sunday-school teacher. The traveller, in selecting a competent guide, must be satisfied that the person who offers his services not only knows a great deal about the country whither he is going, he must know it from personal observation and experience. He must have been there himself. The mariner employs a pilot who is supposed to know every reef, and shoal, and devious current, that lies between him and his desired haven. So he who would instruct others in the knowledge of saving truth ought to be one who has himself been taught of God, and is fully persuaded in his own mind as to the verities of revealed religion. Observation leads me to say that unconverted teachers, however well qualified in other respects, are not to be depended upon for any great length of time. They usually fail precisely at the point where endurance is most needed—when confronted with some of the difficulties and discouragements which every now and then beset the teacher's path.

THE MODEL TEACHER

has a thorough knowledge of the Bible and a profound respect for it. He accepts it as something more than authentic history—a revelation from God—the only rule to direct us how we may glorify and enjoy Him. He believes that all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for instruction in righteousness. He takes it for his text-book and is thoroughly loyal to it. He does not seize upon isolated passages and twist them so as to square with his own fancies. He does not come before the class to ride any of his own hobbies. Upon every subject he is called upon to investigate and discuss, He compares Scripture with Scripture. He is not carried about by "every wind of doctrine." He does not vex himself nor distract his class, by speculations on deep mysteries which he cannot explain; instead of "darkening counsel," he aims at a simple presentation of Truth, so far as he knows it.

The model teacher is "a workman, that needeth not to be ashamed"—a skilled workman. He has the best tools he can procure, and knows how to use them. He has a perfect knowledge of the material he is to work upon. As the sculptor, looking at the rough block of marble, "sees an angel in it;" as the artist culls from some broken heap of rubbish bits of broken glass and converts them into an exquisite stained-glass window to adorn a cathedral, so the skilled teacher, out of the common quarry, rears magnificent temples—temples for the Holy Ghost to dwell in. He himself is a pattern of regularity and punctuality, of faith, patience, and perseverance. He sets about his task with a definite aim. He never loses sight of it. Everything he says or does is with a view to a predetermined result, and every word tells. Recognised fitness for his work is that which alone entitles him to the distinction of a skilled workman.

The teacher has a right appreciation of what the Sunday-school is, and the purpose it is intended to serve. He does not regard it as a substitute, in any sense, for anything else. It is not an institution attached to the church, like a dining-car which is coupled on to a passenger train at one station and switched off at another.

IT IS A PART AND PARCEL OF THE CHURCH,

as necessary to its satisfactory progress as is the tender to the locomotive. The church cannot do without it. Certainly it is not to be regarded as a substitute for family instruction. It is the complement of it. The Sunday-school has proved itself to be an educational power, a civilising power, and a saving power. No longer a feeble band of unappreciated if not despised workers, it has become a great army—a million and a half of teachers, with thirteen millions of scholars. "Their line has gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world." It is the right arm of missionary enterprise throughout the whole world.

Nor is the power of numbers to be underrated. It is well calculated to inspire the teacher with courage and devotion. As he looks along the line, he feels that he is not an isolated sentry. He belongs to the army of "the invincibles." If there be failure at any given point to-day, he does not despair of success to-morrow. He knows that the battle is the Lord's, and that, sooner or later, he will be "more than conqueror."

We come now to the crucial test of the skilled teacher. He has prepared himself by careful study for analysing the lesson. Remembering that other and wiser men have looked into these things before him, he will not despise their assistance. Mr. Spurgeon says: "Usually we have found the despisers of commentaries to be men who have no sort of acquaintance with them. A respectable acquaintance with the giants of the past, might have saved many an erratic thinker from wild interpretations and outrageous inferences." My advice to the teacher is to make judicious use of all the helps he can lay his hands upon; but, when he comes before his class, he should avoid trying to personate anyone else.

Free to accept or reject the opinions of others, he should pin his faith to no man's interpretation, endeavouring as much as in him lies to be guided by the example of

THE GREAT TEACHER.

Although the term teacher, applied to Christ, occurs only once in the English version of the New Testament, it is worthy of notice that in sixteen out of the twenty-two instances in the Gospels in which Christ is called "Master" the proper translation is "Teacher." In each of these sixteen instances, in the original Greek, the word used is didaskalos, a teacher.

It throws a fresh light on the Saviour's character, and imparts a new dignity to the office of Sunday-school teacher to adopt this reading in such passages as these: "Teacher, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest;" "Teacher, we know that thou art true;" "Good Teacher, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" "The disciple is not above his Teacher;" &c.

What, then, may we ask, were the distinguishing features of Christ's teaching? Simplicity, earnestness, sympathy, brevity, adaptation, and a never-failing store of illustration. These are precisely the qualifications most needed by the Sunday-school teacher to-day. By the use of homely similes and instructive emblems, our model teacher always made the truth clear to those who wished to understand it. The commonest incidents of life were seized upon and used with wonderful dexterity to illustrate the weightiest truths. On the other hand, we are not to suppose that a mere string of stories, even if they are good stories, will be accepted by intelligent scholars in lieu of a thoughtful and systematic exposition of the lesson.

Let the teacher be sure that he understands what he undertakes to teach. Nothing is more embarrassing to the teacher than ignorance in regard to the things which he ought to know; especially in regard to Bible knowledge. The habit of writing out the exposition of the lesson, or at least a full outline of it, cannot be too strongly commended. It ensures methodical arrangement and exactness of statement which cannot be easily attained otherwise. But the teacher who reads an essay, or preaches a sermon, to his class will soon discover that he has mistaken his vocation. Let me name one other attribute of the successful teacher, enthusiasm—rather let me call it magnetism—combining qualities which cannot be adequately described, though we are quite familiar with their results—that mysterious influence by which one body is drawn towards another. "Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades?" No more can you assign limits to the influence which an earnest, enthusiastic, and skilled teacher may exert upon his class.

AS TO METHODS OF TEACHING.

I believe in expository teaching, in the pulpit, and in the Sunday-school. It is as old at least as the days of Ezra and Nehemiah, when, as we read in Nehemiah viii. 8, "The people stood in their places, and they read in the book of the law of God, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading." The lesson should be read by the class, responsively, or verse in turn, as may seem best, without comment, further than to make sure that the meaning of every word is clearly understood. If you happen to read in the Acts, "After those days we took up our carriages and went up to Jerusalem," it will be proper to explain what is meant by "carriages." Or, if you read in 1 Thess., "We which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep;" or in Romans, how that Paul purposed to go to Rome, but was let hitherto; it may be mentioned that these and other words have changed their meaning since the authorised version was published. The term "God's propriety in us," in the Shorter Catechism, is unintelligible without referring to the original meaning of the word "propriety," which is very different from that which it now has. The connection in which the lesson stands to the context will not be overlooked.

It will be interesting, often indeed necessary, to

if there are such, in order that the "sense" may be clearly given. You cannot have a biography of Christ without a close comparison of the four Gospels, written by different authors, at different times, and from different standpoints. The books of Kings and Samuel are the complements of each other; you must read both to get a consecutive history of the times they cover. In the former, fourteen chapters are devoted to the lives of Elijah and Elisha, in the other their names are scarcely mentioned.

The exposition of the lesson will depend upon the skill of the teacher and the capacity of the scholars. Rather, the teacher will show his skill in adapting his treatment of the lesson to his audience. This is vital. It has been said that a teacher ought to study the character and capacity of each of his scholars as minutely as the naturalist who subjects an object to the scrutiny of the microscope. How many teachers do that? Some American Sunday-school men have a convenient way of dissecting a lesson. It is expressed in five easily remembered words—and comprehends the biography, the geography, the chronology, the history, and the application of the lesson; and these are, in the majority of cases, the most important points. A passing reference may suffice for some of them. The teacher must exercise his discretion as to which shall receive the greatest share of attention. The Old Testament is largely made up of biography—all history is—hence the importance of that branch. By a judicious use of it, abundant materials will be found for example and warning.

WHO, WHERE, WHEN, WHAT, WHY,

The second is scarcely less important. True, the Bible was not written to teach geography; but geography teaches the Bible. There is no way in which one can better impress upon the mind of young people, or old people, the reality of Bible scenes than by the use of map and pointing-stick. Every discovery that is made in Bible-lands helps to prove that the Bible is true; every site that is identified is a fresh evidence of Christianity. Maps are indispensable in the Sunday-school. If you doubt it, read the account of Elijah's movements as you find them recorded in 1 Kings xvii., xviii., and xix.; without reference to the map it is a perfect labyrinth, but traced on the map it becomes not only intelligible, but intensely interesting.

In the primary class the blackboard can be used to advantage, but it requires more than ordinary skill to manage it. The teacher who, after exercising his utmost skill in drawing what he thought was a good picture of an eye on the blackboard, to illustrate the text, "Thou God seest me," was taken aback when, on asking the class what that was, he received for reply from one of the youngsters, "Please, sir, that is a bird's nest."

Without necessarily going into minute details, some notice ought to be taken of the chronology. Time, as well as place, is an important element in history. To say that an event happened "once upon a time" is the language of fiction. To give the exact date goes far to establish the truth of it. This simple outline, at least, may easily be fixed in the memory of the youngest scholar. From Adam until Enoch was translated, 1000 years; from Enoch until the birth of Abram, 1000 years; from Abraham until the dedication of Solomon's Temple, 1000 years; from Solomon till Christ was born, 1000 years. Halfway betwixt Enoch and Abram, mark the deluge; betwixt Abram and Solomon the exodus; betwixt Solomon and Christ, the Babylonish captivity. On this skeleton chart may be indicated with tolerable accuracy the chronology of any given lesson in the Old Testament.

Under the fourth division, What, the skilled teacher has unlimited scope for his descriptive powers. He fills up the outline, often a very faint one, with references to the customs of the people where the scene is laid, or to contemporaneous events in a way to throw additional light on the sacred page, and to interest while he instructs the class. To know how much may be done in that way, one has only to read "Geikie's Life and Words of Christ," a book of 1200 pages, full of interest to every student of the New Testament, and yet only an amplification of a narrative to which each of the evangelists devotes some twenty pages.

This brings us to the last division—Why—the most important and difficult of all. It is here that the inexperienced and unskilful often fail. To seize upon the salient points of the lesson, to review them in a condensed and connected form, in the fewest possible words to press home the practical application of the whole matter, should be now the teacher's aim. Why was this passage of Scripture penned? It may have some repulsive features about it which worldly policy would have passed over in silence, yet there always will be found in it some seed-thought to plant in the scholar's mind.

What does the Golden Text say? Is it this—"His sons made themselves vile, and he restrained them not"? Then here is a very sharp two-edged sword. (1) How did Hophni and Phinehas come to grief? Bad company, bad habits, loss of self-respect, selfishness, avarice, superstition, breach of trust, debauchery. The way of transgressors is hard. (2) What was the immediate cause of their ruin? "He restrained them not." The half-hearted parental rebuke came too late. Sin should be nipped in the bud.

Do teacher, parents, pastors, realise the full extent of their influence? Cast a pebble into a mill-pond, and see how the concentric rings chase each other to every point of the compass. How far do they go? On and on till they break upon the embankment. But the Sunday-school teacher's influence extends to the shoreless eternity. We call the medical profession a noble one, and so it is; but, compared with the Sunday-school teacher, what does the physician try to accomplish? At best to patch up a fragile tenement of clay, that it may hold together for a few weeks or months longer. That is all. The teacher seeks to bring new life and light into a soul that is to live for ever.

The last words of a teacher before his class are his golden opportunity. Let them be as few as they may, they should be well considered and go warm from the heart to the heart.

A WORKING GIRLS' ANNIVERSARY.

SEVEN years ago Mr. John Shrimpton founded the Homes for Working Girls in London, with one small institution, and in not a little fear and trembling as to the issues of the movement. To-day the Homes are eight in number, scattered east, west, north and south over the metropolis, and the inmates number 345. The 250,000 working girls of London are yet poorly provided for by the Christian public, which, without doubt, owes them a debt. They are the victims of such a competitive scramble as was never before seen in the history of civilisation, and they have to toil early and late for what is only the barest pittance.

But Mr. Shrimpton has shown how to attack the problem, and he only wants larger opportunity in order to solve it. His Homes give to the girls, without sacrificing an atom of their independence, all the advantages of a middle-class home, as against the dangerous poverty of ill-furnished lodgings; while, at the same time, the home life is so cultivated that the girls are brought anew under most of the influences which they lost when they drifted away from their father's hearth.

On Tuesday week we saw a bit of his system in action. The genial glow of little festivals and parties is never absent from the yearly round of life at the Home, and an established institution with them is the annual tea-party, which is usually furnished by some friend of the movement. The anonymous friend who invited the girls of the Home to meet for tea at Burlington Hall, Savile-row, would have felt in his heart that his outlay had brought a return in happy faces and cheerful enjoyment that was far more than adequate.

"There is no place like home" is one of Mr. Shrimpton's first mottoes, and it was felt as a drawback that Morley or Gordon House was not, as in former years, the scene of this little festival. But an institution has to pay certain penalties for growing bigger, and one of them is that it finds it difficult to accommodate its own children. So it came to pass that Burlington Hall was invaded by 300 damsels last Tuesday, in lieu of its customary audience of young men.

As we mounted the stairs from the cold and misty street, the buzz of youthful voices easily guided us to the scene of the party—a cosy hall, as bright as gas could make it, and gaily bedecked with flags, one of which, bearing a monster "Welcome," waved over the platform. One of the young women was singing, with piano accompaniment, while the others were ranging themselves in due order along the line of tables, plentifully furnished with all the outward and visible signs of a comfortable tea, to which the next hour was devoted.

In due time the tables were cleared, and the girls faced round with smiling countenances ready for the "social meeting," which is part of this their annual event. The evening then resolved itself into a couple of informal talks, interspersed with solos by Miss Alice Grey. The Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston, vicar of St. Barnabas, Islington, was the first speaker. After dwelling on the advantages which unquestionably resulted from the mixing together of the inmates of all the Homes, he took up the old question of "How to be happy," and in a pleasing style sketched one or two recipes for the attainment of this object. In the first place, always have an object in life: the doing of duty in the sphere in which they found themselves; cultivate cheerfulness; do a kindness every day to somebody. The conclusion of an excellent fireside chat was set in a deeper key, for the roots of human happiness were touched when the speaker dealt with prayer and the bearing of the present life on that which is to come. The girls listened with the closest attention.

Mr. Seth Smith, in a thoughtful little speech, followed with a few remarks on the interesting topics of fashion and taste, pleading, not unnecessarily, for a greater infusion of taste into the fashions which young ladies followed.

Then Dr. Monro Gibson wound up the speechifying with an able address on a line of thought suggested by an expression of the previous speaker about "the love of change." Such a sentiment was not a thing to be blamed, but to be guided and directed. Young ladies and other folks too often look for the effect of change in mere novelty of surrounding circumstances. It was in the heart that the real interest of novelty lay. "The trivial round, the common task," might be monotonous in its appearance,—but the perennial source of interest in the midst of it all lay in the freshness of the heart. It was within, and not without, that life found its keenest relish. Perpetual faith attended those who lived as it were within. He hoped none of those before him would ever grow old, but that with a young heart, and with an ever brighter outlook, their lives would grow in love and peace.

In a few hearty and earnest words Mr. Shrimpton expressed thoughts of thankfulness suggested by the gathering. How privileged he was, for instance, to have such good co-workers in this effort. And here the superintendents behind him were cheered vociferously by the girls. Then he was so glad to think that they were all one in Christ Jesus. That, after all, was the mainspring of the Homes. What would they be, despite their comforts and enjoyments, without the bond of Christian fellowship? Out of this naturally came the pointed question, Are you all children of the Heavenly King? If not, why not? And with this key-note Mr. Shrimpton drew to a close. A few words of prayer appropriately terminated our happy gathering.

MISSION SCHOOLS ON MOUNT LEBANON.

FOUNDED some thirty years ago, these schools are planted in fifteen villages on the north-western slopes of "the goodly mountain." Their headquarters are at Shweir, about twenty miles north-east of Beyrout. In addition to the ordinary day-schools there is in this village a boarding and training school for boys, superintended by the Rev. Dr. Carslaw, and a similar one for girls, under the charge of Miss Mary Dobbie, both institutions having been built by funds supplied by friends in Scotland. About 800 children in all are usually under instruction. They belong to the various religious sects of the country—viz., Druse, Maronite, Mohammedan, and Greek Christian. Of late years considerable difficulty has been experienced in obtaining the requisite funds. Unless the revenue is largely increased the committee will be under the painful necessity of closing some of the schools, a step which Dr. Carslaw, in a recent letter, strongly deprecates, as all of them are accomplishing much good.

The Society is undenominational. Its work is in thorough harmony with that of the American Missions in Syria. The Word of God is the principal text-book in all the schools. Most of the teachers were at one time pupils in the schools, and are, generally speaking, intelligent, pious, and devoted men and women. As another outcome of the schools a congregation has been formed in Shweir, in connection with the Syrian Evangelical Church.

I shall be happy to furnish any more particular information that may be desired; and meantime commend the Society's work to the liberality of Christian friends.

Yours faithfully,

Robert Young, Secretary.

"JAIL-BIRDS." *

"How shall I go up to my Father, and the lad be not with me?"—Gen. xliv. 34.

OFT in yon city streets at night
I see unchildlike children far from fair,
Squalid with want and dirt, but in the light,
Full of the pathos born of care.

With footsteps weary, lingering, and lost,
They creep along among the bustling crowd,
Their little feet are blistered in the frost
Gleaming beneath the sable cloud.

With eager eyes on which there sleeps a haze
Of coming death, with all its blissful gains,
Sad longing eyes, they stop in deep amaze
And look upon the lighted panes.

Poor little "jail-birds," in dark courts to sleep,
With heavy hearts, yet glad of gloomy night,
Famished, with plenty round, away they creep
To hide their misery out of sight.

Born, some in jails, unknown to them the bliss
Of mother's love, of mother's daily care,
For them no lingering, happy good-night kiss,
No clasping of the hands in prayer.

With stunted bodies, warped, and bent, and worn,
Thirsting and hungering even when at play;
No pleasure find they in the dawning morn,
No beauty in the dying day.

But little children, though they long for death,
Bearing a load of grief in infant breasts,
Almost afraid to draw their feverish breath,
Yet people call them "city pests!"

. . . . . .

"Only a pest" of the city street,
A waif, a beggar, or worse,
An unsightly thing, with chilblained feet,
And with hunger for its nurse.

Only a child in the pouring rain,
A child coiled up on the flags,
And ye pass, nor think to look again
At the heap of mud-stained rags.

Only a child in its nightly rest,
A child asleep in the cold;
And ye look not at its rain-splashed breast.
Or its pallid face, so cold.

"Only the pest!" O ye brethren mine,
Who go to your homes of light,
Do ye read how housed were the ninety-nine,
And one left out in the night?

"Only the pest?" Yet in your hushed breath
Ye speak Christ's words of charity,
The sweet speech of Him of Nazareth,
"Let the children come unto Me."

"Only the pest?" but its precious soul
Is dear to the angel throng,
And in heaven, when sweeping anthems roll,
If its voice swells not the song,

Hearing the cry of the Master there,
Shame will be ours for the good undone:
"Here are the ninety-nine in the fold, but where Is the outcast little one?"

* Written for the Children's Aid Branch of the Dublin Prison Gate Mission. Of the unhappy little ones needing help and care it is the fact that their prison life begins by sharing their convicted mothers' cells until they reach the age of two years; when past that age they are sent to the workhouse during their mother's term of service, and they are sent from the workhouse on her discharge to leave with her the prison gate. "Surplus population" they may be, if looked at from the political economist's point of view, but God will require our nation to render an account of them. J. B.

CARDIFF STRANGERS' REST.—In the second annual report of this Rest several instances of marked blessing are recorded. Over 761 meetings were held during the past year. The attendance has gone on increasing, and a large Hall is now being built to accommodate the numbers of men who gather at the Rest on Sunday evenings. Gifts of books and magazines for the library would be much appreciated, and may be sent to the Hon. Superintendent, Miss Tilly, Strangers' Rest, Cardiff.

NOTES FROM NORWICH.

A LAMP MISSION.

ARRIVING at Norwich on Saturday evening, after an interval of nearly six years, I wondered whether the Saturday Lamp Mission was still in existence. My host, Robert Adcock, in driving through the city, called my attention to a crowd at a street corner, near an inn, and, on alighting, there was a dual lamp, and on the upper half in white letters on red ground the words, "Victoria Hall Mission." It was very refreshing to see this goodly band of Christian men and women singing for Jesus, and speaking to the people, chiefly reciting passages of Scripture. Their faces were an index of the happiness they possessed, and each face preached its own sermon to the passers-by. Among this group of helpers was a fine, tall figure pointed out as one who had found peace during the recent Mission conducted by the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. It was good to see him thus early in his Christian career, taking up his cross and following Jesus by sharing in this street work.

THE RECENT UNITED MISSION.

Mr. Hughes's Mission alluded to above must have been a wonderful time of blessing from all accounts. I seemed to be living under its shadow during the whole of my two days' stay. One church had received applications for membership from more than seventy converts. If the other churches have had anything like the same number, what a proof it affords of the power by which the Word was accompanied.

A BRACING SERMON.

On Sunday morning I heard the Rev. W. A. McAllan, the Presbyterian minister, preach in his church on 1 Peter i. 6. If I were giving a title to the sermon it would be, "The causes of sorrow, and the sources of joy." The doctrines of grace were dealt with by a master hand, and the effect was like a refreshing breeze on a sultry day, bracing up the hearers for the conflicts of life, and enabling them to feel their feet more firmly upon the Rock of Ages. To listen to such discourses must tend to make strong and stable Christians.

THE VICTORIA HALL.

My recollections of Victoria Hall had become somewhat dim during the afore-named interval of nearly six years, and I confess to a sense of astonishment on facing an afternoon congregation of 1000 people or more. The evening congregation was larger, every corner being filled; and on Monday evening the place was again crowded, while I discoursed on "the broad and the narrow way," illustrated by my Dutch picture. Prior to the Sunday evening service I requested a few of the helpers to join me in an open-air meeting on the Plain, near the Agricultural Hall, and was much gratified to find so large a number so cheerfully respond. There must be a vast amount of spiritual life in such a company of people, and for the sake of my friends Robert Adcock, Dr. Roche, and others, their helpers, I was heartily glad, as it will lead them to expect yet greater things than these.

A SUBURBAN PARISH.

When at Lowestoft in the summer I visited the Rev. C. W. Claridge, who informed me of his appointment to St. Thomas, Heigham, a district on the suburbs of Norwich. This district I now went over with Mr. Claridge. It has been taken from two other parishes, and is yet in an embryo state. There is not even a schoolroom where he can meet his people, but the erection of one will be commenced soon. The few words this "vicar-designate" spoke while presiding at my lecture proved him to be thoroughly evangelical, and I cannot doubt but he will be "a good minister of Jesus Christ" and used in winning souls in this new sphere.

A BREAKFAST DISCOURSE.

The meeting I most enjoyed during my brief visit was one in the Messrs. Colman's Carrow Works, during the breakfast half-hour. Those who wish for a religious service during breakfast-time have a room allotted them by the firm, and the fifty men who were present on this particular morning appeared to enjoy their meal a great deal more by this wholesome addition. First prayer is offered, then the discourse, and then a hymn from Sacred Songs and Solos. After this dual feast labour is sweeter, and a wholesome influence exercised upon the employés (nearly 2000) engaged on these works.

YOUNG WORKWOMEN IN THE CITY.

WE have received from Miss L. Backler a copy of some verses that were suggested to her by attending the recent meeting at the Mansion House on behalf of Mrs. Fisher's Work among City Young Women. We give the following selected stanzas:—

Think, O think of these your sisters,
Oft-times under paid, ill fed;
Toiling from the early morning
Till the stars come out o'erhead.
Going weary from their labour,—
Whither? Ah, our hearts grow sore,
For the tempter and the spoiler
Wait them almost at the door.

Shall they drift to shame and sorrow
While you sit at home, and say,
"I will help them, I will cheer them"?
Yes, but when?—Another day?
Workrooms now are open for you,
Toilers long for you to come;
While they plead Christ pleadeth for them,
And will you alone be dumb?

Give them help for soul and body,
Give them counsel, comfort, care,
As you see them blessed, ennobled,
You their happiness will share.
Sacred service, blessèd labour!
Oh the gladness by and by,
When you meet those toiling sisters
In God's bright eternity.

OBITUARY.

REV. F. WAGSTAFF.

WE regret to record the somewhat sudden death of this minister, at Binfield, near Bracknell, Berks. He held pastorates at Dawlish, Wednesbury, and Epping, but was at length compelled to retire by reason of his prolonged ill-health. It was hoped that relief from the charge of a church would extend his life, and to that end he retired to Binfield with the view of engaging in quiet literary work.

REV. DR. LEASK.

This well-known and honoured minister lately died from congestion of the lungs, at his residence in Dalston. He was pastor of Maberly Congregational Church, Balls-Pond-road, Kingsland, and was well known as an able theologian and Biblical scholar. A testimonial in recognition of his services was started some few months ago, but like his neighbour, Dr. Aveling, he passed away before he could receive it. The funeral took place at Abney-park Cemetery.

CHILDREN'S BOOKS.—We confess to a serious doubt whether the average child's book of the present day does not foster a love for fiction pure and simple. A glance even at a Sunday-school library in too many cases shows an enormous proportion of books in which the story, with its more or less romantic and exciting incidents, is all in all. A thin veneer of religious sentiment is made to cover the lack of literary beauty, and the young reader gains absolutely nothing beyond the passing gratification derived from fiction.—Literary World.

THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN.

DEAR SIR,—In The Christian of October 23, it was stated that "A new opening has presented itself in Pontevedra, through the efforts of a Christian couple who have gone there to labour on their own account." We began the work in Pontevedra some four and a half years ago, and it is now two and a half years since we left it in charge of a converted Spanish Romish priest, who was brought to Christ during our stay in that town. Our friend is still there, and no one besides has ever gone to labour in that capital, as stated in the above quotation. We have thought it well to make this correction, as we have been written to about the matter, and also in case that any of our friends who have kindly helped in that work should have been misled by the error. Yours in Christ Jesus, Calle del Sol, Marin, Thomas Blamire.

THE NEWPORT MISSION.

THE crowning service of the Mission was the gathering of men on Sunday afternoon, November 9. The very large church was crowded to its utmost capacity with men only—perhaps there may have been nearly 2000 present. The Lord gave the word, and it was a sight to do one's heart good to see the men flocking up to the communion rails afterwards.

The evening service was a season of blessing never to be forgotten by those who witnessed it. Long before service time the church was crowded to excess, and hundreds had to go away without being able to find admission. The after-meeting which followed crowded the floor of the church and overflowed into the gallery. After an earnest address upon the importance of immediate decision, the anxious were invited together round the communion rails. In a few moments they were filled, to be re-filled afterwards over and over again, until perhaps a hundred persons may have been spoken with and pointed to the Saviour, most of whom seemed to go on their way rejoicing.

On Monday the closing services were held. There was a large attendance in the morning, and in the afternoon a goodly number gathered together for a "quiet hour"—a season of meditation, of confession, and fresh consecration to God. Many felt this to be a very useful and searching time.

The church was crowded again to its utmost capacity at the closing service, when after listening to words of practical counsel from Mr. Aitken's lips, and to a last stirring appeal to those who were "left behind," still unsaved, nearly 600 communicants gathered round the Lord's table. Thus an ever-memorable season of blessing came to an end, leaving the Lord's servants at Newport very full of joy at the many victories that Divine grace has won. The offerings throughout the closing day were on behalf of the Church Parochial Mission Society, and amounted to £33.

On the Sunday the Vicar (Rev. J. T. Wrenford) offered a very touching tribute to the work of the Mission preacher's father in that town thirteen years ago, and invited the congregation to join in the personal testimonial now being raised to that venerable servant of God in the endowment of his old parish of Pendeen, a suggestion that was very liberally responded to.

Mr. Aitken has arranged to postpone his visit to All Saints', South Lambeth, as it is hoped that additional premises shortly to be erected there will render the work much more effective in a twelvemonth's time.

HOSPITAL AT CAIRO.—This hospital, founded in 1881 by English, American, German, and Swiss colonists in Cairo, is expected soon to be opened. The German and Swiss nationalities have done their full share toward furnishing the necessary funds for payment of the building; and the Committee now make a further appeal to their English and American friends to supply the lack. After being established, it is expected to be self-supporting. Help may be sent to the Imperial Ottoman Bank, 26, Throgmorton-street, E.C.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

AN Autumnal Conference of Workers connected with the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution was held at Exeter Hall, on Tuesday week. The objects contemplated were the promotion of friendly intercourse between voluntary workers engaged in the various branches of this work; to confer as to the best means of extending its usefulness.

The Council-room was well filled at the afternoon meeting by ladies, the only gentlemen present being members of the Committee and of the Press. Mrs. F. A. Bevan, who presided, said the great secret of success and blessing was to recognise the constant presence of Christ with them. Mr. Thomas made a brief statement, showing that there are 112 voluntary workers, and that 140 services and classes are held every month. The special need at the present time was workers.

Mrs. Percy Bunting read an excellent paper, in which she touched on the disadvantages under which many girls are reared, and thrust at an early age into circumstances of overwhelming temptation. The great majority of fallen girls are friendless or orphans. They have often been driven to evil by a process of hardship. Harsh and unkind treatment by mistresses has often done it. Many girls are driven from home through unfeeling parents. "We are glad we have got no mothers," said two poor girls once, "we shall get on better now." We must visit the girls at their homes; also provide for them week-evening classes, and counsel and encourage them to a better life. Many of them stand about the streets in the evening, not because they want to go to the bad, but because they have nothing particular to do, and nowhere to go. Kind treatment, after they have once strayed, will often restore them.

The meeting having been thrown open for discussion, an interesting hour was spent. Miss Varney urged more looking after servants, better provision and oversight relative to their Sunday afternoons. A lady strongly recommended in cases of young mothers the adoption of every possible means to keep up the mother's love to the babe as the best preventive of further evil. In one case she met for prayer with the poor mother every week to pray that the dear child might be saved. Several ladies present who had themselves taken such poor girls into service spoke favourably of their behaviour. One lady had received five, of whom four were brought to Christ.

Mr. Thomas said: When the restraints of the Home are removed, there is sometimes a strange rebound, but when again they return to the Home after the relapse, there is a large amount of sobriety, and many are thoroughly reclaimed. Much supervision is required after they leave us, as very few of them have homes in London. Most fallen girls have been either orphans, or neglected ones, or have been placed in extraordinary temptation.

Mrs. Bevan, remarking on the character of the Homes, said she thought many of them were too tight-laced. Some were more like prisons than homes. One or two had refused to enter because of the excessive and intolerable dullness; and some had even expressed their preference for a prison.

Mrs. Bunting asked for volunteer ladies who would come and conduct meetings, readings—Bible and educational—in the Homes. Much damage was done to the poor girls by mistresses telling others where they took them from. On this point Mr. Thomas said he would certainly not think it right to deceive respectable householders on this matter. At the same time there was no need to inform a second mistress that the girl was formerly in a Home, unless circumstances demanded it.

At the evening Conference, presided over by Mr. R. Scott, Mr. A. W. Ireton read an able and instructive paper on the necessity of presenting Christ as the only Saviour from this evil. He very aptly illustrated the subject by reference to the action of our Lord in cases that came before Him. The conversation that followed was sustained with marked vigour. The question of Temperance was urged by many as lying at the root of progress in the work of rescue and prevention. The need of more female lodging-houses was referred to. One lady said the poor women often came to her, when she gave them supper and enough money to pay for a night's lodging. During the present year she had taken 107 pledges. Rev. J. W. Horsley said that Home was doomed to failure where total abstinence did not prevail. The work of rescue must extend to the young men if it is to succeed. They must be taught to be men, and to cultivate a manhood that will rise against the degradation of womanhood. It was contended by some of the speakers that much more might be done in the suppression of places of evil resort. The law was clear, and only needed enforcement.

Before the Conference dispersed Mr. Thomas reminded the friends of the pressing needs of the Institution which he so zealously and effectually superintends. £1500 he said would be needed to cover the expenses of the work up to Christmas.

SERMON-LANE MISSION.

THE sixteenth anniversary of this Mission was held on Tuesday evening, November 4, at the Hall in Liverpool-road, N. The chair was occupied by the esteemed President of the Mission, Mr. W. D. Lewis, and addresses were given by several well-known friends of the work.

Owing to the enforced absence of the worthy superintendent, Mr. G. Fuller, through serious illness, no official report was presented, but an outline of the general work of the Mission was given. From this it appears that under the blessing of God every department of the good work is in a healthy and flourishing condition. During the past year the congregations have been as large as ever. The Hall on Sunday evenings is packed to its utmost capacity. The great interest manifested in the services gives good hope of much blessing. Indeed this is already evidenced in the fact that during the year many have been converted to God. A Christian band of working men and women numbering over thirty meet once a week, and arrange to visit the homes of the people in the neighbourhood, preaching to them the Gospel, helping the needy, and reclaiming the wanderers. During the year they have given away about 9000 tracts and religious publications.

The winter is always an anxious and trying time for the conductors of this and all other Missions established in the midst of the poor, whose earnings are at all times uncertain, but especially so in the winter. The friends feel called upon to do their utmost to meet the wants of those around them. They give a free breakfast every Sunday morning, and soup twice a week. To carry these Christ-like efforts to a successful issue, the prayers and helpful sympathy of God's children are earnestly asked for. Mr. Fuller, 54 Liverpool-road, Islington, will thankfully acknowledge such assistance.

Y.W.C.A.—The Conference lately held was at Southampton, and not at Bournemouth, as stated in a portion of our last issue.

POOR CHILDREN IN CLERKENWELL.—I have been a worker for God in my humble way for thirty years in the centre of the Metropolis, but I think I never heard of such deep and wide-spread distress among little children as at present. The report of the medical officer of health for Clerkenwell, just issued, states that "30 per cent. of the parents of this parish are out of work, and that 40 per cent. of the children are sent to school without breakfast or dinner." We have recommenced our "Halfpenny dinners to poor children." 350 crowded into our Mission premises on the first day, and quite 150 had to be sent empty away. The scene will not soon be forgotten by me. Do send us help to continue these dinners to the little ones, we pray you in the name of Him who said, "Give ye them to eat."—Yours in the Lord Jesus,

William Catlin.

DR. BARNARDO'S WELCOME HOME.

THE large new Hall of the "Edinburgh Castle" was densely crowded in every part on Monday, Nov. 10, to give a welcome home to Dr. Barnardo, after an absence of four months in Canada and the States.

The meeting was presided over by Mr. Samuel Gurney Sheppard, the chairman of the "Homes." After a few hearty words of welcome, he made way for Dr. Barnardo, who spoke for nearly two hours. The audience showed the deepest and most sustained interest. It is impossible for us to devote sufficient space to the address, which would fill several pages. We can only furnish a very brief résumé of the principal points. Beginning with his departure, on July 17, from Liverpool, on board the Parisian, Dr. Barnardo took occasion to refer to the quality of emigrants likely to be successful in Canada, by describing some of those whose acquaintance he made in the steerage of that vessel. Again and again he forcibly reminded his hearers that emigrants, to succeed, should be "picked" men, industrious, temperate, frugal. The lazy, the idle, the dissolute, or spendthrift, would only come to starvation and misery, whilst those accustomed only to the counting-house would fare but little better. He paid a tribute of hearty commendation to some emigrants sent out by Lady Hobart's Committee (Sydney-street, Mile-end, E.), and said among them he found as good specimens of the would-be emigrant as could be desired. He was also specially hearty in approval of fifty boys brought over by Mr. Fegan, who was on board the same ship.

Naturally the speaker dwelt for the most part upon the Canadian aspect of his own work, but glimpses were also given of Canadian life generally, of the people, their habits and customs, their prejudices and mode of government. In the North-west, as well as in Ontario, Dr. Barnardo said he had been brought in contact with many of the Indians, and he greatly interested his audience by some description of their mode of life, their personal appearance, their religious views and feelings, and the most striking features of their character. Articles of dress, trophies, and photographs obtained when in the North-west were exhibited.

Returning to his own work, he described his new home at Peterborough, Ontario, a charming house accommodating 150 children, in six acres of land, the whole the gift of generous Christian friends, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Cox, of Peterborough. This house had been for the most part furnished through the liberality of kind friends in the district. A very hearty goodwill and a kind, generous spirit have been evinced from the first by all denominations and persons in every rank in life in the town.

A very large part of Dr. Barnardo's time in Canada was spent in visiting from house to house children who had been placed out with farmers, ministers of the Gospel, private people and others, either as servants or to be adopted as members of the families into which they had entered. It was impossible, while he spoke and gave illustration after illustration, not to appreciate the immense advantages which such a mode of emigration presents to children of the poorest and most destitute class, if only they have been carefully trained into habits of obedience, industry, and morality before being sent out. The widespread adoption of total abstinence principles throughout Canada was set forth in colours which only one who had lived and worked in East London, amid the evils produced by intemperance, could depict. The exquisite climate on the one hand, and the deep-toned piety and prevalence of family religion on the other, were also fully referred to.

Then came an account of the Doctor's journey to the far North-west, right into British Columbia, through the Rocky Mountains, in search of a location where the future industrial farm for older youths is to be placed. Though we were told a great deal about the North-west, about the quality of the land in some places, and the requirements for a successful farmer, it was observable that the speaker preserved a discreet silence as to the exact locality upon which he had himself fixed. No doubt there were good reasons for this, especially as we learned that the negotiations were not yet fully concluded. It transpired, however, in the course of the evening that about 4800 acres had been chosen in a very favourable position, and that it was hoped Dr. Barnardo would shortly be in a position to make a fuller statement on the subject.

The address was varied by the recital of incidents, many of them of thrilling interest, illustrating different points; so that when the hand of the clock pointed to ten the speaker found he had not really done much more than touch the fringe of his subject! Nevertheless, he thought it prudent to stop then, and to promise that on an early occasion he would resume where he left off. A hymn of praise, words of prayer, and the benediction closed a meeting which seemed to possess very great attractions for the auditors.

TRANSFORMATIONS AT HOXTON HALL.

AN article on "Tea and Testimony at Hoxton Hall" appeared not long since in our columns. The results of the meeting, says the Gospel Temperance Monthly, will enhance the interest in an assembly which was unique in its character. A slip was given to each invited to the festival, with the view of eliciting the following information: When was the pledge signed; how much, previous to signing, they had spent on drink; what comforts had followed the signing of the pledge. The results are here recorded:—

In a poor locality the average expenditure on drink is seen to be about 10s. per week. And how easily is 10s. spent on drink! Some, however, have spent very little, and their motive in signing the pledge seems to have been to rescue others. For example, a woman writes, 1d. per week, but an uncle saved! But much more than a penny a week is spent; 10s., 12s., 20s., and even more. One harmonious note reaches us from the papers, "Home!" what an unspeakable difference! No Home—to Home! One speaks of moving from a "back" room to a "front." Another of £5 saved and "happiness at home." Another: "Landlord gets his rent," a note of independence! Many others in allusion to the benefit say, "everything." "When I came to Hoxton Hall," says another, "I had been for nineteen years a backslider. Thank God, I am now restored." Many have joined the Phœnix Order, which makes provision in case of sickness or death. "Comforts at home too numerous to mention." So goes forward this gladsome chronicle. An infinite pathos, a morning of joy, darkness past. Hope, health, home, happiness. Surely Hoxton Hall has not existed in vain!

STANSTEAD ABBOTS, HERTS.—Four addresses, two to women and two to men, were delivered on the subject of Social Purity, in the above village on November 10 and 11, by Mrs. Bradley, of Ealing. These meetings have been the means of drawing the attention of a number of persons, especially young people, to this most important subject. The addresses were eminently fitted to give true views on the matter. A feeling of deep solemnity pervaded all the meetings, and it is believed real good has been done.

RESCUE WORK AT PLYMOUTH—In connection with the Midnight Meeting Movement, the Central Hall at Plymouth was occupied on Tuesday week by a large number of those whom the movement is specially designed to benefit. The following morning between fifty and sixty women came to a breakfast prepared for them. Many were deeply impressed by the earnest addresses they listened to; some were restored to their friends, and others removed to the refuge. Every means were used at the night meeting and that of the morning to induce those attending to return to a life of propriety and virtue. The Mission is to be extended to Devonport.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

THESE evangelists are now busy holding Christian Conventions in various places, with the view of stirring up the zeal of the churches to special effort during the winter. A newspaper report has reached us of the last of three days' meetings at Worcester, Mass. In discussing the question of "Revivals," one pastor said the presence of so many at the meetings indicated that a revival was already in progress. Mr. Moody said there was no place for conversions in many of the morning services. He believed they were on the eve of one of the greatest revivals ever known.

In the same paper we observe it is noted that the Worcester Y.M.C.A. was actively co-operating in the work of the Convention. Over one hundred members had joined the Association during the previous ten days.

A correspondent of The Central Presbyterian, writing from Boston, with respect to Messrs. Moody and Sankey's recent Convention in that city, says that to see the great throng of people that begged for admission to Tremont Temple, and had to be turned away for want of room, showed that nothing stirs the heart of the public more profoundly than the religious sentiment. The writer quotes some of Mr. Moody's closing exhortations to active effort. "He wanted everyone present to take a child out of the gutter and care for him. It would only cost seventy dollars a year to save one of these little outcasts; a good deal better to spend the money in that way than in keeping poodle dogs."

Conventions are announced to be held during this month at Troy, Albany, Utica, Rome, Syracuse, Rochester, Buffalo, Elmira, all in the State of New York, and Detroit, Michigan.

AN AWAKENING IN LYONS.

DEAR SIR,—I intended giving some interesting particulars of a fortnight's evangelistic work shared in during the second half of September, among the hills and vineyards round Lausanne. These, however, must give way to what is more recent, and of vital interest, viz., the fact that we are in the midst of a spiritual awakening in Lyons. In the Cevennes there is also at present a work of revival, the result of the living faith and untiring energy of one man, now, alas, in broken health, and removed to another locality. But that work goes on, and will now broaden and deepen through the instrumentality and ministration of those much-loved friends, Monsieur and Madame De Watteville.

The movement in Lyons seemed to commence in very remarkable circumstances, just a month ago, and there have been conversions ever since. These belong to various classes. The evidences of the work of the Holy Spirit are increasingly multiplied. A few days ago a single meeting was held at Villefranche, and at once evidences were given of the presence of converting power. It is the old story of the great things the Lord is waiting to do for his people from the moment that even "two or three" are of "one mind and one accord." We have hardly got one of the largest and finest salles in France opened when it is filled to overflowing, and is quite too small for the people who will come.

We have now the firstfruits of the blessing. Never before on the Plains of Burgundy have such things been seen as are now passing, by God's grace, around us.—Yours faithfully,

A. S. D. Colquhoun.

MRS. YEOLAND.—This earnest lady evangelist, who has met with much success in her labours in different parts of the country, is at present desiring a field of service, either in preaching or visitation. In a recent letter, Mr. C. H. Spurgeon says of her: "I have known and esteemed Mrs. Yeoland for many years, and I can bear witness that she is thoroughly earnest in her work for winning souls, and has been successful in her endeavours. I only wish that many ministers were half as earnest as she is." Mrs. Yeoland's address is Mornington House, Clapham-road, S.W.

SHOP GIRLS IN PARIS.

IN a recent issue of the New York Observer there appears an excellent account of Christian work in Paris, from the pen of a correspondent in that city. We extract the following particulars in reference to an effort that is not so familiar to our readers as it deserves to be:—

"One of the most unique of the Missions of Christian women is one which has been inaugurated by the faith and devotion of Miss Atterbury, of New York. It has a field all its own, and one which promises a rich harvest.

"The beautiful stores and shops in Paris are full of women who are working for two or three francs a day at the best, who have poor homes, or none, and who, when left to themselves, are without any place where they can have comfort or quiet. In the winter season many of them, nearly all, must go to desolate rooms without a fire, and must brave the desolateness within, or must seek the life with the influences, temptations, and snares without. If they are lost, they alone are not lost. If they may be saved, there is no arithmetic with rules enough to compute what is involved in their salvation.

"With these conditions before us we may be prepared to meet on the side of sympathy this work among the shop girls of Paris. The Home for Shop Girls and Mesdemoiselles is in Rue Jean Jacques Rousseau, and is under the constant care of a devoted and experienced matron. It is open every day and evening. It has a reading-room and a pleasant fireplace in winter, with the attractions of simple comfort. It has its classes in English for those who wish to learn it, and mental and moral stimulants, in various forms, to self-exertion. It has services on Sunday, and classes in singing. It provides Christian entertainments in the way of concerts and the like, which are furnished by those who are willing to contribute with their attainments.

"The responsible originator of this good work, which has had a very successful and hopeful trial of a year, has so far raised nearly all of the funds for this personally, and chiefly from New York. She is nobly and ably supported by devoted and gifted Christian women in Paris, both Parisian and American, who are doing a work of great blessedness. In this they have the counsel and sympathy of a committee of French pastors and laymen. I have had occasion frequently to look into this Home and to observe this work, and have been deeply gratified with the fact that an evident want is being met, and with a grateful appreciation on the part of those for whom this Gospel Mission is organised. The religious services are well attended, the classes are diligent, and the Christian women, who began in fear and trembling, are encouraged in their earnestness. We cannot say whereunto this charity may grow. It may be the beginning of many which shall in the future days become a kind of Young Women's Christian Association in Paris.

"Miss Atterbury should have ample help from those who would do good service among their less favoured sisters, where religious influences are so few, and religious education has been so poor, and dangers are so thick, and hopeful reward seems so fully assured."

BIBLE CLASSES AND THE SPUR OF EXAMINATION.—The Bible-class for young men conducted by Dr. Whyte, of Free St. George's, Edinburgh, was opened on Sunday week, when the area of the church was all but filled. In indicating the line of study, Dr. Whyte said the habits of fidelity, punctuality, and study, created and developed by such work as theirs, there was simply no human way of measuring. It had fruits that were incalculable. He was anxious that his class should enter upon their study with a view to the competition, because when they knew they would not be examined they were apt, unless they felt a passion for study in their own bosoms, to fold their hands and take it easy. By means of class honours the idle man in them was stirred up by the ambitious man in them; and one advantage of examination was that it imparted exactitude to study. He had himself found in student days the benefit of the spur of examination.—Christian Leader.

THEATRE MISSION, CAMBRIDGE.

SELDOM, perhaps, has a nest of corruption been more completely broken into than when the Theatre Royal, Barnwell, was converted into a Mission building. Situated on the main Newmarket-road, on the outskirts of the town, and surrounded by a labyrinth of smaller streets and alleys, the opportunities afforded for evil were simply unlimited. But in the midst of the darkness a bright light suddenly shone, and in a short time the character of the place was entirely changed. Week by week large gatherings have listened to the glad sound of the Gospel, to the salvation of their souls; and the workers and friends have met every year to thank God and take courage for another season of work.

The sixth of these annual gatherings was held on Tuesday, the 11th inst., when a large number partook of a hearty tea. This was followed by a public meeting, attended to overflowing.

The chair was taken by Rev. J. Delme-Radcliffe, who is the successor of Rev. Henry Trotter to the vicarage of the parish in which the work is carried on.

The Secretary, Mr. W. K. Vawser, who has laboured unceasingly for the Mission since its commencement, made some encouraging statements, showing that the interest had been undiminished, and they were able to commence the new year free of debt. He spoke very warmly of the help which the Evangelisation Society had given in providing preachers during the University vacations, and a special collection was made on its behalf. In conclusion, he offered a hearty welcome to the Vicar, and thanked him for his promise to take one of the services at an early date. Those who know the suspicion with which all work outside the control of the Church is regarded at University centres will rejoice when any attempt is made to break down such an unreasonable barrier. Letters were read from Mr. Charrington and several local ministers, expressing their regret at being unavoidably absent.

The Chairman said he was very glad of this opportunity to express his gratitude for the welcome accorded to him. Shortly after entering upon his duties he had received a letter from Mr. Vawser, assuring him of the good feeling of those who attended the theatre services. It is always pleasant, he said, in coming from an old sphere into a new, to have such cordial greetings. Though I am working at Christ Church, and you here, yet we are all on the same journey, and labouring for the same Master; and, therefore, I trust we shall be able to work together. What a change has come over Barnwell since I was here fourteen years ago. Instead of nonsense being talked on these boards, people are happy to listen to the Gospel of Christ. There has been a change in many hearts, too, since then. I do not go about my parish without hearing people say, "I go to the theatre because I got blessing there." The Gospel has a glorious transforming power, and by it all these changes have been brought about.

Rev. J. P. Campbell, Baptist minister, said he had known Mr. Radcliffe's three predecessors, and had loved them all. He had laboured fraternally and gladly with them, and was sure that such unity would greatly further the cause of Christ. He, too, had seen the fruit of the Mission in various parts of the town where he constantly visited, and heartily wished the labourers God-speed.

After prayer by Rev. M. Munro, Mr. G. E. Morgan, in a few words specially to young men, said that in his three years' work amongst public-houses, he had seen boys growing up into young men, and youths developing into manhood, who had at the end of that period acquired a taste for drink which they had not known at the beginning. There were some of them present, and he besought them to yield the best years of their lives to their Redeemer who had bought them. These anniversaries remind us of the rapidity with which year after year passes by; hence the importance of serving the Lord in the days of our youth.

Mr. J. A. Brown, of Norwich, in a racy and telling speech, urged that cheerfulness and brightness should always accompany earnestness. He believed the influence of tea-meetings was good, because they were always conducive to happiness and good temper. He had seen a good deal of Christianity as a reforming as well as a transforming power. It made a man improve his home, and tidily dress his wife and children, and this always tended to happiness. He believed that "Rejoice in the Lord alway" was as much a command as "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart." We should let the world see that at all times, in trial or comfort, we have a Divine Helper in whom we can rejoice.

Rev. W. R. Mowll (Church of England), London, who is always heartily received on these occasions, said he recognised many whom he had known in the devil's service. He gave a touching account of how he took the pledge eight years ago. He was endeavouring to persuade a navvy to abstain, but received the reply, "It's all very well for you to come and talk to me, but how do I know that you don't enjoy yourself with your wine when you are in college?" He at once decided to remove such a stumbling-block from his brother's way. His address bristled with striking incidents which he had met with in his work. He urged working men not to let go their Day of Rest. "Watch over it," he said. "See that it is not snatched away from you. It is your birthright, and if you allow it to slip through your fingers you will never get it back. Keep on the alert for every opportunity of making its security the more certain."

It was ten o'clock when the meeting terminated, which was characterised as the "best Anniversary the Mission had seen."

CARING FOR THE CHILDREN.

A PUBLIC meeting on behalf of the Cottage Home for little Children, Kingstown, Co. Dublin, was held on November 8, in Monkstown Schoolhouse, presided over by the Recorder of Dublin. Prayer was offered by the Rev. G. Mahaffy. Professor Barrett explained the objects of this almost unique charity, which, by admitting children from ten days old to six years, enables many mothers to earn their living honourably. The children of married parents only are admitted, and when either one or both parents are living, help is given by them towards the support of their children. Thus, on the death or sickness of a mother, the little children are taken care of while the father is at work; or the mother, on the death of her husband, is enabled to go to service, and to support herself, whilst helping to support her children.

Canon Staveley, Rev. W. E. Burroughs, Rev. J. S. Bird, Dr. MacDowel Cosgrave, Dr. W. G. Smith and others, spoke in support of the Home. The testimonies of the medical men were especially valuable, in showing the need of such a home to prevent the terribly high infant mortality that prevails in towns, largely owing to the neglect of young children put out to nurse. The hon. secretary of the Home is Miss Barrett, 6, De Vesci-terrace, Kingstown, co. Dublin, who will gladly give reports or further information.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN MISSION IN EGYPT—The Report of this Mission for the past year says:—"The disturbed political state of the country has not seriously hindered its progress; indeed, in some departments a great revival was working simultaneously with the depression of commerce, and many conversions were the result. Among the Moslems there is an onward movement, and a number of them have embraced Christianity. In the Congregational schools there is a great falling-off through inability of the Mission to pay adequate salaries to teachers. On this account, all the schools in Upper Thebaid are now closed. But the boarding and training schools progress and increase. The house-visitation, or zenana work, only pines for lack of more labourers."

EVENINGS AT THE Y.M.C.A.

186, ALDERSGATE-STREET, E.C.

DR. MONRO GIBSON LECTURES.

THE second lecture of the series was certainly not a whit behind the first in interest and worth. The audience was not quite so large. It was the evening of Lord Mayor's day, and that fearful and wonderful institution, the Lord Mayor's Show, seems for the nonce to turn the City world upside down. If there were any young men who preferred the glamour and gruesome humours of the streets to Dr. Gibson's lecture, one can only pity them, and pray they may have given to them a better mind.

The lesson of the lecture was the misery of a self-contained and selfish life. Towards the close of it, Dr. Gibson rather posed his audience by asking if they knew what were the recorded words repeated by our Saviour oftener than any others. Without pausing for a reply—which most probably he would not have got—he told us. They are given in the Gospels in varied phraseology; perhaps the version in John's Gospel is as striking as any: "He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal." Such was the experience of the man who speaks in Ecclesiastes. Having recapitulated a little, and referred to the pessimistic and materialistic views of "the sceptic preacher" in the earlier stages of his life, the lecturer said it would be well to notice how he had been living before he reached these conclusions. "I gave my heart to know wisdom. . . . I said in mine heart, Go to now, I will prove thee with mirth, therefore enjoy pleasure. . . . I sought in mine heart to give myself unto wine, . . . and to lay hold on folly." Was that a likely course to take in order to find out the truth? "Yet acquainting mine heart with wisdom." Oh, of course! So it is with every poor drunkard. They all begin in a very wise and moderate way, as they think. How they end is a different question. Let me advise every young man not to give himself to wine, if he would acquaint his heart with wisdom. When you give yourself to wine you have to leave wisdom behind you. This man goes on to say that he got to himself houses, and vineyards, and gardens, and orchards, and fruit trees, and servants, and maidens, and cattle, and silver, and gold, and singers and musical instruments of all sorts. In fact, he got as much magnificence about him as we have seen in the streets of London to-day. He indulged in everything that could minister to self-gratification—some of them innocent enough, and some of them perhaps not all innocent; but it was all for self. Happy man! surely. Nay, verily. He is honest enough to tell us he was not happy. It is not possible for a man who lives a selfish life to be happy. (This sentiment was greeted with a hearty cheer, which the lecturer said he was glad to hear.)

Having developed this point, he passed on to enquire how the man had been living in the days immediately before the close of the book. There is evidence of a growing disposition to think less of himself and more of others. "I returned and considered all the oppressions that are done under the sun." He finds no comfort in that, but he goes on to works of active beneficence, as the only kind of life that has any real satisfaction in it. In chapter xi. we find him saying, "Cast thy bread upon the waters." A wonderful difference! Before, it was: "I made me this and that and the other; I got me all delights;" it was all gathering and getting. Now it is not gather, but cast. Ah, yes! Casting bread, even though it be upon the waters, is far better than the gathering of silver and gold. Now it is not get, but give. He began with Number One; unfortunately a good many are inclined to end there. But by-and-by he gets to number two, and presently he advances to numbers seven and eight. "Give a portion to seven and also to eight." These figures mean more than we might think. I do not think they are used for purposes of restriction. "Seven" is the number of perfection. "Eight" is put in to show that it is better to err by excess than by defect. He seems to get wider and wider in his views. He actually suggests that it is a good thing to keep on sowing the seed, in all kinds of places, even though there be no certain prospect of return. "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand; for thou knowest not whether shall prosper this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good." In former times he would have said they would be alike bad; now it is the very opposite. He is done with vain agnostic speculations; he begins to act. There is much in that. Many are in difficulty and despondency because of such speculations. If they would do the first duty required of them—fear God and keep his commandments—the darkness would soon disappear.

In the closing portion of the lecture, which was a further development of the theme, Dr. Gibson quoted some very striking and appropriate stanzas from Mr. Robert Browning's poems. At the close he read selections from Tennyson's "Palace of Art," the teaching of which is remarkably parallel with the drift of the lecture. It all comes to this, said the Doctor, if you live a low life, you will have a low creed. If you live to eat, all of life that is worth talking about will be done when you are done eating. If you live to love, then life will never be done. Live to spend and be spent in the service of God and your generation, and your life will only be blossoming into eternal loveliness. On the other hand, the man who lives a sensuous and selfish life is only passing into the outer darkness. God help us to lose our life—the life of doubt and darkness—and to find the life of love, and faith, and glorious hope.

DR. R. ANDERSON ON DANIEL.

What bids fair to be a most instructive series of prophetic studies on the Book of Daniel, by Dr. Robert Anderson, began last Thursday evening. The goodly attendance of young men was an encouraging token of the interest now felt in the subject of prophecy. The address on this occasion was introductory, consisting of a brief but masterly outline of the events in the history of the chosen people up to the time of Nebuchadnezzar's vision. The circumstances of Daniel's position at the Babylonish court were recited, and the lessons to be learned from his faithful adherence to the law of God pressed home.

We have not space for a detailed report, but would counsel young men to attend these Thursday evening lectures. The real subject of the course will be entered on at the second lecture, this evening, so that those who were not present last week may still join in the study, without any serious disadvantage.

THE CHOLERA IN ITALY.

DEAR SIR,—The cholera here has gone, and there are only three patients to-day (Oct. 9) in the Lazaretto. The runaways are pouring in. It is said that 18,000 left the city the first two days of outbreak, and nearly 25,000 left before the troops were sent to surround the city; after that, up to a week ago, no one could leave, but anyone could come in. The number of dead up till now is 752.

The citizens of Spezia have behaved nobly. The Mayor was away when the plague broke out. He came back and personally attended to the sick, hand to hand with the two evangelical ministers. The Mayor, Sig. Raffaello de Nobile, was a staunch Catholic, but in that hour of calamity religious walls fell down. He took the cholera and died in a few hours. One of the aldermen was at once elected in his place, and he has worked with the same zeal as his predecessor. He has favoured our cause very much.

The authorities here are quite different in their treatment of Protestants to those in any other city. In Genoa, where I was a week, and visited the afflicted families of evangelicals, I found they were excluded from the help of the city, as no one could apply for food or relief without a written certificate, signed by the priest of the parish in which they lived. They had to be totally relieved by the evangelicals, who have behaved well and with much self-denial. In Genoa I was warmly welcomed by Waldensian, Baptist, Chiesa Libera, and by Methodist ministers. The bulk of the well-to-do people have not yet returned from the country seats. The cholera seems to have awakened a spirit of inquiry into Gospel truth. I found it quite easy to broach the subject of religion to anyone, and no difficulty in the way of conversation with private individuals in Genoa, where I gave away a number of Testaments, after having had a talk and called attention to some of the chief verses.

Spezia is blessed with two great workers, Mr. Philipini and Mr. Clarke. Each has about 600 children in their day schools. These have been closed up to this by the authorities, on account of cholera, but re-open next week. The present Mayor has handed over any orphans of Catholic parents that Mr. Clarke and Mr. Philipini would adopt. Mr. Clarke has taken twelve, and has placed them among the families of believers. Mr. Philipini, who has a wife and two children, has taken six into his own house. The priests in the place are rampant, but now helpless. Mr. Philipini has daily to refuse more scholars, for want of room and means. He has taken the six orphans on his own responsibility, and is going to trust to Jesus for means to support them, having only his small pay.

With 1200 in evangelical schools, Spezia's future looks brighter than that of any other Italian city. I prefer, however, to work in the more barren and difficult soil of the South of Italy, where there are much more opposition, ignorance, and superstition. I am leaving for Naples to-night. I ask the prayers of all friends of Italy, for us in foreign fields. Poste Restante, Naples, will be my future address.

Yours in Christian bonds,

E. C. NEWBERY.

DOCK LABOURERS' MISSION.—The first Free Tea for this winter season was lately given at the new branch of the Mission near the Victoria Docks. Some faithful Gospel addresses were given, and great attention prevailed. In the after-meeting four were brought to see their need of salvation, and left the Mission-room professedly rejoicing in Jesus. One poor man before tea had arranged with his wife to take her home some gin, but during the service he was so convinced that drink was ruining him and his wife, that he drew the bottle from his pocket and placed it under the seat. He returned to his home, declaring to his wife that he was a new man. The wife made great sport of him, and declared that he was mad.

Letters to the Editor.

THE WORLD IN THE CHURCH.

Dear Sir,—You have often called attention to unchristian methods of raising funds for religious purposes. Oh, that God's people would witness faithfully against this increasing evil! Surely theatrical entertainments are only promoted by the clergy when the spirit is well-nigh "quenched." But what shall we say to such entertainments, when they can be described as "A Grand Burlesque! 'Blue Beard; or, The Hazard of a Die!'" Now, the story of Blue Beard is a savage story of lust, murder, and revenge, and closes with the death of the impenitent sinner. Will it be believed, that the rector, curate, and communicants of a small country parish are inviting friends to witness their impersonation of Blue Beard, and his godless crew, before scenery painted by the curate, and in dresses supplied by a London theatrical costumier? Is modesty dead, that Christian men and women meet together to burlesque adultery and murder? and fear, that they pun upon sin's doom, here and hereafter, describing it as "the hazard of a die?"

The poor little children who are to bear their part in this exhibition may not, indeed, understand its coarser features; but will not the seeds of vanity, display, craving for excitement, be sown that night, to ripen for the harvest of the judgment? Do such clergy believe in a holy God? Do they dread sin? Do they credit the Bible utterances about eternal punishment?

If anything could throw a still more lurid light upon the "Entertainment," placarded in large letters, it would be the fact that twice during the current year children have been rendered motherless by parental unfaithfulness within the parish. The last scandal was not a month old when this "Grand Burlesque" was announced.

"O God, the heathen are come into thine inheritance!" "Help us, O God of our salvation, for the glory of thy Name, and deliver us, and purge away our sins, for thy Name's sake!"

I remain, yours truly, "Sorrow."

A NORWEGIAN PASTOR ON HIS DEFENCE.

Dear Sir,—A Norwegian Dissenter has in The Christian of October 2 mentioned me in a way which is as little according to Christian charity as to the truth. He says: "It seemed to be a strange coincidence that the one clergyman from Norway, who spoke about Christian courage and consistency in Christian life, should be the very one who, a few years ago, for conscience sake, left the Established Church, and, after a very short time, joined her again."

The truth is this: Nine years ago I, for conscience sake, resigned as minister in our State Church, not being able to confirm all children, to absolve all communicants, and to consecrate all marriages. Not until two years later I left the said Church, not for conscience sake, but from not being allowed to preach in the churches (although I never preached churchism, and although I kept close to the Lutheran Creed), and expecting to get more freedom outside the State Church. But I was mistaken, finding little concord among the Dissenters, and being myself, after my separation from the State Church, in every way hindered from working for Christ, and excluded from preaching in public halls, &c. So I was made to understand, that either I had to emigrate or to rejoin the Established Church, if I would continue to preach the Gospel (the Lutheran) at large, not trusting the Free Churchmen, and the Dissenter-law being rather narrow.

Two years later (not a very short while) I, after a hard struggle, rejoined the Church, in which I since then have worked, not as a minister, but as a free evangelist, and, as I hope, not without the blessing of God, preaching every Sabbath in the largest hall in Christiania to about 2000 hearers. Having had trouble both from State Churchmen and from Dissenters, I very often have felt my lonely position so difficult that I have been near to being overwhelmed and to giving it up, but the Lord has strengthened me, and has given me some "courage and consistency."

Being requested by the British Committee to give an address about the said Christian quality, I could not decline, although I fully felt my weakness. If the Norwegian Dissenter had known my trials, I am willing to believe that he would not have tried to hold me up to ridicule. I am sure that the British Dissenters do not agree with him, they having a regard for the Christian pioneer's life. In Copenhagen, for example, I had a conversation with Principal Cairns, who fully approved my position. I never, since my separation, have sued for an office in the State Church, but just as little have I been able to join the dissenting congregations—and that "for conscience sake." The Christian life inside those small societies is not in the least better than in the Established Lutheran Church. In Norway we now hope for a future deliverance of the National Church from bondage, as in Scotland; but not so much in the dissenting churches, which in our poor country, with its scattered population, seem to have very little prospects. DESTITUTE BOYS IN VENICE.

Sir,—When unexpectedly detained in Venice during the winter of 1880-81 I was deeply impressed by the necessity for some effort to rescue, from idleness and vice, some of the many poor boys to be met with in the streets, and to train them to industry, and above all to instruct them in the Word of God.

I applied to Rev. S. Bernatto, one of the pastors of the Evangelical Church in Venice, and with his able assistance I was enabled to commence the work in March, 1881. We began it as a day-school only, with twelve boys, mostly orphans, and utterly neglected and ignorant. We had no means of giving them night accomodation, and although from the first we gave them plenty of wholesome food, we found we could not do any permanent good unless we could provide a dwelling for them. In October, 1881, when Signor Bernatto was looking for such dwelling he found a large disused Roman Catholic Church, with an adjoining house, in which two flats were to be let which were adapted for our purpose. We hired these flats, and the treasurer of the Italian Free Church was enabled to collect the money to buy the church, which was repaired, and opened for the preaching of the Gospel in June, 1882. I mention this as one of the many ways in which it appears that the Lord has made the work of evangelisation and that of the Industrial Home to go on hand in hand; but the need for brevity compels me not to enlarge on this topic.

The Home has been maintained through the Lord's goodness manifested in the kind of contributions of his servants, so that we have now thirty boys who are brought up in "the nurture and admonition of the Lord." They are taught some work whereby they may gain an honest livelihood. We have masters and workshops for shoemaking, carpentering, wood-carving, and printing. Moreover, three boys who are very promising, both as regards Christian character and abilities, are being educated as Protestant schoolmasters. We are now earnestly desirous to buy a house, as the present habitation has some very unhealthy surroundings, and though there have, so far, been in Venice only a few recent cases of cholera, these form a warning that the disease may return at an earlier season next year.

There is now for sale a house peculiarly suitable for our Home, as it is very airy and healthy, and stands in a good-sized garden. This house, which is in good repair, is to be sold (with necessary furniture and garden, and a good well) for £920. Mr. R. C. L. Bevan has most kindly promised £100 as soon as the remainder may be raised, and £50 has been received as the profits of the sale of the Memoir of Captain M. M. Hammond, so that £770 remain to be collected. We are fervently praying that the Lord may dispose the hearts of his people to bestow this sum, if it be according to his will and for his glory. Letters may be addressed to me, care of General Sir Arthur Lawrence, Fox Hills, Chertsey.

Your obedient servant,

Anne Rosa Hammond.

THE LONDON EPISCOPAL MISSION.

As we go to press, the meetings of the Church of England London Mission are being held in the centre and East of London in no less than 164 parishes. Among the missioners are the well-known names of Rev. W. Hay Aitken, Rev. W. Haslam, Canon Hoare, Rev. Gordon Calthrop, Canon Cadman, Rev H. Webb-Peploe, and others. Mid-day addresses are also to be given at St. Andrew's Undershaft, Leadenhall-street, by Mr. Aitken, and at St. Paul's Cathedral, by Canon Furse.

Upwards of 150 clergymen are engaged as missioners, and a constant series of services will be held all the week, from seven o'clock in the morning until eight at night. In addition to many volunteers and the usual lay helpers of the various parishes, the London Diocesan Lay Helpers' Association, the Church of England Working Men's Society, and the Church Penitentiary Society, are supplying quite an army of church workers, and most strenuous efforts will be made to reach and interest the many thousands who are living in the metropolis unattached to any religious body. A house-to-house visitation, from Temple Bar to the East India Docks one way, and from London Bridge to Hackney Downs on the other, is being most energetically carried out; and while the Christian Evidence Society have arranged for a series of lectures at various centres, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel have contributed no fewer than nine millions of tracts, leaflets, hymns, &c., for gratuitous distribution.

On Saturday, the Bishop of Bedford, at the close of the afternoon service at St. Paul's Cathedral, addressed a few words of counsel and advice to the missioners engaged in the Mission. His lordship reminded them that the great multitude of their hearers would be ignorant of the simplest truths of Christianity, and they must not forget that thousands of the London poor were surrounded by circumstances, produced by poverty and overcrowding, which made even an endeavour to lead pure and Christian lives very difficult. They must teach the people that religion was a thing that should affect their daily lives, and that it was an advantage from a social point of view, as well as hereafter, because it would make their lives brighter, and purer, and happier. There would be many sick persons in the different parishes, and they must be sought out and visited. The Bishop also urged the missioners to devote themselves to Temperance work wherever they could, and he was still more anxious that they should do their utmost to promote purity and to rescue the fallen. One great object of their work should be to leave behind them amongst the men with whom they came into contact a chivalric respect towards the weaker sex, and an earnest desire to lead pure and stainless lives.

ROTHERHITHE.—Mr. T. Eyres, Hon. Secretary of the Children's Evangelistic Mission, completed, on the 7th inst., a ten days' service in connection with the Sunday-school of the Maynard-road Congregational Church, Rotherhithe. About one hundred children and youths professed to yield their hearts to the Lord Jesus. Some of them have been well instructed in the Sunday-school, but there are others who have belonged to no Sunday-school at all.

EAST LONDON TABERNACLE.—On Sunday evening last, Rev. Archibald G. Brown preached his annual sermon to "women only." The Tabernacle was densely crowded with the sisterhood. In order to secure the attendance of the right class, 12,000 tickets had been distributed in the various factories and in the poorest districts. Over 3000 accepted the invitation, and were present. After the first service an after-meeting was held, to which 1200 remained. Long after the crowd had dispersed there were groups of anxious inquirers being pointed to the Saviour. It was the largest gathering of women yet seen at these annual attempts to reach this class. Prayer is asked that many may be truly converted.

Notices of Books, &c.

FAITHFUL WORDS FOR OLD AND YOUNG. A. Holness. The annual volume will do good service in the homes of the poor.

THE WELCOME HOUR. S. W. Partridge & Co. The annual volume has plenty of engravings, and will prove welcome to all lovers of plain religious reading.

THE PILGRIM'S REST. 1s. J. E. Hawkins. The verses clustered together serve as morning and evening texts for each day of the month. Lady Hope furnishes a preface, and coloured illustrations greatly add to the beauty of the little book.

THE WHITE BEAR'S DEN. By A. L. O. E. Gall & Inglis. In the guise of a tale, largely founded on fact, Miss Tucker here gives a vivid account of missionary work among the everlasting snows of Labrador, as carried on by the Moravians. It is a story of earnest and self-denying consecration that all young people, especially all young ladies, should read.

THE POETICAL WORKS OF FRANCES RIDLEY HAVERGAL. 2 vols., 12s. J. Nisbet & Co. Now that we have in these two goodly books the complete offspring of Miss Havergal's prolific poetic muse, we understand to some extent what a priceless gift of God she was to her generation. Aye, and to many generations yet to come, for we believe the songs she has set agoing will echo and re-echo from human lips and hearts to the end of time. Those who are acquainted only with the strictly religious or evangelistic productions of Miss Havergal's pen will be surprised at the wide scope of her gracious "ministry of song." The commonest object in nature, or the most trivial event in daily life, seems to be transfigured into beauty under the spell of her sacred genius. These outpourings of a loving heart and a gifted intellect may well find an abiding place in the memory and meditation and song service of all who love the Lord she loved so well and served so faithfully.

THE ENGLISH VIA DOLOROSA; or, Glimpses of the History of the Agricultural Labourer. By RICHARD HEATH. 1s. Marlborough & Co. This remarkable Tract for the Times deserves a much better setting than it has received, but we hope no one will be deterred from its perusal by the rather unattractive guise in which it appears. As its title indicates, it is an outline sketch of the long and weary path of bondage and oppression that has been trodden during the past few centuries by the tillers of the soil in this "Christian" England of ours. At last the dawn is breaking, and the masses are learning to know and feel their power. The long denied rights of citizenship are almost within their grasp. We can only pray that the power they are soon to wield may be wisely and righteously directed, and that they may be delivered from the temptation to reprisals against the selfishness and tyranny that have so long kept them in shameful servitude. Mr. Heath has been at much pains to set forth in a striking and sympathetic way the sad story of the past. May he be rewarded by finding a great audience that will not only ponder and pray over his sermon, but purpose in their hearts to do something that will hasten the fulness of the coming day.

THINGS WHICH MUST SHORTLY COME TO PASS. By ROBERT E. MATHESON, Barrister-at-Law. Nisbet & Co. This book is described as presenting outlines of the Book of Daniel and the Revelation, with explanatory maps and diagrams. It has been the work of years, and has evidently been a study pursued con amore by the author. We doubt not that he, like every one else who reads and keeps the things revealed in the Apocalypse, has proved the blessing promised at the beginning of the book; but we believe that the blessing lies in perceiving and being influenced by the principles upon which God governs, and Jesus saves, and the Spirit comforts, rather than in constructing a scheme of fulfilment. It is one of the objections which this school of interpreters makes to the historical system, that the latter requires a knowledge of history which uneducated persons do not possess. But it is certain that it requires a very special kind of education to apprehend the teaching of a book like this; and the study has this disadvantage, that it differs in many points from other schemes, as they do from each other; and all alike have this further disadvantage, that the suggested schemes can only after all be speculation. There are, however, many items of information which cannot but be valuable to every intelligent reader of Daniel and the Revelation.

ALMANACKS. Life of Faith Almanack, by Rev. Evan Hopkins (Marshall Brothers, 1d.), contains outline of Bible-readings, in addition to the usual daily texts. The Believers' Almanack (Alfred Holness, 1d.) has several instructive brief articles, designed to establish young Christians. King's Messenger Almanack (Crouch-end-hill, N.), and Faithful Words Almanack (Alfred Holness), are attractive sheet almanacks, 1d. each.

THE UNIQUE GRANDEUR OF THE BIBLE. By Rev. WILLIAM ANDERSON, M.A. Hatchards. This work is described as a new plea for an old book, in six chapters, and will be found worthy of careful perusal. It deals effectively with modern destructive criticism, and shows conclusively how firmly the old Book withstands all efforts to shake its truthfulness, or undermine its foundations. For young men who are in danger from sceptical influences and adverse critical studies, the volume will be found very suitable, and, indeed, is admirably adapted for general usefulness.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. have commenced the re-issue in monthly parts of Old and New Edinburgh. Nothing is more interesting to the student of history than the record of the rise and development of our leading cities, and we trust many new and young readers will be found for this very complete and attractive work.

Among the "Illustrated Volumes for Children and Young People," recently published by Messrs. Cassell & Co., we warmly commend their excellent edition of BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS (cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.). The type is large and comely; the illustrations are very many and very good; the notes, by Rev. Robert Maguire, are profuse, pointed, and pithy. Altogether it makes a very desirable gift-book for a thoughtful boy or girl.

A very different book is THE LITTLE FOLKS' OUT AND ABOUT BOOK (5s.), but in its way equally attractive. All the fine pictures that have ever been drawn to illustrate the sunshine, the rain, the wind, the snow, the fields, the streets, the lanes, the sea, the river, and the wood seem to be collected into one art gallery. "Chatty Cheerful," who is responsible for the running literary descriptions, amply justifies his title, and all the little folks who make up his "out and about" party will vote him a highly instructive and entertaining companion.

 The author of the book "Martin Luther: Student, Monk, Reformer," reviewed in a recent issue, is Mr. John Rae—not James Roe, as stated.

A selection from the works of Jeremy Taylor, with an introduction by Archdeacon Farrar, is about to be published by Messrs. Marcus Ward and Co., Limited.

We have also received the following books:—

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

FRENCH SAILORS IN CARDIFF.—Mr. John Sanders, a Christian teacher of the French language in this port, has lately opened a Mission-room for French Sailors at 166, Bute-road. During the few weeks since it was opened a large number of this class have visited the rooms, and a good work is being carried on by Mr. Sanders and his helpers.

CHIPPENHAM.—Messrs. Hurditch and Spurr have finished a successful evangelistic Mission in this town. For a fortnight they laboured in the Station Hill Baptist Chapel. The meetings grew daily in interest and numbers. The services during the third week were conducted in the Temperance Hall, and were helped on by all the ministers of the town and their congregations.

TUNBRIDGE, WILTS.—Messrs. Mateer and Parker have been with us, holding an Evangelistic Mission. The services increased in interest as they proceeded, and on the last day great numbers attended each service. As far as we could see, much spiritual good will be the result, and many brought to Christ.

Bethesda Chapel. THE PASTOR.

PECKHAM.—A good work has been commenced at the new Public Hall, in the densely populated district of Rye-lane. Several ministers have secured the hall for holding evangelistic services on Sunday afternoons and evenings. The opening services were conducted on Sunday week by Rev. C. Marsack Day and Rev. J. T. Briscoe. In the evening an overflow service was held in the lower hall. Prayer is earnestly desired for this work.

REV. W. HASLAM AT RYDE.—St. James' Church, Ryde, has again been visited by Mr. Haslam, who conducted twelve days' special services, morning and evening. His second visit has been marked even by a more real awakening and deeper spiritual blessing than the previous Mission some months ago. Mrs. Haslam has been doing good work among the women. It has been a time of refreshing from the Lord—a time to be long remembered.

MR. JOHN CHAPMAN, of Plymouth, has lately completed a twelve weeks' evangelistic tour in the midland and northern counties, including a longer or shorter stay at Birmingham, Wolverhampton, Derby, Nottingham, Manchester, Darlington, Stockton-on-Tees, Middlesboro', and Sunderland. Much of the work was done in the open air; everywhere the Gospel message met with a courteous hearing, and in not a few cases there were evident results. Mr. Chapman thinks that this itinerant work is of great value and ought to be far more largely engaged in.

PORTSWOOD, SOUTHAMPTON.—Mr. and Mrs. Somerset Gardner have concluded ten days' Gospel meetings at the Brunswick Rooms in this neighbourhood, and the Lord has richly blessed their labours. One evening Mr. Gardner related his personal experience of Anglican Catholicism, and his conversion; at the same time, showed the spread of Catholicism, both Roman and Anglican, in this country, and the evils arising from the Confessional, with solemn warning to parents against sending their children to Roman Catholic schools, &c. Mr. Gardner had also two successful meetings for children. Bible readings for women were held on three afternoons; they were truly times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

E. M. W.

HAWICK, N.B.—The Home Mission of this town opened a handsome new Mission hall on Friday week. It is capable of holding over 1000 persons. The total cost of the site and alterations is fully £1100, of which £400 has been subscribed. A Christian Conference was held on the following day. Mr. Dunn, evangelist, commenced a series of meetings in the hall on Sunday evening.

CHURCHDOWN.—In this Gloucestershire village of 700 souls, last March a young farmer gave the use of his barn. George Tuffen, of the London Evangelisation Society, for a fortnight strove to awaken the people, and sowed much precious seed. Again, in June, he and John Dyer conducted a fourteen days' Mission. Since then services have been held every Sunday night, but the results have not been marked. On Friday week Mr. Opie Rodway commenced a five days' Mission, which has resulted in a wonderful awakening. Mr. Rodway's stay was unfortunately limited, but the Mission will be continued by others. Prayer is earnestly asked that the work of the Spirit may be carried on without hindrance.

BURTON-ON-TRENT.—A week's Gospel services for children have been held in this town. The meetings were conducted by Mr. F. D. Jones, of the Children's Special Service Mission, assisted occasionally by ministers of the town. A number of children and young people gathered together from evening to evening, and much interest was taken in the services by teachers and friends. At the close of each meeting a goodly number of young folks stayed to have converse with Mr. Jones or some of the teachers present. The Sunday following the days of special effort, Mr. Jones met many of the teachers of the town, and earnestly exhorted them to sustain their important work among the lambs of the flock.

BLACKDOWN HILLS MISSION.—After an unusually fine summer of tent work on the hills and the villages of Devon, Somerset, and Dorset, with much to encourage the various labourers in the work of the Lord, I have spent eight weeks in Gloucestershire, Norwich and neighbourhood, Eastbourne, Hastings, and Brighton. There has been blessing in every place to souls. I send this note that those who have been helpers by prayer may unite in thanksgiving to God for fruit seen, and yet to be seen in due time, of the fellowship of saints in prayer and testimony. I have just returned to the Hills for the winter work, and the many needs of the poor and sick. I would ask the fellowship of your readers in prayer for much blessing to be brought out of the many trials in this day of needs. GEO. BEALEY.

Clayhidon, Wellington, Somerset.

Mission and other Appeals.

MISS GERTRUDE W. BALL, Maidstone House, Blackheath Hill, S.E., asks for 1000 old Christmas Cards to distribute amongst the inmates of the workhouse on Christmas Day.

DOCK LABOURERS' MISSION.—Great distress prevails among the unemployed labourers, so that many of them are unfit for work for want of food. Funds are much needed, and also clothing to assist them through the coming winter. Mr. C. H. COLEMAN, 26, Chamber-street, London Docks, E. will thankfully acknowledge any help given for these poor men.

ROCKFIELD MODEL FARM.—This farm in Ireland, 300 acres in extent, has been given for the purposes of the Irish Church Mission in their work among the young. £2500 is needed to stock the farm, provide the requisite implements and machinery, and pay the first year's working expenses. Miss DAVIES, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin.

CONVALESCENT HOME, JEVINGTON, POLEGATE, SUSSEX.—This institution receives surgical and other cases which could not be admitted into most convalescent homes. Over 400 patients have passed through it with beneficial results. Help is much needed at present, especially to provide a supply of coals for the winter. Subscriptions are received by Rev. E. W. FOLEY, Jevington Rectory, Polegate.

BIRMINGHAM.—£1000 is urgently wanted for the purchase of a large Mission hall in All Saints' Parish. The hall, which consists of two large rooms, each capable of holding 400 persons, and two small rooms, suitable for classes, mothers' meetings, &c., is situated in the poorest and most populous part of the parish. Contributions will be thankfully received and acknowledged by Rev. PERCIVAL E. WILSON, All Saints' Rectory, Birmingham.

EAST LONDON TRACT SOCIETY.—During the past ten months the seventy workers have judiciously distributed upwards of 220,000 Gospel tracts, Bibles, portions of Scripture, &c., to emigrants, sailors, railway men, potmen, dock labourers, in lodging-houses, cemeteries, parks, docks, &c. We have also a large Gospel hall for meetings of dock labourers, &c., close to East India Docks, and for those unable to attend other places of worship. £50 are needed to clear off debt, to carry on the many branches of work during the winter, and for our dock labourers' free meals. GEORGE FULLER, 47, Dee-street, Poplar, London, E., is Superintendent.

MENTAL AND PHYSICAL TOIL.

THE most successful methods of curing disease rely more upon the healing power of Nature than upon medicinal remedies, and when the natural influence of Magnetism is allied with the recuperative force of the system, it energises the whole organism most successfully. The results accruing from its use clearly prove that Nature is the healer, and that by aiding Nature we effect a restoration as certainly as water when applied to the root vitalizes every branch and leaf of a drooping plant. The general results of Odo-Magnetic Treatment establish its claim to a first place amongst Nature's remedies. It penetrates and permeates every atom and tissue of the living organism, every deep-seated gland; but it cannot injure the finest capillaries in the most delicate membrane. Every corpuscle of the blood is impregnated with its vitalizing influence, consequently every organ of the body is simultaneously energised. This potent force of Magnetism can be made sufficiently powerful to lift several tons' weight from the earth; but its influence on the nervous system is as subtle and intangible as thought, which it quickens into vigour, and gives resolution of purpose to concentrate the mind upon chosen subjects of study, so harmonising the mental and physical as to restore the conscious possession of a sound mind in a sound body.

Although urging these facts, we do not wish to imply that Magnetism is a cure all; but we do say that it is a restorative calculated to alleviate and gradually eradicate all remediable weaknesses, and remove the chronic affections arising therefrom. By careful adaptation this powerful energiser may become a remedy of the most general application. Its efficacy is now generally admitted as a controlling agent in nervous affections, and in all forms of general debility it has, perhaps, no rival in all the resources of nature. As a means of providing against the ill effects of mental and physical toil it will undoubtedly be welcomed by many; and our advice respecting its early application should be accepted by such as lack usual energy, while the help it affords to those who have already allowed health to decline till they need a cure, should need no room for indecision as to the choice of the method of treatment they will adopt.

From Mr. J. S. ALLEN, University House, Arthur-street, Belfast.

"October 15, 1884.

"Having been for years overtaxed in mind and body through close application to business, entailing severe suffering from indigestion, sleeplessness, and spinal weakness, I sought your opinion and advice.

"I am pleased to tell you that after four months of your treatment, I can fully endorse your description of what Magnetism can effect in derangements arising from mental and nervous causes. Your method of adapting the remedy to the requirements of each case is to my mind using this most effective remedy in the best way. I had worn something of the kind for twelve months without the slightest benefit previous to my knowledge of your treatment, but since you prescribed for me I feel as though I had a new lease of life. I am strong, robust, and vigorous, and I consider your treatment to be the best investment I ever made."

Letters commendatory of Mr. Garratt's treatment by Magneto-Electricity have been received from hundreds of persons in all classes of society. A private list of 950 names as referees can be had on application. Consultation free, personally or by letter. B. CORSON GARRATT, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

HOW TO STUDY THE BIBLE.

Some Thoughts and Suggestions on Profitable Bible Reading.

Price 1d. 7s. 6d. per 100.

"I don't think there is a book in the world we neglect so much as the Bible. Merely reading the Bible is no use at all without we study it thoroughly, and hunt it through as it were for some great truth. Read the Bible, my friends, as if you were seeking for something of value. It is a good deal better to take a single chapter and spend a month on it, than to read the Bible at random for a month."

JOHN WESLEY:

HIS LIFE AND TIMES.

By JOHN W. KIRTON, LL.D., Author of "Happy Homes, and How to Make Them," "Buy Your Own Cherries," &c.

"The spirit of a great reformer's life has seldom been presented in a form at once so brief and lively. . . . The memoir pourtrays Wesley in all the aspects of a character that was many-sided. Every page sparkles with edifying anecdote. . . . The book costs only a SIXPENCE, and ought to have a sale of many thousands."—Christian Leader.

"We should suppose this SIXPENNY book will sell by thousands, and do good wherever it finds a place."—Baptist Messenger.

"Written in a popular style; yet of high literary merit. One hundred and twenty-eight pages, crown 8vo., 6d.! After this, who need be without a Life of Wesley?"
Primitive Methodist Magazine.

"In some nineteen chapters Dr. Kirton tells, in a popular and fascinating style, the life of the Great Founder of Methodism. It is, emphatically, the Biography of Wesley for the people. The volume contains 128 pages; and the price is only SIXPENCE. To every Primitive Methodist we say, Get it at once!"—Primitive Methodist.

"The happiest and most successful attempt yet made to present, in a brief compass, a really life-like account of Mr. Wesley and his work. We most heartily commend it. A copy should be in every home. The Publishers and Author deserve universal thanks for placing within reach of every one in the community such a gem of a book."—Irish Christian Advocate.

HIS LIFE AND TIMES.

By J. R. ANDREWS, Author of "The Life of Oliver Cromwell."

"A SIXPENNY well-printed and well-told life of this extraordinary man of God deserves a world-wide circulation, and will probably be read by thousands."—Baptist Messenger.

"A marvellous record of earnest labours and successful work; one, too, that may be purchased for SIXPENCE."—Irish Congregational Magazine.

"We cannot imagine a better SIXPENNYWORTH of human authorship. Oh that every Minister in the three kingdoms possessed this 'Life of Whitefield,' and would read it through! Why, it would set the Church in a blaze! It would be a noble thing if some wealthy man would see to it that this biography was placed in every manse in the United Kingdom."
REV. C. H. SPURGEON in The Sword and the Trowel.

"A most interesting, and withal marvellously cheap, biography of the great Evangelist of the last century—the Moody of his day."—Baptist Witness.

HENRY MOORHOUSE,

THE ENGLISH EVANGELIST.

With Lithographed Portrait.

"Henry Moorhouse was of a gentle, winning disposition; and I do not know of a single instance, in a wide-spread work, in which he left any but friends behind him. Denominational jealousies were forgotten; Christians of every name gathered about him; and ministers with long years of successful work, and young converts just entering the field, alike sat at his feet to study the Word. I feel that I have lost a dear friend, and one that in a long and intimate personal acquaintance was very helpful to me. I hope that the story of the evangelist will lead many, who have not come under his personal influence, to a more thorough study of God's Word; knowing how God has used and blessed it in the work in which our friend Moorhouse was engaged. And may they be able to say, as he could, 'Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path.'"—D. L. MOODY.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONSUMPTION.—CASE of Mrs. L. JEFFCOAT, SUTTON BRIDGE (LINC.)

The first communication was dated Oct. 29 of last year. For three years the patient's health had been gradually failing. Several relatives had suffered with chest disease.

At this time there was great loss of flesh, and general weakness; pains in chest and right side, expectoration being purulent and streaked with blood, breathing constantly affected, hectic flushes at night, swelling at the feet and ankles.

Medicine and advice were forwarded immediately. Letter received Dec. 4 reported "general improvement, expectoration free from blood, breathing better, hectic flushes less, no night perspirations, strength increased." There were palpitations of the heart, for which instructions were given and medicine, &c., forwarded as before.

In the course of another month she was greatly improved. In the cold weather remained somewhat at a standstill, but in the spring became thoroughly well.

In a letter dated May 11 the husband writes:—"It is some weeks since my wife discontinued your Balsam, &c. I am pleased to say she now feels well, and joins me in thanking you for your kindness, and above all for the means you were in restoring her to health."—Station Cottage, Bridge-road, Sutton Bridge, Linc.

Foxe's Book of Martyrs.

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of Primitive and Protestant Martyrs in all parts of the World.

EDITED BY

Rev. J. MILNER, M.A.,

With Essay and Additions by Rev. INGRAM COBBIN, M.A.

With Twelve Full-Page Illustrations.

"As a complete edition of Foxe's Martyrs, this is by far the handiest and most attractive we know. In paper, type, illustrations, and binding, the book does great credit to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, to whom the Christian public are indebted for this timely publication."—Primitive Methodist.

"Messrs. Morgan and Scott have just published a new edition of Foxe's Book of Martyrs, which deserves a word of greeting. The present edition extends far beyond Foxe's times; having been enriched by the Rev. J. MILNER and others; and brought down to the present century by the Rev. INGRAM COBBIN. Altogether it is a cheap and complete Book of Martyrs, well printed and elegantly bound; and suitable for a gift-book."—Record.

"We cannot but express the desire that the circulation of this volume may be as extensive as its merit so well demands. It is elegant in the upgetting; and paper and print are a credit to its enterprising publishers."—British Friend.

The Tabernacle, The Priesthood, AND The Offerings;

With the Spiritual Lessons derived from the Ritual and Ceremonies of the Old Dispensations.

BY

HENRY W. SOLTAU,

Author of "The Holy Vessels of the Tabernacle," "The Soul and its Difficulties," &c., &c.

With Memoir of the Author,

FOUR BEAUTIFUL COLOURED ILLUSTRATIONS.

And numerous smaller Engravings.

"The book is full of teaching, spiritual and far-reaching; and we have much enjoyed reading it. The work is a good five shillings'-worth."—Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, in The Sword and Trowel.

"Of this work we can speak very highly. It is not a mere description of Temple Ritual and Jewish Ceremonies; but is more of a commentary and exposition; and is rich in evangelical teaching. The illustrations in colour and gold are exceedingly beautiful."—Christian Age.

"The reading of this book has been to us a precious means of grace; and to all who love truth sweetly told we advise its study. It is full of Christ. The truths of the Gospel gleam on every page; and we feel that we shall be doing good work for any Christian brother whom we may induce to read it. Nothing seems strained; all comes out naturally. Of the get-up of the book, the binding is good, the printing is exquisite, the illustrations are elegant, and taken altogether we have not derived for some time so much pleasure and profit in reading a single volume."—The Baptist Messenger.

John, whom Jesus Loved:

A Sketch of the Character, Writings, Theology, and Influence of the Beloved Disciple.

BY

REV. J. CULROSS, D.D., M.A.,

Principal of Bristol Baptist College.

"In Dr. Culross' new work, entitled 'John, whom Jesus Loved,' we have found a book. It is part of our appointed suffering in this present life to be compelled to winnow heaps of literature, with great result in chaff and dust, and small gain in bread-corn; and therefore our rejoicing is the greater when grain comes to our garner as clean provender in good weight and measure. It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes; but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, in The Sword and Trowel.

"Thoughtful chapters based on the leading incidents in the life of John. The admirable manner in which the subject is treated, and the excellence of the ideas themselves, should win for this work a large share of attention."—Rock.

"In a series of nine chapters of singular freshness and beauty the various aspects of the life, labour, and teachings of the beloved disciple are traced. While a tender affection for the subject of the work is evident, anything like hero worship is carefully avoided, and it is never forgotten that 'the servant is not greater than his Lord.' For the young Christian just entered upon the new life, as well as for the more advanced believer, the book is invaluable."

The Christian.

AN OLD MANUSCRIPT.

[The following is a copy of a manuscript, dated "Ye 30th of ye 6th Mo. 1759."]

I Christopher Wilson, of Greysouthen, in the county of Cumberland, have been through Divine goodness mercifully favoured with the blessed visitations of Divine truth, not only to myself for my own reconciliation to Almighty God, but He hath opened my heart at times, largely to preach the glad tidings of the Gospel to others. I had a sufficiency to live comfortably upon from my father, with a prudent industry; yet I have been by little and little drawn into trading to foreign parts, and the Lord hath (I have seen) blasted my endeavours. Yet in hopes to regain what I had lost, I ventured out again, with a prospect, as I thought, to regain it, and still have been baffled in all my designs, until I am distressed in body and mind.

I wish it may be a warning to all friends for the future, not to launch out in such a manner—those in the ministry especially. Food and raiment are enough; a peaceful mind is more than all the world. If we could gain ever so much, to live in a cottage and have an easy mind, and eat bread and drink water, is much preferable to large dealings in trade. Oh, that you ministers of truth may take warning, and be content with what you have. A low station best suits a living minister of Christ; to eat sparingly and clothe just decently; to have the mind free from cumber, and open to receive every impression of truth, and free to run when He draws. He can bless beyond your expectation; He can open a way for you unseen, or blast all your endeavours if you extend beyond what is prudent, or be bad examples to others.

I now see my mistake, though I acted with no bad design. Having at first lost a little, I then promised if I could get as much as to leave off where I began, I would be happy and content; with a full purpose and resolution to drop there, and to live quietly. But one misfortune hath followed another; one loss added to another hath brought me to this distress of mind. And now I conclude it will break my heart that anybody should lose by me, or that great Name I have endeavoured to promote by experience of body, substance, and all I was capable, should be evil spoken of on my account. Ah, this comes near to me, and rends my very soul, and weighs me to the very grave. Would the mighty Lord, whom I desire to serve, if I am stripped like Job, but throw something in my way, but to leave me food and raiment, a cottage of the meanest, and water to drink, it would content me, provided that excellent Name might not pass unstained.

I condemn to the world (whoever may see this), and utterly detest my own proceedings herein, and testify to all people that I have missed my way. And yet I have some faith that good providence will not leave me destitute of the comforts of his Holy Spirit, which I value more than all. And if I go to the grave with anxiety and distress of mind, I have comfortable hope that God will forgive me. Can I but pay everybody their own, and leave me neither bed nor bread, I shall go down to the grave in peace, and have a confidence that the Lord will provide for my offspring. Oh, my poor wife and tender babes, may God be with you and bless you, but with increase of goodness. Let food and raiment content you. A cottage and an easy mind is a king's palace to a virtuous heart. If my friends condemn me, I submit to it, if it may but wipe off the reproach from truth.

I conclude with this unfeigned prayer; "Good Lord, bear up my drooping spirit; be with me in the night season; keep me from despair. I have no trust but in Thee; I have no pleasure but in thy heavenly presence. A cloud is come over every enjoyment; thick darkness covers all visible enjoyments; pain, anxiety, and the gloomiest prospects appear in every part of this visible creation. Lord deliver me, Lord save me, Lord appear now for my help. It is now the needful time. Thou deliveredst Daniel from the den of lions, and the three children from the fiery furnace, and caused thy Son to walk with them in the midst of the flames that they escaped unhurt. Is thy arm shortened, or hath space and time worn out the omnipotence of Thee, thou Deliverer out of all distresses?"

"Ah, put hooks in the jaws of the great leviathan that plays on the troubled sea, and disdains all superiority, and, Lord, I will submit to thy work; I'll follow Thee what way thou leadest. But oh let thy own Name be preserved by me and not stained on my account. Open a way for me through the great deep to get clear on firm land, that no deceit, no counsel, but honesty and uprightness, may ever be my guide; that whether it be to remove to America or what way to turn, make way—make way. Thou art as strong as ever; omnipotence stands at thy right hand and unconquerable strength and majesty at thy left, that I may yet say by experience, Thou rulest in the kingdom of men. Lord, keep me in patience, in love, in divine meekness, to conquer all my enemies. Thine is the kingdom, power, and glory, for ever and ever. Amen, amen."

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, LIMERICK.—This is a most important garrison town, as there are always infantry, cavalry, and artillery stationed here. For some years past a quiet, but most real work has been carried on amongst the soldiers here by Miss Wilkinson. There is no refreshment-bar at this Institute, but night after night the reading-room is filled with men anxious to hear the simple story of God's love. Better than all, many souls have been won for our Lord and Saviour. The writer speaks from intimate acquaintance with the work. This Institute is entirely supported by voluntary contributions, and is now in much need of help, which may be sent to Miss Wilkinson, 2, Pery-street, Limerick.—Yours faithfully,

Geo. C. Grubb.

IMPOSSIBLE!

"Impossible for God to lie."—Heb. vi. 18.

Truth amongst men of the world is certainly very far from being the sacred thing it is with God. The winked at falsities in business life, the deception which is of such common occurrence; the prevarication and exaggeration, even in ordinary conversation, are some of many proofs which might be mentioned. The importance of strict adherence to truth cannot be too strongly impressed upon the minds of the young. The solemn fact should be brought before them that God classes falsehood amongst the worst and most glaring of sins. (Rev. xxi. 8, and xxii. 15.) In his description of the heavenly Jerusalem, He declares "there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie" (Rev. xxi. 27).

Very many passages in God's Word clearly show that "lying lips are an abomination to the Lord," and the swift and startling punishment of Ananias and Sapphira is an awful illustration of the words, "A lying tongue is but for a moment." Our God is pre-eminently a God of truth, and alike faithful to his promises and to his threatenings. The Scriptures teem with examples which might easily be given, but we wish to dwell just now upon the way in which this grand declaration, "Impossible for God to lie," may strengthen and build up his people.

First, then, a word to those doubting, trembling ones who have been seeking the Lord, it may be, for a long time, but who fear they have not yet found Him. To such (if they are really in earnest, and are not indulging in any known sin) we would say, take that verse in John vi. 37: "Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out," and write underneath it, asking that his Spirit may show you its truth, "Impossible for God to lie." Therefore, impossible to cast you out; impossible to do anything but to receive you as his pardoned and adopted child. Now take the comfort of this, and doubt no more; and should the adversary suggest suppositions to the contrary, turn round upon him, and bid him remember that it is "impossible for God to lie," and that you are determined henceforth, by his grace, to trust your God and Saviour's word, and to lay hold of this strong consolation as an anchor of the soul.

Then there are others who realise their pardon through Christ, and know themselves "accepted in the Beloved," but they are longing for more unbroken communion, and to abide continually in Christ. They want, in fact, deliverance from the power of sin; and it is to be had in Christ, "who is, of God, made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." Is it not written, "Sin shall not have dominion over you"? And "it is impossible for God to lie." Remind Him of this, dear child of God, and trust Him to keep you dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto Him through Jesus Christ.

And some whose eyes fall upon these words may be in trouble, difficulty, or perplexity, and almost every way they turn things seem against them, and faith in a heavenly Father's pitifulness and care is at a low ebb in their hearts. Take this word, poor, troubled souls, "He careth for you" (1 Peter v. 7), and write underneath it, "Impossible for God to lie," asking Him at the same time to let his Spirit breathe it home to you with power. Oh what a sweet solace! the God of the whole earth cares for you! He is not unmindful of you, though unbelief whisper that He is. Remember, He ever takes note of the fall of a sparrow, and He has said you are of more value than many sparrows. Yea, such is his deep interest in you that the very hairs of your head are numbered. Cast all your care upon Him who careth for you, as He invites you to do. Spread the trouble, whatever it may be, before Him, and help or deliverance will sooner or later surely come. Has he not said, "Call upon Me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me" (Ps. l. 15), and "it is impossible for God to lie." "Hath He said and shall He not do it, or hath He spoken and shall he not make it good?"

"Impossible for God to lie!" What a powerful tonic for the weak faith that feels itself so feeble in grasping the grand promises which are all Yea and Amen in Jesus Christ, and yet which we fail to appropriate because we secretly think they will never be ours. "Impossible for God to lie!" What a rock whereon to take our stand! What a sweet pillow of hope, yea, more than hope, a pillow of certainty upon which to rest the weary head! Dear fellow-believer, ponder this glorious declaration from our God; repeat it over and over to yourself until it sinks deeply into your heart, and by his Spirit's power it will lift you grandly up, and will reinvigorate your whole spiritual being.

HUMAN SUFFERING AND HEAVENLY COMFORT.

By PASTOR FUNCKE, Bremen.

THERE is a great deal of interest to be seen in the Tower—the old gloomy citadel of London. But I am not going to vex or gratify my readers by showing them the immense dead capital represented by the Crown jewels, nor to frighten them by exhibiting the collection of weapons and instruments of torture, the product of several centuries. No; I shall only take them to the spot where tears and groanings have been most abundant. We will cross the yard to the left, and ascend the "Beauchamp Tower," which was used as a prison to those transgressors of the law who were of noble blood—to men of quality who had become real or supposed criminals. Within those dark arches of blackened stone, with damp, icy walls, and dreadfully small windows, I spent an hour of great edification. But I was thus edified because I perceived how a good many of those who had suffered in this place, through their sufferings had been brought into the way of eternal glory.

Of this, the walls give evidence. When your eyes have grown accustomed to the dim twilight of the prison, you will see that the stone walls are covered with rough sculptures. And those sculptures were executed by the noble prisoners who had been imprisoned here as traitors to their country, as rebellious subjects, as perpetrators of shameful crimes, or even for the sake of their faith. While those men were cut off from wife and children, friend and brother, from their estates and pleasures, nay, from the whole outer world, still they were left free to do one thing, viz., to cut out something in the wall by way of expressing the thoughts of their hearts, and they made an extensive use of this liberty. The ninety-one inscriptions and pictures seem to show, as far as they can be interpreted, that those noble sinners had been taught by affliction how to pray, that the new man of the heart had been quickened by earthly sufferings, and that the world above became a bright reality to them as the world of sense vanished from their sight.

Look what one captive lord has written: "It is better to go to the house of mourning than to go to the house of feasting." In the dark and desolate prison that man must have found something which the banquets, hunting parties, and tournaments of former years had failed to give him.

Close by this another has cut out "Rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation, continuing instant in prayer." We perceive that the apostolic word has become a heavenly ladder, by which the prisoner has ascended into the atmosphere of true life. Here is a roughly carved cross, and beneath the cross a hand carrying a bleeding heart as a sacrifice, and above is the family crest; this is so touching and impressive that I will not spoil it by any remark. Another has written, "The more we suffer with Christ in this world, the greater will be our glory in the world to come;" even this inscription needs no explanation.

It is evident that the aristocracy of that time were truly familiar with the Bible; whether this is so in the present age I cannot tell. No doubt the prisoners in the Tower were, in a great measure, in spite of their rank, men of but little culture (judging from the life and customs of the nobility in former centuries), but they must have possessed an inward fund of religion, which worked itself to the surface in times of trial. A proof of this is the following artless work of art: another plain cross, placed on a rock, and a man kneeling in prayer beneath it; a simple and most affecting autobiography. Without words the imprisoned man is thereby saying: "In the prison I have once more learnt to pray; I recovered my soul as I buried it in the Cross of Calvary."

How rich were those men in the midst of their poverty! In this place of shame, want, and gloom, they learnt to accuse, not the bad world, nor the bad men, but their own hearts. And then they attained by degrees to a holy calmness and resignation, nay eventually to a state of praise and rejoicing through faith in Christ, the Great Deliverer.

Happy the man who takes the seed of God's holy Word with him into the paths of the wilderness, into the dark chambers of suffering. He shall neither want nor perish, even if everything else should fail. He will acknowledge God's justice, accept his chastisement, and joyfully prove the truth of what is written: "The Lord will make the wilderness like Eden, and the desert like the garden of the Lord; joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving and the voice of melody."

But, alas! though it is a terrible thing to say, yet it is but too true that even in Christian countries we find only a few who really know what the Gospel is, and what God means by sending us tribulation. He whose work takes him a great deal among the suffering and miserable, will every day have occasion to learn that out of ten there are always nine who understand nothing either of the blessed effects of God's discipline, or of his gracious purposes towards them on the whole. When overtaken by grief and affliction, they either become disconsolate, or, as it were, petrified, or they ask, in the spirit of the Pharisee, "How is it that God makes all this happen unto me, who have never harmed anyone?" Or they rebel against Almighty God, saying, in a cold and bitter tone of voice, "Are we still to believe that God is love?"

Now, he who, in imitation of Christ, wants to become "a fisher of men," will seek out his heart-sick and afflicted fellow-men who are longing for comfort and not knowing where to get it. In times of trouble the Gospel will find a ready acceptance by such as have not wilfully destroyed the love of the truth in their hearts. Now the iron is hot and fit to be struck; but there must be a smith to do it. Those men in the Tower have, no doubt, mutually comforted each other, and thus set a bright example to the community of saints, even in the midst of the prison. But most people know neither the word of God that breaks the rocks, nor the word that is as balm and honey. The more reason for you to draw near unto your suffering brethren. However great their distress, however weak your power, if you do but know on whom you believe, and are happy through your faith, you shall do something great, God helping you, and even here be permitted to see his glory. For such work as this is our vocation when we are the disciples of Christ, and because we are his disciples. A brother in the ministry once told me that he had not the faculty of speaking to the sorrowful and broken-hearted, hence he never attempted it. But this seemed to me a strange confession for a servant of Christ to make. No doubt one man more than another may have a natural gift of sympathy with his fellow-men, especially with the suffering ones.

But in some measure every one who has obtained mercy will be possessed of this gift, or he has not really obtained mercy himself. Wherever there is a light there will be a reflection of it. And to be a true comforter you need only feel for the sufferers, carry their burdens in the spirit, or "have compassion," as it is said of our Lord. Then the rest will follow; a compassionate tear, a warm shake of the hand, a word in season, and some effectual help whenever it is possible. But if so be that you have not "compassion," then there is nothing for you to do, and then you need not exert yourself to talk nor trouble yourself to pay visits of condolence. But neither must you fancy yourself a Christian. To be merciful, in the truest sense of the word, has always been a test of the Christian character, and will continue so to be till there is no more call to show mercy; then all we have to do is to praise God's mercy through endless ages.

Woe unto suffering humanity, bleeding from a thousand wounds, if only the regular ministers should come forth as comforters! What are they among so many? What would they be among so many, even if they all were indeed "sons of consolation," which they are not? No, every disciple of Christ is called to the sacred and blessed work of finding out the sorrowing and afflicted, as the sportsman tracks out the game. What good work may not, for instance, a physician do when he not only gives to the sick medicine for the body, but even the Word of everlasting healing! Alas, that so terribly many of our physicians should be bound with the chains of materialism and naturalism! The comfort they have to bestow on the hopelessly ill is but too often to deceive them by raising false hopes, that soon prove to be phantoms, giving place to despair as they vanish. On the other hand, I have more than once had occasion to notice the wonderful power of the plain, simple message of God's love through the suffering, when delivered by a believing physician who had gained the confidence of his patients. Truly we ought to pray diligently for the conversion of our physicians. They might, even though speaking but a few words, become the most effective of evangelists.

I am thinking of every Christian brother, be he ever so humble and uncultivated, as a comforter. Whoever rejoices in his salvation through Christ, ought to testify thereof, but chiefly to those groaning beneath God's chastening hand. He is to explain to them how it is that God, who is love, yet apparently treats them so cruelly. We are not to feel shy about giving this testimony, not to put it forth nervously, as if it were contraband wares, but freely and firmly declare, "Such is his purpose, my brother; this is how He means it." Do not let us lose courage if we are not at once understood, or even if we are repulsed. Experience teaches us that those who at first refuse the Gospel most passionately, later on may come to the truest knowledge of it and accept it the more eagerly.

But also to those who already know and love the Gospel we are to draw near, that they may know the blessing of Christian fellowship. Oh, in Death's dark valley even the believer will sorely need a warm hand to be put into his cold one! How refreshing to the fainting soul are the tears of pity and sympathy; how much easier do they make the belief in God's compassionate love. How many might have been saved from despair if this warm hand, these quiet tears, had been given to them in the decisive hour. The sense of being lonely, forgotten, and forsaken, may put even the true Christian in a perilous position, whereas it makes the unconverted man a thousand times a misanthrope, and—what is not far removed—a criminal.

Christianity did once overcome the world because it brought balm for the wounds from which the world was bleeding. The suffering members of the human race were the first to stretch forth their trembling hands towards the Gospel. Not many mighty according to the flesh, not many who were rich in gold, honour, power, and wisdom, but poor slaves, oppressed women, exiles. The weary and heavily-laden, and the sick—those furnished the stones for the temple of Christianity in the world. And men whose hearts were filled with divine love and pity were the builders. And in this present day, in the nineteenth century, it is still the same. Not that the Gospel, as some scoffers say, is only fit for the poor and miserable; on the contrary, no man will be renewed to life without it.

The poor and miserable have the advantage of the proud and self-willed spirits of our race in this, that their eyes are more opened to see the poverty and misery which to the others is still pasted over with gold paper. The sufferers have less difficulty in apprehending the emptiness of all worldly possessions and enjoyments, and the necessity of gaining something that is independent of the flux and reflux of this world's tide; in one word, the Saviour, the Gospel. Let him who has not yet learnt that faith is the victory that overcomes the world, enter the cottages of those children of God whose lot would seem to be the most wretched on earth, and who yet would not change it for that of the most favoured of the children of fortune, if such be destitute of heavenly comfort.

Some time ago I had flowers sent me from a lady friend in Sweden. To be sure, they were only painted flowers; and yet my heart was refreshed by them, not, in the first instance, because they were beautifully and cleverly done, nor because they were a message of love from that far-off country. Those little flowers were painted from plants which the famous Professor Nordenskjold had brought to his countrywomen from the regions of everlasting snow and ice.

What moved me so deeply was only this, that the blessed sun is coaxing forth flowers on that arctic soil, which is covered by the "everlasting snow," except for a few days, when the sun succeeds in removing it, that he may call forth those tiny, but very lovely, flowers. And when I saw them, though only in their painted state, they seemed to sing to me a song of praise about the power of the eternal Sun of Grace, about the miraculous love of Christ, which is able to call forth the heavenly flowers of hope and love in the most cold and frozen heart, and make every lovely virtue to bloom in places where there used to be nothing but death and despair.

In the book of Jesus Sirach it is written: "His mercy is sweet in times of trial, like unto clouds with rain in a dry season." If you are trying to the best of your ability to bring about the fulfilment of this Apocryphal text, then you will find what Professor Nordenskjold found, viz., "flowers in the snow," and those will be unfading and fragrant, even on the last great day.

NOTES ON SCRIPTURE.—20.

THE MAMMON OF UNRIGHTEOUSNESS.

"And I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations."—Luke xvi. 9.

THE Revised Version gives an improved reading of this verse, which helps to set it in a much clearer light. We quote the new version; and put in italics those words which tend to make the meaning more clear. "And I say unto you, make to yourselves friends by means of the mammon of unrighteousness; that when it shall fail, they may receive you into the eternal tabernacles."

The word "mammon" is a foreign one (Syriac). Its precise derivation cannot be determined with certainty. It is used as meaning riches. It is also used to signify an idol. Here there can be no doubt that it is used in the former sense.

"Mammon of unrighteousness," or "unrighteous mammon," as in the eleventh verse. The word "unrighteous" stands opposed to "the true riches," which immediately follows. It means deceitful, false, and not to be trusted. The same meaning is given in 1 Timothy vi. 17. It does not of necessity mean riches acquired dishonestly; but rather that riches are deceitful and not to be trusted; "uncertain riches"—riches of uncertainty. Riches that are treacherous and precarious. It may also be termed the "mammon of unrighteousness," because of the manner wherein it is commonly either procured or employed.

"Make to yourselves friends;" in other words, make friends by means of these uncertain, precarious riches. Learn of the steward, and turn them to your own advantage. Use them, so as to make friends by means of them.

"That when it shall fail" (it is uncertain, and will fail), "they may receive you into," &c. This is a form of expression denoting merely "that you may be received." The one direction of this verse is, therefore, so to use our worldly riches that we may be received into heaven when we die.*

We cannot properly study this verse without looking at the parable of which it is a part. Our purpose now is only to show that this ninth verse, as well as the whole parable, together with the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, go to teach us the right use of money, and the value it may be made to us when prudently and wisely used.

The steward in the parable, when turned out of one house, secured another, by reason of his own cunning and prudence. But we doing better than the steward, may secure a heavenly for an earthly, an everlasting for a temporary habitation. Money may be so used as to be made friendly and helpful. Rightly used, it may be to us a means of blessing; wrongly used, it becomes our greatest possible curse. We may make, to ourselves friends with it — this we are bidden to do. Read Matthew xxv. 34—40, and there see in what way friends can be made with it. On earth we can make our riches subservient to our ministrations of mercy; in the last great reckoning these same acts of mercy shall secure their eternal reward. Then shall those we have relieved and blessed rise up as witnesses for us. Have a reference, then, in the use of your money, to the future. Employ your money in works of mercy and benevolence, aiding the poor, and contributing to the spread of the Gospel; and doing this in such a manner that God will approve the deed, and will bless you for it. Then, instead of riches being a hindrance to your piety, which they too often are, they will contribute to your spiritual well-being.

Do not think that this text teaches that money can be made the key to heaven. It is here rather shown as the test of character. No man shall be saved by the merit of his good works. Good deeds shall be rewarded, it is true, but salvation is not by them.

"The lord commended the unjust steward." The Revised Version has it better: "his lord," &c. It was the prudence of the unjust steward that his lord commended. The want of fidelity shown by the steward is loudly condemned by our Lord in this same parable. The steward's one object was, when cast out of one home to secure another. For the foresight and skilful adaptation of means to the end, in that he was so prudent, cunning, and anxious, in turning all his opportunities to good account; it was for this only that "his lord commended him." This is the key to the parable, on which there have been so many differing views. Our Lord does not commend the actions of the unjust steward; who stands before us as one of the "children of this world" (verse 8). He only shows us what lessons the "children of light" may learn from him. It is that Christians often fail to use their opportunities, that the Lord said, "the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light."

In conclusion, learn from this text:—

(1) That while money is not to be idolised, it should not be despised. "Make to yourselves friends of (or with) it,"—use it for God's glory.

(2) Be good stewards of the lowest talents entrusted to you.

Geo. Norris Willomatt.

* We think Stier gives good reason for preferring the A. V. "ye fail." And we think the text means more than "that ye may be received." St. Augustine beautifully says, "Heaven is, as it were, the estate of the poor, out of which they can bequeath legacies to their benefactors."—Ed.

TRINITY MISSION HALL, BATTERSEA.—The seventh anniversary meetings of this Mission have lately been held. Dr. MacEwan presided at a Social Meeting, when interesting and encouraging reports of the various branches of Christian work carried on here were given by Messrs. Miller, Darling, and Gould. Gospel Temperance and Band of Hope meetings are being vigorously carried on, as well as tract distribution and house-to-house visitation. Words of encouragement were spoken by the Chairman, Rev. Mr. Alexander, of Bermondsey, Mr. Goodman, Mr. D. M. Cameron, and others.

WORK AMONGST NEGLECTED YOUTH.

Reminiscences

By A PRESBYTERIAN ELDER.

THE vast importance of earnest, systematic Christian exertion on behalf of the neglected youth of our large centres of commercial enterprise and activity, does not seem to have been always sufficiently recognised by those who have been most devotedly engaged in Home Mission operations. Yet, if we take into consideration the magnitude of the work, and its singularly hopeful character; the large number of workers to whom it appeals and for whom it can find high and useful occupation; the variety of gifts it calls into exercise, and which it is so well fitted to develop, it must surely be conceded that it is entitled to a place in the very front rank of our aggressive Christian agencies.

It is generally known that for a considerable number of years the State, acting—although at the outset somewhat reluctantly and tardily—on the principle that prevention is better than cure, has, by means of its excellently conducted Training Ships and Industrial Schools, done much on behalf of that uneducated and uncared-for class from which our criminal population is mainly recruited. Voluntary institutions, such as Miss Macpherson's, Dr. Barnardo's, Dr. Stephenson's, Mr. Fegan's, and Mr. Quarrier's, by their excellent home life training and well-considered schemes of emigration, have also done, during these past years, a work amongst destitute children worthy of the highest praise. Nor can we hardly overestimate the immense value of the widely-extended and systematic efforts that are being constantly put forth, on behalf of the class referred to, by institutes, societies, congregations, and other Christian agencies.

Still, it must be admitted by every competent observer, that invaluable and indispensable as these institutions and agencies are, there continues to grow up a countless number of children in our large communities, who are almost destitute of any religious or even secular education. The migratory habits of their parents enable them to elude the vigilance of the School Board officer, and their utter incapacity and indifference prove a sufficient barrier to the children receiving any moral or religious training.

That such a state of matters should continue to exist without strenuous efforts being made to remedy and remove it, is surely not creditable to our common Christianity. And it is obviously the duty of the Church of Christ at large to regard this widespread and deep-rooted evil as one with which it is specially and emphatically called upon to deal.

The scheme proposed and carried out by Dr. Chalmers, when minister of St. John's parish, Glasgow, with certain modifications consequent on altered denominational circumstances, has, judging from results, much to commend it. Were every evangelical congregation in our large cities, in pursuance of Dr. Chalmers' plan, to adopt a special mission district, and, instead of relegating the working of it entirely to a missionary or Bible-woman, to bring the best of the talent, experience, and spiritual life of the congregation to bear on it, with the view of its evangelisation, might we not reasonably expect that, with God's blessing, the entire aspect of things would be changed, and that these moral wastes might soon become as gardens of the Lord?

The following reminiscences refer to work carried on in an extensive and spiritually necessitous district in a large commercial town, by a congregation which possessed neither wealth, high social position, nor great numerical strength. It was favoured, however, with the services of a minister of exceptional zeal and high executive ability, who had also, in an eminent degree, the somewhat rare faculty of inspiring others with his own enthusiasm and spirit of self-denial. The office-bearers were for the most part, as the fruit of revivals, men thoroughly in sympathy with home mission enterprise and evangelistic work.

Two halls, separated a considerable distance from each other, and as suitable as the district contained, were secured, and superintendents regarded as having a special fitness for the work were appointed. Intimations were made from the pulpit, inviting those who had the qualifications and time to volunteer their services as teachers. To these a hearty response was given, and the work was hopefully and enthusiastically commenced.

ROME AND THE BIBLE.

By Dr. GOERGENS.

DURING the past summer holidays I met with several English families staying in a little village high up in the mountains of Valais. The solitude of the place, the isolation of its inhabitants, and their absorption in daily work, naturally left the strangers much together. So it came about that I heard much conversation among the English, as they wondered at the firm rule of superstition, and the prevailing darkness in all matters of religion that possessed the villagers. They were amazed to hear that not only in the village itself, with its 800 inhabitants, but even in the whole valley, no single household was possessed of a Bible. As some of my English friends, accustomed at home to see the Gospel well nigh in every house, thought this a scarcely credible fact, I promised, on the first convenient opportunity, to compile a few statements on the Romish view of the Bible, and to have them published. In fulfilment of my promise I send you the following facts and dates:—

Every one knows that the early Church commended to the laity on every opportunity the reading of the Bible. Bishops and teachers like Cyprian, Chrysostom, Athanasius, Jerome, Augustine, and Gregory I., ceaselessly urge men to search the Holy Scriptures as the pure and infallible fountain of faith. With the Popes Nicholas I. and Gregory VII., however, the condition of affairs suddenly changed. Monkish novelties had gradually increased the distance between the Church and the Bible, till it seemed a proceeding of doubtful wisdom to put a book into the hands of the faithful, which as a matter of fact carried within it a universal condemnation of this church. These two popes, therefore forbade the Slavonic races to read the Bible in their own tongue. Innocent III. would have all inquisitive Bible readers stoned to death.

As early as the year 1229 the Council of Toulouse strictly prohibited the possession of either Old or New Testament Scriptures by the laity. The Council of Trent decreed likewise that the reading of the Bible was in general more harmful than useful; it was only to be authorised with a written permission, and in a translation approved by the ecclesiastical powers. Bishop, inquisitor, and priest should grant that permission only to such of the laity as they were well assured would suffer no harm to their souls from this reading. Yet even this privilege was withdrawn by Clement VIII., who affixed condemnation to the galleys as the penalty for reading the Bible in the vernacular.

The successive occupants of the papal chair in the present century have rivalled one another in passing damnatory judgments on the Bible societies. Thus Pius VII. in a missive dated June 26, 1816, calls the dissemination of the Bible by these societies a most crafty device, and a plague to be stamped out by all possible means. In a circular-letter to all his bishops, Leo XII. described the Bible Societies as "destructive pitfalls," and declared that the translation of the Bible into the vernacular was a falsification of Scripture, "whereby the Gospel of Christ becomes changed into a Gospel of the Devil."

Pius VIII. called the Bible issued by the societies "the most dangerous of all infectious pests." Gregory XVI. delivered on May 8, 1844, a special bull against the Bible Societies, and commanded the priests to tear the Bible out of the hands of the faithful. Pius IX. took frequent occasion to condemn those crafty Bible Societies, which "forced upon the ignorant people Bibles brought out to foster their own views."

A long list of practices in Roman Catholic countries is in harmony with this theory of the papal chair. In order to oppose the British Bible Society, founded in 1805, a Roman Catholic Society was started in Regensburg. However, twelve years later it was dissolved, and the Roman Catholic priest who founded it was dismissed the country. In 1851 twelve Bible colporteurs were transported to Cayenne by Napoleon III., at the instigation of a French bishop. The Tyrolese inhabitants of the Zillerthal were driven from their homes as incorrigible Bible readers, and had to seek refuge in the domain of a Protestant prince in Germany. The rage of Rome fell not only upon purely Protestant translations, but raged quite as fiercely against those produced by Romanist priests. The London Bible Society has disseminated various Roman Catholic translations: that of De Sacey in France, of Scio in Spain, of Leander von Ess in Germany, of Martini in Italy.

The views of the Papal Government upon this matter may be known by its sentence of banishment upon Count Guicciardini and his six friends for reading the Scriptures; whilst for the same crime the Madiai were brought to judgment, the husband Francesco condemned to four years and eight months' imprisonment at Vollero, and the wife Rosa to three years and nine months at Lucca. As late as 1870 every Bible which was being passed as a harmless package over the frontier of the Papal States was mercilessly confiscated, the officials therein acting under the orders of the highest authorities. Such is the direct result of the Papal principle. Rome would thrust the Bible, by all imaginable means, into the corner and undert he bushel, and hence its rage against the Bible Societies of this century and the Bibles they issue.

When the Vatican Council was meeting in St. Peter's, in 1870, in the midst of a population of 300,000, there were not two hundred Bibles to be found, proof sufficient of the regard in which the Gospel is held in the Capital of the Romish Church. Whilst the Vatican Council was sitting, and differences of opinion began to show themselves, the French Bishop Dupanloup made long search for a Bible, to bring its evidence to bear upon his side of the argument. None could be found. The booksellers in Rome dared not obtain one for him, lest they should incur severe censure. No other resource was left him but to apply to the Prussian Embassy, and there to borrow a New Testament, from the Protestant chaplain residing there. That was the only possible way of obtaining a Bible in Rome, and that Bible is a charge against the Bishop to this day.

It is perfectly plain that the ceaseless aim of Rome is to substitute tradition—i.e., man's word—for the Word of God, in order thus to spread and to defend its own teaching and directions, which are in flagrant contradiction to the Scriptures. The Romish hierarchy feels only too strongly that it is not in accord with the New Testament, and therefore the Word of God must be thrust aside to make room for man's word. Look closely at the still imposing appearance of this church, and you will straightway find her like a tree whose sap and vigour have long since dried up and corrupted within, being supported only by an outer shell. The despotic hierarchy is the support of the fabric; but they too will prove for themselves, ere long, that man's building is but for a time. Only God's building stands for ever.

A BOY'S HYMN.

[Rev. Morlais Jones "wished he could write expressly for boys another version of Charlotte Elliott's hymn 'Just as I am,' full of bright dreams and happy anticipations."]

"Just as I am," Thine own to be,
Friend of the young, who lovest me;
To consecrate myself to Thee,
O Jesus Christ, I come.

In the glad morning of my day,
My life to give, my vows to pay,
With no reserve, and no delay,
With all my heart I come.

I would live ever in the light,
I would work ever for the right,
I would serve Thee with all my might,
Therefore to Thee I come.

"Just as I am," young, strong, and free,
To be the best that I can be
For truth, and righteousness, and Thee,
Lord of my life, I come.

With many dreams of fame and gold
Success and joy to make me bold;
But dearer still my faith to hold,
For my whole life, I come.

And for Thy sake to win renown,
And then to take my victor's crown,
And at Thy feet to cast it down,
O Master, Lord, I come.

BY REV. ALEXANDER MACLEOD, D.D.

It is only a little story I am to tell you to-day. It is a story I found in a ballad. But whether it is a parable story, or something that really happened, I must not say. It is a good story either way, and it is true at the heart.

It is the story of Peter Forschegrund, a holy man, who lived with other holy men in a house at the edge of a forest hundreds of years ago. Although Peter was a man in years, and, as you will see, a holy man, he was only a child in understanding. He had the thoughts of a child. And especially he had one thought, which almost every child at some time or other has. It was the thought of eternity. As he walked among the trees in the forest he kept thinking to himself, how long eternity must be. And he would say: "A hundred years is nothing to it, nor a hundred to that. It is hundreds, and hundreds, and hundreds of years."

Now this was not an idle thought. Peter knew that eternity and heaven were joined together, and his idea of heaven was that it was endless praising of God. And what troubled him was this—and it was only about himself he was troubled—that in the long flow of the years that never end, he might become weary of praising God.

"I am not so holy as the others beside me are," he thought. "There will be no danger of them tiring in their songs; but for me, so weak as I am, there will be danger. For eternity is long—so long; and to be ever, ever praising God might at last tire out my spirit."

Thinking this thought one day, and indeed being very much burdened in spirit about it, he went out to walk among the trees of the forest. It was spring time; the new buds and little leaves were twinkling on the branches. The sun was shining overhead, and the air was fresh and warm. Peter's heart rose up in thanks to God. "What a beautiful world it is," he said; "how kind of the good God to give us a world so fair! Those trees are pictures of Himself, they stand up so strong, so straight, so beautiful; and the birds make their home among the branches, just as we should make our home in his love. And here is spring once more on the earth; winter is gone, and the time of the singing of birds has come." Even as he was saying these things to himself, the birds were singing their joyous songs as they flew hither and thither building their nests. "If earth be so beautiful," he said, "how much more beautiful heaven must be!"

But just then, along with this thought, came in that other which troubled him, and he felt himself once more wondering whether in heaven it would not, by and by, after a long while perhaps, but too certainly during the eternal years, become a weariness to feeble spirits like his, to be always, always singing to God.

While this thought was passing through his mind he heard a sound such as he had never heard before; it filled the woods, and sent its echoes far and near. It was a little bird that God had sent to him from heaven. Such a song never was sung by bird before; so soft, so clear, and low and loud by turns. It was as if an angel sang. It was as if everything in heaven and earth had begun to sing; or as if the resurrection morning were come, and risen souls were singing for joy that they had left their graves. Peter could not listen enough; eyes, and ears, and heart, and body were ravished by the little bird and its song. He felt as he had never felt in his life before; he seemed not to be walking in the woods at all, but on the clouds, and the whole place seemed to him to be bathed in the light of the presence of God.

However, at last the sun began to set, and the shadows of evening were gathering; he remembered that it would be time for evensong, so he forced himself away from the music, and hurried back to the house.

As he approached, he saw that everything was changed a little. It was the same house, and yet not the same. At the gate he met a young man dressed in the same kind of dress he himself had, but his face he had never seen. As Peter was about to open the gate, the young man said to him, "Who are you? You act like one at home here, and yet you are a stranger." "I!" said Peter, in great astonishment, "I am Peter Forschegrund; this has been my house for years." "Forschegrund! Peter Forschegrund!" answered the young man, trying to remember a name he had heard, "that is the name of the holy man who went out from this house more than a thousand years ago to meditate and pray in the forest, and never came back again."

Awhile good Peter stood amazed,
Then eyes and hands to heaven he raised:
"O God, how plain is now revealed
The folly in this heart concealed!
Thy sinful servant dared to deem Eternity too long might seem
Spent in the sunshine of thy face
In showing forth thy endless praise.
And yet when Thou didst condescend
One heavenly messenger to send,
Only a bird from Paradise
Singing of resurrection bliss,
While hearing that enchanted lay,
As if but half a summer day,
A thousand years had passed away!"

If the thought which troubled Peter Forschegrund troubles any child who reads this, the years will come when God will help you to put it away. There will be no weariness in heaven. God has other ways of employing his children besides singing his praise. But whatever our employment may be, neither in praise nor in service shall we grow faint or weary. Pleasant though it is to be young and on earth, it will be more pleasant in heaven. And the happiest hours you have ever had here will seem less happy than the joyful times which await you there. For the heart there will be filled with the sense of God's love to us, and with love to Christ who opened the gate of heaven to us. And to have those two loves in the heart is to have the life of heaven.

It consists of a series of tables which show, at a moment's glance, the exact amount to a farthing (and for every weight and price) which should be paid by anyone making a purchase at butchers, provision dealers, &c. It has been compiled with great care. Help is needed from the public to enable the Society to publish this work. The office is at 1, Finsbury-circus, E.C.

MR. PASCOE IN MEXICO.—DEAR SIR,—I have the names and addresses of some 300 friends in England to whom I send copies of our Record, but I fear that perhaps not one-half of them reach their destination. Several of the addresses I find very difficult to decipher, others appear to be insufficient, and, probably, not a few friends have changed residences. May I ask of you the favour to give these lines a corner in THE CHRISTIAN, with the hope that they may catch the eye of those friends who have got beyond our reach, and who, perhaps, will kindly send me their present addresses?—Yours very faithfully,

SALVATION IN A STATE PRISON.

LEARNING of the location of the prison at C——, and being kindly invited by the gentlemanly warden to visit it, with our hearts full of faith and love for 125 unfortunates within these walls, we held a service in the dining-room, which will never be forgotten. We had asked for great things, but this was so great that we were all overcome by the power of God. Brother N——, and another brother, were allowed to go into the large dining-room, where the prisoners sat, all clean, and waiting for the services. The rest of us were put into a little iron cage with large grates so we could plainly see all the prisoners. Here also a few friends and officers gathered, and a little organ was ready for us.

But, oh, what a sight! Boys! mere boys! from seventeen and upward, with old men. How our hearts ached as we saw what Satan is doing all over the land. Fine-looking, educated, talented young men. As we entered they looked as if they had very little confidence in us. How hard the faces of many looked. Hatred stamped upon some, utter despair on others, and on many a reckless "don't care" expression. We sang softly "Home, sweet Home," with words from a book which we use in our work. Gradually the hard faces began to soften, the eyes that first shot out gleams of bitter hatred now filled with tears. One could almost read their hearts as thoughts of "home," and "mother," and of their God went through their minds. One head after another was bowed on the table; others tried to be brave, and turned their heads to hide their emotion, while many a rough shirt-sleeve was drawn hastily across the eyes of rough-looking faces. The Saviour, tender, loving, forgiving, was there; his Divine presence filled the room. The very atmosphere seemed "filled with glory and with God."

As the precious truth that "the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin" dawned upon their minds, gleams of hope began to shine where despair was written. Even the officers looked on in utter astonishment at these strange proceedings. Our hearts fairly burned as the fire descended. Brother N—— asked for those to rise, who, by the help of God, would turn from sin and receive Christ as their Saviour, and from henceforth live Christian lives. He then explained what it would involve, &c., and as he finished, over sixty men sprang eagerly to their feet. How our hearts leaped with praise to God! Our voices were immediately raised in a loud doxology to God, the prisoners joining with us. We then asked God's blessing to rest upon the place, convicting and saving prisoners and officers.

Before leaving we promised that if we were in C—— we would come again. So yesterday we went and there was another outpouring of the Holy Ghost in the State prison. The faces lit up as we entered; much difference in the countenances of many. As we poured the truth on them, one could see the struggle going on in their hearts. One man who had killed his friend in a fit of drunkenness, was in agony of soul, and cried like a child. At the close Brother N—— asked how many had felt peace in their souls since the previous Sabbath, and nearly all who had arisen the Sabbath before arose on their feet, and at the close, the whole number, including others, came and gave us their hand, promising that they would live for God and meet us in glory. Glory to God in the highest! Eternity alone will tell what good was done in two Sabbaths' work at the Nevada State Prison. —The Christian Woman.

DR. LEONE LEVI ON RAGGED SCHOOLS.—Many friends will doubtless be glad to read what Professor Levi has written on "Missions of Benevolence," as he terms ragged schools. In the little pamphlet which the Committee of the Union have just issued, an earnest plea is urged why these Missions should be as vigorously supported as ever. We trust that the wide circulation of this tract will be the means of enlisting many new teachers to engage in the work, especially during the winter season. (Ragged School Union, Exeter Hall, W.C.)

CAMPBELTOWN, ARGYLLSHIRE.

FOR some ten weeks special evangelistic work has been prosecuted here by Messrs. Smith and McNab, and with marked success. Every night during all that time a meeting has been held, first, generally in the open air at the Town Cross, the most crowded thoroughfare, then in the Burnside Chapel. Many have attended these meetings who have hitherto persistently kept from all religious services. The Gospel, as preached by the evangelists, has been listened to with earnest attention. After-meetings have also been held, at which numbers have professed to be anxious about their salvation, and in a good many cases there is reason to believe true conversion has taken place.

Last week a tea meeting was held in the hall in connection with the work, attended by between 400 and 500, and a large number present held up their hands to indicate that they had received spiritual good in connection with the meetings. The work is still being prosecuted with great vigour.

PERSECUTION OF CHRISTIANS IN CHINA.

THE Canton correspondent of the Daily News, writing on October 13, says that the Chinese people generally, though still in a very sullen mood, show no disposition to interfere with foreigners:—

"The anti-foreign rage which in the country districts around Canton has for several weeks, in the absence of the foreigner himself, vented itself against Mission buildings and native Christians, has also somewhat abated; but scores of chapels and schools have been already dismantled or destroyed, and hundreds of families have been rendered homeless. The Roman Catholic Church has suffered most severely, owing partly to the fact that its adherents are so numerous, and partly to the unfortunate circumstance that this Church has been commonly designated "the Church of France." In one district, referred to in my last letter, known as the "Ninety-six Villages," and situated about twelve miles to the south-west of Canton, the Roman Catholic converts were sufficiently numerous, after appealing in vain for protection to the Mandarins, to undertake their own defence. They fortified their villages, and kept their enemies at bay with cannon and musketry until the Government, fearing that the affair might develop into a dangerous insurrection, tardily sent to the aid of the persecuted Christians a band of the imperial troops. In other districts the Roman Catholics have been compelled to forsake their homes and their employments, and they have fled for refuge, to the number of several thousands, to Hong Kong and Macao, or have scattered themselves about in parts of the province where they are not known. As the result of this, there are not a few villages and hamlets in the neighbourhood of Canton entirely without inhabitants.

"The English and American Protestant Missions have sustained serious losses, and their converts have been bitterly persecuted. No lives have been sacrificed; but homes have been broken up, men have been brutally beaten, and women stripped of their clothing, and with the sword above their heads have been required to renounce their faith. We have been accustomed to think dubiously of the conversion of Chinese to the Christian faith; but however ignorant the native Christians may be of the higher duties and responsibilities of their religion, the firmness which they have displayed in the midst of these trying persecutions can only be regarded as strong evidence of their sincerity."

A SISTERS' UNION FOR PRAYER has just been started. The Secretaries will be glad to welcome any sisters who may like to join it, so that a great wave of intercession may be ascending weekly for brothers and sisters, both converted and unconverted. The secretaries are Miss Synge, 4, Vanbrugh Park-road, Blackheath, S.E., and Miss Bradshaw, The Rectory, Clontarf, Dublin.

A MOONLIGHT MEDITATION.

I SIT alone. Above me God's sweet stars
Shine calmly from their home beneath his feet,
And, crowning yonder dimly distant hill,
And lighting up the secrets of the vale,
The saintly moonlight, pure and pale and fair,
Illumines night with dreams of coming day.

Oh welcome night! In thee the heart of man
Holds sacred converse with the heart of God,
Which, universal, is more truly known
And deeply felt in thy most holy calm
And veiled mystery, and hush sublime,
Than in the light and sound of busy day.

Here, as my spirit speaks with the Unseen,
I recognise its origin Divine.
An emanation from the Deity,
Undying, because uncreated, part
Of the Infinite and Everlasting,—
Its truest consciousness and deepest hopes
Rise far above their low environment
To where Perfection and Infinity
Find concentration and repose in God,
Its source eternal and its only home.

Oh sacred night, draw closer round my soul
Thy veil of darkened silence, so that I,
Still nearer to the Great Invisible,
And nearer perfect truth and perfect love,
And perfect wisdom and a perfect God,
May ever come!

Before me fir-trees rise.
Through the transparent silver darkly clear
Their outlined branches swing athwart the blue;
Low hills in shadowy blackness stretch beyond,
And, flowing dreamily in liquid light
Beneath the quivering moonray's tender glance,
And flashing into joyous ecstasy
At the sweet smiling of the far-off stars,
The river murmurs low its hopes and fears,
While to my right a grove of gloomy pines
Throws shadows weird across the moonlit way,
And silver silence reigns supreme around.
Silence so still, so deep, that I can hear
Stream through the hush of evening's rapt repose
Most fair and holy spirit-harmonies
That thrill to higher life the listening soul.

The night is solemn with a sense of God,
And sweet with all the peace his presence brings,
And holy with the reverent communing
My spirit holds with Him.

What joy to live
Each day in such calm consciousness of God
That, e'en as now, the things of sense and sight
Were unrealities and passing dreams,
And only things eternal and unseen
Were true and real and present to the soul!

WORK IN BRAZIL.

WRITING from Rio Grande, Brazil, Oct. 6, Rev. E. Vanorden says:—Last evening we commemorated the Lord's death, when three persons, two ladies and one gentleman made a public profession of their faith, in the presence of an interesting congregation.

There are other cases of special interest, and before the end of the year we expect, under the Lord's blessing, to see others anxious to own the Master. Our Sunday-school is filled with children, and several begin to take an interest in the teaching.

I am very anxious to resume colportage, which has been a means in God's hand of calling several to the light, and will do so as soon as friends will enable me to do it. This province is emancipating her 60,000 slaves quietly and voluntarily, and this increases our opportunities for doing good. The railroad to Bagé will be opened on December 2, and this will facilitate travel. Captain Pompilio, of the garrison here, is doing excellent work for the Master. Any help that English friends can render may be sent to Mr. Matthew H. Hodder, 27, Paternoster-row, London.

CITY DEPOT, BIBLE FLOWER MISSION.—There are new openings for work on every side; new Missions are applying; old Missions are wishing to have an increase in their numbers; workhouses, infirmaries, and hospitals are filling up earlier than usual. There is a great cry going up from all these places. Gifts intended for the Christmas week should arrive in time to be given out the previous week. The Depot is closed, which will most probably be from Monday, December 22, to Monday, December 29. Written holders are much needed; we have only one day's supply. Funds we have none. ANNIE DOVE, Hon. A MISSION IN ST. LUKE'S.

BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONER.

SITUATED in one of the poorest of all the London districts, and surrounded by a mass of human beings who are too familiar with poverty and even with crime, the Whitecross-street Mission presents a splendid field for the Christian worker who is willing to go forth in the footsteps of the Saviour "to seek and save that which was lost." Commenced twenty years ago, the work was taken up by Miss Hastings on the death of the founder (George Vigeon); it has from that time gone on increasing and developing. Some impressions received on a recent visit to the district, in company with Miss Hastings, may be of interest to your readers. Everything pertaining to the completeness of a Mission among the poor is in evident working order. There are Sunday-schools, Gospel services, temperance meetings, a nursery, penny bank, industrial class for girls, mothers' meetings, clothing club, a lending library, a British Workman, and medical mission.

As in almost every good work, so here, the chief hindrance met with is the curse of drink. One poor woman, whom we saw, affirmed her belief that almost all the misery in St. Luke's was ascribable to drink; without it such Missions as these would scarcely be needed. Even those who escape from it for a time are too often again entangled, and their latter end becomes worse than before. A man and his wife were persistently followed by their own family, after becoming abstainers, and were ultimately almost persecuted into the breaking of their pledge, from which sad relapse they have never returned.

As an antidote, however, to the public-house stands the "British Workman" in Whitecross-street, open early and late. Every day at the dinner hour the place is filled by hungry people who for a small sum are provided with a good meal and a quiet rest. Following out the old motto, "Waste not, want not," all available scraps are gathered up and made into a pudding which furnishes a good part of a meal for one half-penny. One poor, half-starved child always looks forward to her "Saturday morning treat," when some friend provides her with one of these puddings and a cup of hot coffee. Recently, however, the heart of the good matron was touched at hearing her say one Saturday morning to another more sickly child, "You shall have my treat this time, dear, and I will go without."

A valuable auxiliary to the work is the Medical Mission, open twice a week in the afternoons, at which advice is given and medicines dispensed without money and without price. By a judicious arrangement a Gospel service is held on the same afternoons, which has been blessed to the patients. A motley group of men, women, and children were gathered in the preaching-room when we called last week, when a brief, hearty service was held. The medical attendant sees about one hundred patients at the close; this is as many as the funds of the Mission can pay for twice a week at present. On almost every occasion many poor sick ones are necessarily excluded to whom the same aid would gladly be extended were the number of subscribers increased.

Space would fail us to speak of all the good influences exerted by the various departments of the Mission. At the top of the house we find a number of children being taken care of by a nurse for threepence a day. This is the nursery, and contains little ones from six months old and upwards. The Sunday-school brings Miss Hastings walking all the way from the West End, because she will not ride on Sundays. At the Gospel service that follows in the evening Christ is preached as the Saviour from the power as well as from the penalty of sin, and sorely is it needed.

Our visit to some of the homes of the poor opened up to us scenes that will not easily fade from the memory. One-roomed life is the rule. Dirt and poverty are the main features of the picture. Where sickness exists as well, it is simply appalling. Here are four children, in a dirty room. Interrogated by our friend concerning the mother, they state that she has gone out to work, though suffering from a large tumour; and they have scarcely anything to eat. Promise of help is given, at which the poor children are glad. At another place is a young husband, dying of consumption; the poor wife has nothing to depend on but five shillings weekly from the parish. Out of this three shillings and sixpence goes for rent, and the remainder is supposed to meet the need of husband, wife, and eight children. Elsewhere we found that an aged woman had fallen downstairs and broken her wrist, which had never been properly set. Her greatest anguish, however, was the thought of a poor son in an asylum. Thus we went on, but only to hear multiplied tales of distress. The only relief these people appear to have comes from the sympathy and aid rendered by the Mission, and the kind visits of Miss Hastings.

"Hitherto hath the Lord helped us" is the motto and the testimony of the lady at the head of the Mission. "But the work might be so greatly extended," she adds, "if our funds permitted. A great many poor creatures were turned away from our dispensary to-day, although the usual number (100) were admitted. We should gladly open the dispensary three afternoons a week instead of two if we could. And in other ways, too, much greater good might be accomplished.

THE LA FORCE ASYLUMS.

THE Report of these noble institutions is again before us. It is always interesting; not because of any aim on the part of its compilers to insert sensational matter. M. Rayroux, the energetic director, tells us this in so many words in this Report. The gratification arises from the cheering nature of the work done, and the great self-sacrifice of the personnel in doing it. Few persons except those who have visited this vast agglomeration of beneficent asylums can conceive what must be the abnegation of those who will, year in and year out, stand by their post amid the most terrible afflictions it is possible for our poor human nature to undergo, and which are represented around them day and night! And this in a place far away from any town, with no outlook for sympathy but upward. Happily, that band of ministering spirits learned how to hold this cross before they took it up.

But these reflections aside, the Report itself tells us that all goes well. Sixteen of the children have gone out to the battle of life, and some of the afflicted and aged pensionnaires have closed with the life terrestrial, and "gone up higher." The Lord has not forgotten either orphans or afflicted ones; the hearts of his people have been moved to so fill the treasury that the year has ended better than it began. The Report itself should be perused by those who can read French, for the veriest details are full of interest and instruction too. Pasteur Rayroux takes his readers mentally through the various houses of the Asiles, and exhibits the daily doings in each, not veiling the sorrows and troubles in order to present a bright picture. The whole bears the stamp of honesty. Even the doctor's report, grim as are some of its facts, contributes to the interest, for he has set himself to attempt some amelioration of the sufferings of the large number of epileptics. He gives to the readers his prescription and an elaborate table of encouraging results.

Pasteur Rayroux again emphasises the fact that six chambers are placed at the disposal of any friends who may be disposed to pay the institutions a visit. They are on a slight eminence overlooking the charming valley of the Dordogne, a short run from Bordeaux on a branch of the Orleans line of rail, the postal address being Les Asiles John Bost, La Force, Dordogne, France. A SONG SERVICE AT EXETER HALL.

THE announcement that a happy evening might be spent at Exeter Hall on Friday last brought together an audience that nearly filled the hall. The occasion was the rendering of a selection of Sacred Choruses by the United Gospel Male Choirs, with solos and quartettes by select voices. The chair was occupied by Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS, and the connective addresses were given by Pastor C. SPURGEON, of Greenwich.

In a brief address the Chairman called to remembrance that on the last occasion of his being on that platform Mr. Moody was presiding. If any asked what good the late Mission had done in preaching and singing the Gospel, he would point to Wandsworth Hall, at the opening of which he was present on the previous day. Inquiries had shown that no less than 35,000 persons had given their names as having received blessing; and that was a glorious army. Among the choir to-night were found members of the Mizpah Band.

The programme for the evening included solos, quartettes, and choruses; with four selections in which the audience joined. Where everything was so good it is difficult as well as invidious to compare, but the enthusiasm of the assembly was perhaps most roused by the rendering of the pieces "Arm for the Conflict," and "Song of the Soldier," both of which were encored. The same demand was made for the quartette "I am the Resurrection and the Life," which was responded to by "Along the River of Time we glide." As no rendering of Mr. McGranahan's music would be complete without the well-known "Him that Cometh," this was, of course, included, and never have we heard it sung with greater effect.

The interludes by Pastor C. SPURGEON were exactly to the point—brief, terse, lively, and entertaining. At the same time they were all most practical in their aim, either urging the unsaved to faith in Christ, or the believer to more diligence in work and holiness of life.

One could but think what an excellent service had thus been rendered by the choirs in providing such a pleasant and profitable evening. We can only hope it may soon be followed by another.

FOREIGN GOVERNESSES.—Please inform your readers that we shall be glad to receive applications from families requiring foreign governesses for the approaching holidays.—C. F. RYFFEL, Directress

CHRISTMAS LETTER MISSION IN SWEDEN.—Four years ago we began the printing of some thousands of letters to distribute in hospitals and poor houses, according to what we heard they did in England. They were highly appreciated by the recipients. Sailors are very happy to get those letters when coming into foreign ports. We hope by and by to be able to provide one or two letters in Danish (which serve also for Norway, the written language of those two countries being almost the same). We may also remark that Swedish is spoken in Finland, and understood all over Scandinavia.

FORTY THOUSAND BIRDS FOR LADIES' BONNETS.—The Pittsburg Advocate says:—"The Goddess of Fashion is a powerful and heartless tyrant. She respects no sex, age, or condition; and, like death, she has all seasons for her own. She makes miserable the condition of many, many poor mortals. She maims and murders human beings. We need not, therefore, be surprised to hear that she slaughters harmless birds by the thousand to satisfy her whims. Tender-hearted women, who would grow faint at the sight of blood, give such orders to the milliners as lead to the destruction of multitudes of the innocent songsters of the groves. We see it stated that an enterprising woman of New York has contracted with a Paris millinery establishment to furnish forty thousand, or more, skins of birds this summer. The result of this demand is, that in some places nearly all the birds have been destroyed. Some of the islands off the Atlantic coast are almost birdless. And the craze is on the increase. What a shame to a civilised people! But Queen Fashion makes her demands, and she must be obeyed."

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

IN her recently published "Occasional Paper" Miss Macpherson says:—

Our counsellors, men of faith and good report, continue to meet monthly, to assist us by counsel and prayer for the various missions connected with our Home of Industry, that each one may be more and more marked by spiritual life and power. We have received sufficient money for our work during the past year, which has filled our hearts with gladness, and enabled us to work on in all simplicity and trust, as royal children of the King of kings.

EMIGRATION OF CHILDREN.

With a note of praise we record that three more interesting families of "even these least" have been rescued, and, after examination, have been admitted into the Training Home at Hackney, for probation and training. From thence they were sent in parties of sixty boys last April, eighty boys and little girls in May, and thirty boys and girls in August, whilst young men and several families have been aided with clothing and passage money, making, in all, about two hundred whom we have personally influenced this year to a start in life in Canada. Mr. and Mrs. Merry received them at our Canadian Home, Stratford, Ontario, and placed them out, one by one, with the farmers with whom they had been corresponding the previous winter, where they are now sharing the wholesome family life such as they have never known in England, and will be growing up (as hundreds of our boys and girls before them) among honest, God-fearing men and women. This year we have had an additional visitor out amongst the farmers, reporting to us the progress of each child, and making arrangements for return to the Home where necessary.

THE AGED WIDOWS

are still our peculiar care. Our lady visitors, in going from house to house, make us well acquainted with their little rooms, and the trials which these dear saints of God endure. They continue to come on Monday afternoons to work for the sixpence, mending the clothing, making up any material sent to us, to fill the many boxes and bags of outfits which will be required in the coming spring and summer. Truly they are our armour-bearers, and present many a petition sent up from friends to the Throne from their little garret-rooms, and we have been refreshed by the answers to their cries. During the summer we have had the joy of sending some of them for three weeks change and rest to the "Fresh Air Home" at Redhill, where a loving, Christian heart has endowed a bed specially for their benefit.

EAST-END FACTORY GIRLS.

The Home of Industry has become during the past few years the evening resort of young women from the surrounding factories. In the summer months they meet for recreation, and are taught to play games of an instructive character, and knitting, crochet, &c., while one evening is set apart for Bible-reading and prayer. In the winter they cut out and make their own garments, purchasing the materials of us at wholesale price, and one evening weekly is spent in learning to read and to write a letter. We are greatly encouraged by the subdued behaviour of the girls; they have been softened through the influence of their teachers, and many of them are giving evidence of a change of heart. One of our most diligent helpers at the sewing-class is a young girl, who two years ago came to one of the meetings in order to mock the words spoken; but her heart was touched, and soon after she sought and found salvation.

THE LODGING-HOUSES

are still visited on Sunday and Wednesday evenings. The blessed work of bringing the goodnews of free salvation to this wandering Arab class has deepened in interest, and many, we believe, in that day, will be found to be the Lord's jewels, though unknown now to us. After the meetings in the houses are over, an open-air service is held in summer, and all the year round a meeting in our Gospel hall, where many have been savingly converted, and are now living in other parts of London, paying us a visit occasionally, and cheering our hearts amid the continuous toil.

THE WORK IN BIRD FAIR

during the past year has been one of our heaviest burdens, and yet a source of great joy. Two services have been held on Sunday mornings, from eleven to one o'clock, and hundreds, from the terrible scene of profanity and desecration of the Lord's day, have stood quietly listening to the story of the Cross, and the sweet Gospel songs. We ask the prayers of our friends that we may be upheld in this testimony, and that blessing may follow the distribution of the 200,000 Scripture and other leaflets; also that many a young evangelist may be prepared through this work for fields of service all over the world. One such called lately at the home, after nine years, to behold again the place which he designated his "old college and grounds," where he first told out a Saviour's love. Since then he has preached the Gospel continually in the open-air and in music halls, and has spiritual children all over the world with whom he corresponds.

BIBLE FLOWER MISSION.

This sweet mission continues to spread all around an aroma of love, ever since its birth here in 1875, in the meeting of our poor widows. We hear that even ladies in China are pleased to carry out the flowers and texts. The last touch of its practical loveliness of which we have heard, is that a young lady, while presenting a bouquet in a neighbouring workhouse, discovered a lonely widow, without a friend on earth, and now this widow is a most valued domestic helper among our children.

RAILWAY GATE-KEEPERS' MISSION.

This little Mission is also doing its work of quiet ministry amongst those lonely cottagers. Not only are there many hundreds of packets of pure Gospel literature being scattered monthly throughout the United Kingdom, but much correspondence is carried on, and our kind helpers are cheered and encouraged by the grateful acknowledgments received. In many instances the men speak freely of their spiritual condition, and are kindly counselled and helped. We trust as this little work continues we shall have the joy of recording the conversion of many precious souls.

MISSIONARY PROBATIONERS.

We have been asked by several Missionary Societies to receive for a few weeks or months, those hoping to go to China and India, that the young ladies might gain increased freedom in conducting mothers' meetings, Bible-classes, visiting among the very poor, and teaching the young. It has been a reflex benefit, and as a band of workers we are thankful to give forth our experience, that the far-distant heathen may share in the blessing. Some of these are already at their posts, while some are now on the sea, on the way to the far-off lands, and others still at work here.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE SCRIPTURES.

We are greatly indebted to Mrs. Robertson for enabling us more freely to distribute Gospels in the hospitals and workhouses, and to send Testaments to the French Canadians.

The Religious Tract Society this year has been most liberal towards our children, and the Bible Society also in again presenting each emigrant with a copy of the Scriptures, while Earl Carrick's gift of 100,000 Scripture leaflets for Bird Fair, has called forth our grateful praise.

In conclusion we ask your prayers for the children now being gathered in the Hackney Home for the winter's training. We hope to start for Canada in the ensuing spring our forty-fourth band, which represents the need of many sums of money, for outfits, passage money, and the General Fund.

WORKERS' MEETING.

Our hearts were cheered last week by the visit of our brethren from Aldersgate-street. The result is that we now can pray more intelligently for the outgoings of the Lord's work in their hands. Those who spoke were men of Issachar, keeping rank, understanding the need of the time, many of them young men, brimming over with the Holy Spirit's power. Mr. Burn is truly a father in Israel, and shining for the Master.

The workers from many a Mission were refreshed by listening to the way in which the Lord had drawn to himself and sustained these young men amid many temptations in this great city.

The Home of Industry family of boys and girls sang their bright new hymns, and were the burden of many petitions to our Father's throne. Many a sewing party, we trust, is spending happy evenings in making garments to be worn in the bright summer-time, when, in answer to many a prayer, we shall have dried many a tear for his dear name's sake. Mr. and Mrs. Merry write good tidings from our immense family on the other side of the ocean, encouraging us all in the needed daily patient toil. Our hearts are filled with praise as we look back these twenty years' of God's faithful love to us and the little ones in the East of London.

A YEAR'S RESCUE WORK.

THE decease of the late esteemed Secretary of this Society, Mr. Daniel Cooper, delayed by several months the publication of the annual report, which is now before us. It is briefer than usual, but not the less interesting. The "representative cases" given, present the reader with a clear view of the dire need for such institutions. In one case it is the master's son who ruins the unprotected and motherless girl, and then heartlessly flees to New Zealand. The poor creature falls in with a sympathising Christian lady, who brings her to the Home in a half-starved, heart-broken, friendless, and destitute condition. Here her needs are met, her health restored, her heart cheered, and her character regained. After a time a situation is obtained for her, where she continues to do well. Another case is very sad, both the guilty parties being members of a Christian church, and the man married.

The compilers of these annual reports have a difficult task to accomplish in hiding from the reader's eye that which would offend delicacy, while nevertheless constrained to reveal and even portray as much of the deadly evil as is necessary to awaken public interest, and to secure practical aid. Says the writer: "In trying to describe our home-work for the past year, such a mass of material presents itself that it is difficult to put it in any shapely form, bringing to the front, as it does, man's baseness and woman's weakness and fall. Women they are not; many of them are mere children, who should have been protected, but have been made the victims of the foulest wrong. These young girls are more difficult to deal with than women, because they have been made so familiar with sin while young, that the modesty that is natural to a woman they never seem to attain."

During the year 347 persons were received into the several Homes, of whom nearly half have been domestic servants. During the same period nearly 300 have been satisfactorily disposed of in situations, restored to parents, &c. We learn with the sincerest sorrow that the funds have greatly fallen short of the required sum of late, and the matter is causing the Committee grave anxiety. The secretary, Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe, will thankfully acknowledge donations sent to him at 85, Queen-street, Cheapside, E.C.

BRISTOL.—Meetings for holiness and faith-healing are to be held on December 4 and 5, Thursday and Friday, at the Y.M.C.A. Hall, St. James's-square, Bristol.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN COPENHAGEN.

DURING our brief visit to Copenhagen in September, we were specially interested in the Magdalens' Home superintended by Miss Thora Esche, and the Court Mission by Mr. Wright.

The Home affords accommodation for about thirty women; the lady who superintends it looks delicate and fragile, but is a true and devoted Christian, absorbed in her work, and consumed with love for her unfortunate sisters. Many of these under her care have been respectably married, and some, as the report says, won not only to society but to the kingdom of God. It is, we believe, the only home of the kind in Copenhagen, was commenced only six years ago, and has now accommodation for thirty inmates, of whom there have been about a hundred in all. It would greatly cheer our dear sister's heart if some of the ladies engaged in similar work in England would write her an occasional letter.

The Court Mission was originated by Mr. Wilhelm Wright, a young man, born in Denmark of English parents, who spent three or four years in an English counting-house, saw something of Christian work, and after his return to Copenhagen, where he had an appointment in the Civil Service, found in the children of the streets a sphere for his love and energy. The Report of the Inland Mission gives the following particulars:—

OPEN-AIR PREACHING IN COPENHAGEN.

The population of the suburbs is so rapidly increasing that, though the metropolitan churches are overcrowded, tens of thousands are becoming strangers to God and to his places of worship. Amongst these people the Court Mission is trying to give the ministers of the Metropolitan churches a helping hand.

In May, 1881, Mr. Wilhelm Wright happened to pass through a court, and gave to a number of children whom he found there a little paper, taught them a Psalm, and promised to return another time. On the way home it struck him that the Lord had given him a mighty work to undertake here, amongst the poor and sick, in the courts and alleys, where he could tell them of Jesus and his love. From that time, almost every evening, he visited the courts of Westerbro', the West-end of Copenhagen. His work was soon blessed, and numbers of children and adults gathered around him. He was at this time generally alone.

When the winter began he had to give up the open-air meetings, but he continued his former visits to the sick in their homes. In April, 1882, he started again, and in May he found a true helper in Mr. Clausen. At the familiar spots in Westerbro' they were kindly received, but elsewhere they met with some scorn and ill-treatment. Water, glass, and wood were often thrown at them, but God kept his mighty hand over them, and blessed their work.

From May to October 150 meetings were held, and several ministers and theological students took part in them. The Inland Mission now put a room at their disposal, and during the winter meetings were held twice a week. In the spring, Mr. Wright and his companions started to visit the public-houses. This was a difficult task, but God was with them, and sometimes as many as twenty places were visited in one night. Tracts were distributed, and the guests were cordially invited to the Gospel meetings. One evening, in a noted lodging-house, they met about forty people on whose faces vice and drink had left their marks. The landlord allowed them to enter, and the meeting went off without many interruptions. A big, strong-built labourer put his arm round the neck of one of the missionaries, and said, "If I squeezed you—what then?" "Then I should go home to my Saviour," was the reply. The man took his hand away, and listened in silence.

From May to October 270 meetings were held all over the city. In Westerbro' the opposition has decreased, but even here, where the work first started, a meeting seldom passed off without some small disturbance. The visitors here were mostly children, and amongst these little ones many touching incidents occurred. In Nörrebro' the opposition was strong, but the audiences have increased. In one court, next to a public-house there, some beer was thrown at them. In another there were a number of atheists, who made fun of God's Word, and received them with wrath and scorn. One of them wanted to fight them, but the children who stood around took each others' hands, and said, "Keep fast; don't let him get through!" and the raving man did not attempt to break the chain. In Osterbro' were the largest meetings, sometimes numbering three or four hundred people, and the opposition was strong. In Kristianshavn the opposition gradually ceased with the scornful laughter and direct attacks on preachers. In the old town the meetings were held twice a week, and a number of poor persons said they were glad to join the meetings, as it was so difficult for them to get to church, while here they could come dressed as they were and with their babies in their arms.

In October, the Interior Mission placed two more rooms in the suburbs at the disposal of the Mission, besides those already mentioned, and one in the old town. In the public-houses some of the landlords received them with kindness, some with indifference, and others with contempt and anger, forbidding them admittance. It was a hard work, but God blessed it, so that customers often came from the "pubs" to the Gospel meetings. One landlord, who had always received the missionaries badly, asked them one evening, "What do you want here?" "Just to invite you and your friends to our meeting," was the kind answer. "Do you think that I will stand quietly and look at you drawing away my customers? and do you know that when they become holy they won't drink any more?" replied the publican, furiously.

Mr. Wright has also distributed more than 300 Bibles, about 12,000 Sunday magazines, 20,000 tracts, 2000 Gospels, and 20,000 illustrated papers for children.

This Mission has also spoken to those poor creatures who are making a livelihood out of their own shame. It is horrible that such things are admitted in a Christian country, and we have heard several of these pitiable women say, "We would like to get out of it, but we cannot!"

CHARLES CARTER IN AUSTRALIA.

MANY of our readers who have taken an interest in Charles Carter (formerly of the Evangelisation Society) will rejoice to hear that with his family he has safely reached Melbourne, and already received a hearty welcome from the friends of the "Victoria Evangelical Society," with whom he is to work.

In a letter just received he says: "On the whole we had a pleasant voyage, the worse part being in the Red Sea. The heat there was intense. We could scarcely breathe. I was in a fainting fit for six hours, and four doctors were doing their utmost to bring me round. Just as I recovered another passenger was stricken down, and in two hours was a corpse by my side! Many were alarmingly ill, and five died. The captain had to turn the ship about, and run back for a time to give us a little air.

"The last part of the journey was very pleasant, and we all landed well, and very grateful to the Lord, and to many friends on both sides, for many mercies received. The new Society here is doing well, and God is blessing the Word to many. Will our friends in England praise God with us, and ask for strength and faithfulness that the work here may be greatly furthered and prospered?"

BRIXTON Y.M.C.A.—In connection with the Young Men's Foreign Mission Society a very hearty meeting was held at this branch, 2, Wynne-road, Brixton, on Thursday, November 13. Addresses were delivered by various friends. There was much power in the meeting, and stirring appeals were made to young men to devote themselves to the glorious work of taking the Gospel to those that sit in darkness, the great needs of China especially being brought to the front.

JEWS IN PALESTINE.

A WEEK ago I returned from Artauf, the Jewish Refugees' Aid Society's settlement on which the 24th October was kept as the first anniversary of taking possession of that property. The manager and the colonists had done their utmost to give the place a festive appearance, and all who had come for the occasion from Jerusalem and Jaffa enjoyed the sight very much.

The proceedings of the day began with Divine Service, 45 persons partaking of the Lord's Supper, and afterwards an out-of-doors meeting was held, presided over by Dr. Merrill, the U.S. Consul of Jerusalem.

We hope this little festivity, indicative as it was of sympathy on the part of those who had come some five hours' journey to be present, will have somewhat encouraged the poor colonists who live in Artauf under very trying circumstances. The original plan of giving to each colonist a house and cattle, implements, &c., to enable him to earn his living, has not yet been carried out, partly because the "Jewish Refugees' Aid Society" has not yet received the sum of money estimated to be required at the very outset, and partly because the Turkish Government has tried to put obstacles in the way.

The latter hindrance is, however, now disappearing, and if the Jewish Refugees' Aid Society meet only with the support it requires, the little colony of Artauf will be a wonderful auxiliary to the Jewish Mission in Palestine, bidding fair to become, within a few years, a self-supporting Jewish Christian community.—Yours faithfully,

A Hebrew Christian.

THE GOSPEL IN BELGIUM.

SIR,—I am desirous to make known through your columns to the Christians of Great Britain some particulars regarding the operations of "La Société Evangélique Missionaire Belge," about which I fear comparatively little is known. Its distinctive object is to proclaim the Gospel in a country given up to the darkness of Romish superstition or of infidelity. It was formed in 1837. Its work has steadily progressed until now. At the close of 47 years, there are 6200 adults and children connected with its Missions. All of these, with very few exceptions, have been rescued from Popish thraldom.

It has twenty-six churches and stations, fifteen pastors, five evangelists, ten Bible readers, and four colporteurs. By the help of about sixty lay preachers, the Gospel has been preached regularly this year in seventy localities, and occasionally in seventy or eighty others. About 6000 Gospel meetings have been held. There are fifty-one Sunday schools. Bible readers and colporteurs have distributed many Scripture tracts, &c. The Society has under its direction the only evangelical library in Belgium. There is an orphanage for thirty-six children, a fund for the widows of pastors, and it is hoped that there will soon be an asylum for the aged.

The members of the churches formed by the Society consist chiefly of the working classes, who make considerable efforts among themselves to defray the expenses connected with their own congregations. The sum annually required for the entire Mission is about £4500. I feel sure that Christian people will feel it a privilege to lend a helping hand in this good work now going on in the land where Tyndale and others suffered martyrdom for the truth's sake, and whence our forefathers received the Word of Life in their own tongue.—Yours faithfully, C. A. Gamble.

Normount, Torquay.

P.S.—I may add that contributions in aid of the Society's Missions will be gladly received by M. Le Pasteur R. Meyhoffer, 85, Rue Mercelles, Brussels; or by the Rev. R. H. Lundie, 6, Beech-street, Liverpool. Mr. Lundie, who is intimately acquainted with the working of the Society, will gladly give any further information that may be desired. C. A. G.

Notes and Comments.

ONE of the most rapid and most genuine successes of recent times, in connection with evangelistic effort, is the Railway Mission. In a comparatively brief period it has brought within the sound of the Gospel large numbers of those engaged in railway work, not only at important centres in London, but throughout the country. We are informed that the scope for the extension of the work is almost unlimited, as far as the readiness of the people is concerned. The energetic friends who conduct the mission are anxious to launch out into the deep, if the Christian public will furnish the wherewithal for needful expenses. We trust this hindrance may be speedily removed.

In an article written for the New York Evangelist, Rev. Theodore Cuyler discusses the questions which, under the new presidency, ought to come at once to the front of American statesmanship. They are most of them as vital to the interest of our own nation as to that of America. Mormonism, the drink traffic, the civil service, divorce laws, and home rule for great cities, are specified by Dr. Cuyler. As illustrative of the duty of Christians in reference to them he says:—

"All these are practical and pressing questions that not only can engage the conscience, but are in the province of legislation. Into them a patriot and a Christian can go with a clean conscience, and work as he prays, and vote as he prays. The pulpit, the school, and the prayer-meeting, might all be invoked to strengthen men's hands for such issues as these. May our country's God give us grace to carry his laws to the ballot-box, and write them on our statute books!"

The apathy shown by many professors of Christianity in relation to the moral evils of our times contrasts painfully with the zeal they frequently evince about other things. Referring to the indifference of multitudes in the churches to the drink question and other crying evils, Dr. Cuyler says:—

"The dram-shop ought to be undermined by moral influences, and barricaded by legal restraints. But neither will be undertaken with thorough efficiency so long as good people and God's people blink their duty, and allow defunct party questions to monopolise their politics. The other night I saw scores of Christians march through the rain with torches, who count it a hardship to attend even a meeting to pray and labour for the salvation of our young men from the bottle."

What is needed is a revival of the work of grace in the hearts of all believers, such a one as shall cause them to count it their privilege, as well as duty, to place "the kingdom of God and his righteousness" in the forefront of all their desires and endeavours.

By this time Lord Radstock, with his son, the Hon. G. G. Waldegrave, will probably have arrived at Bombay, to begin his campaign for Christ on Indian soil. A letter in The Bombay Guardian, from the Rev. Dr. Murray Mitchell, of Edinburgh, bespeaks widespread and prayerful sympathy with the tour this devoted and distinguished evangelist hopes to make through Madras, Calcutta, the North-west Provinces, and Central India. We in England must not forget to pray that Lord Radstock's visit to India may be a source of refreshment to himself and of rich blessing to all the English-speaking residents of that vast Empire who listen to his voice.

According to the statements of Rev. J. M. Thompson, who writes from Callao, the condition of the Republic of Peru is extremely pitiable from the moral and spiritual standpoint. Romanism is the State religion, and, having had exclusive possession of the field for three hundred years past, is responsible for the state of things thus described:—

"There are, of course, worthy exceptions, yet from the testimony of Romanists and Protestants alike, as from evidence otherwise gathered, I am certainly not slanderous when I say that the great body of the natives—from priest to beggar—are dishonest, untruthful, indolent, intriguing, outwardly unclean, and inwardly corrupt. A Roman Catholic lady, who has lived here for nineteen years, said to me the other day, 'There is no redemption for this country, for there is no fear of God. The priests are all corrupt; this is the great evil, and what can you expect of the people? I heard a padre say to his people in church, "You may lie, steal, come to the holy communion, and take the wafer and trample it under your feet; you may do anything, and it will be forgiven if you come to confession." "No," said she, "there is no redemption for this people, unless some other nation should take possession of the country, and the girls should be educated to purity of character and the fear of God."'"

The same writer says it is saddening beyond description to see the squalor of the lower classes in their hovels throughout Callao and Lima. There is not in all Peru any special effort toward the moral elevation of the hundreds of thousands of wretched souls to be found there. There are many English speaking Protestants in Lima and Callao, as elsewhere along the coast, many of them men of wealth and liberality, with families growing up around them. They have not even had churches and schools regularly for the supply of their own needs; it is not surprising, therefore, that they seem never to have thought of any organised aggressive work for the saving of the natives. Alas! that a country so prolific in material wealth, and so resplendent in natural beauty, should be thus morally destitute and repulsive.

The Rev. Holman Bentley, of the Congo Mission, writes to The Freeman, urging special prayer, in public and private, that the Berlin Conference may be so guided and controlled that the decisions arrived at may be for the advancement of the kingdom of righteousness and peace, and for the spread of the Gospel of Christ. Having regard to the far-reaching import of the Conference as to the future of Africa, the suggestion demands general and earnest regard.

The right to preach on public commons ought to be respected, especially when other uses of such open spaces are unchallenged. The case just decided at the Hammersmith Police Court seems to be one of great injustice and hardship. John Jones, having been prosecuted for preaching on Shepherd's Bush Common, appealed to the Home Secretary for protection in his right to do so, the case being adjourned pending the reply. This came to the effect that the Home Secretary had written to the Metropolitan Board, but could not interfere while the case was undecided before the Court. The presiding magistrate, on Mr. Jones refusing to promise that he would not preach again, inflicted a fine and costs, in default of payment of which the defendant has been sent to prison for fourteen days. It is surely a case in which action should be taken to redress what appears to be an infringement of the rights of conscience and the liberty of the subject.

We would draw special attention to a Conference of Christian workers in Manchester on Saturday next, as announced in our last and current issues. The subjects to be considered are of present and pressing importance. We trust the course of these discussions may be so ordered that abiding good may result to all classes of the community.

A fine example of Christian catholicity, fervent zeal, and genuine faith, is furnished by the latest report of the work presided over at Bangalore, South India, by the Rev. E. Marsden. The Christian community over which he presides originated in the labours of the late Rev. T. C. Page, but has been under the pastoral care of Mr. Marsden for some twenty-eight years. Unconnected with any society, receiving no salary, but depending entirely upon voluntary contributions, Mr. Marsden writes:—

"I love all who love Jesus, and am quite prepared to show my love in every possible way—in every way a good conscience will permit. It is indescribably agreeable, therefore, to me, to receive, from time to time, such convincing and substantial evidence, as I am doing, of the affectionate interest taken in me and my work by my fellow-Christians. During the whole period of my visitation more than 14,200 souls have been dealt with by me. According to my computation, and I have taken great pains to be accurate, the exact number may be set down at 14,205. There were times, it is true, when faith and patience were not a little tried, but these were never tried in vain. Always, after they had been sufficiently tested, the great and kind Provider came to our relief. The whole amount received in the course of twenty-eight years' service, has been about 50,537 rupees (£4500). Every rupee came unsolicited. I never beg; I never do more, and that but rarely, than represent. May I not say I serve a good Master?"

General Scratchley having been appointed Special Commissioner in New Guinea, a deputation, headed by Sir Wm. McArthur, M.P., waited upon him last week from the Aborigines Society. Their object was to assure him of their hearty co-operation in any possible way with his efforts to make the British protectorate of New Guinea a lasting benefit to the natives of that country, to the colonies, and to the empire. It appears that at present an infamous traffic in what is really slave labour prevails on some parts of the coast. Labour vessels visit certain ports for the purpose of removing kidnapped natives and placing them under restraint. It is satisfactory to know that General Scratchley goes out determined to deal firmly with this evil, stating in reply to the deputation that we were bound in taking over the country to protect the people, and to secure to them all their rights and privileges, and that this in fact formed part of his instructions.

A deputation from the Anti-Slavery Society, introduced by Mr. Arthur Pease, M.P., has waited on Lord Granville at the Foreign Office, to lay before his lordship their views with respect to bringing the question of slavery and the slave trade before the Berlin Conference. Mr. Allen, the secretary of the Society, pointed out that the slave trade was mainly carried on on land, and that something should be done toward punishing the slave traders caught on shore, as well as those captured in vessels. The English law was very defective in its provisions concerning the slave trade, and required to be revised and improved. Earl Granville expressed himself in close sympathy with the objects raised by the deputation, and promised to bear them in mind; but said there was difficulty in reference to the Conference at Berlin, as a resolution had been passed that perfect secrecy should be observed as to its proceedings.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond will preach on Sunday morning next at Trinity Presbyterian Church (Dr. Paterson's), Kensington Park-road, W.

After some days' quarantine in the Bay of Salamis, Rev. Dr. Somerville and his son, Rev. James Somerville, reached Athens on November 6. The Doctor delivered his first address on November 15, to Greeks, through an interpreter. He has also preached in English on Sundays, the only service held in that tongue in Athens for more than than six months.

A friend makes the excellent suggestion that those who have in their libraries narrative books, published last year, or previous to that, should weed out all that are not likely to be re-read and send them to Homes, Hospitals, or Missions among the poor. No more appropriate season could be chosen than the present for doing such acts of kindness. While there would be no loss to the givers, those who receive the books would be cheered and profited. We hope many young people especially will take the hint.

The propensity for gambling is early fostered and engendered by pernicious baits now very commonly provided. Almost every sweet-shop has its lucky bags and prize packets, which tempt the cupidity of the youthful mind by holding out the hope of obtaining more than fair value for money. Sweets having a threepenny-piece in them are also mixed with others by some vendors, and thus children are initiated into the evils of speculation and greed of gain. A parent writing to one of the newspapers anent the practice says:—

"It will be evident to all thoughtful people what will be the class of mind our youth will develop if such trading is allowed, in addition to the danger of children being choked by swallowing the coin."

A terrible facility for cultivating all kinds of moral evil exists in these days; counteracting agencies cannot be too numerously or too vigilantly applied. Christian tradesfolk may help to counteract such evils as these by refusing to place such baits in their windows.

An article in the Evening News of the 20th inst. sketches the various scenes to be beheld in Ratcliff Highway. Among other features it refers to the "Strangers' Rest," which it rightly describes as a place where an unsectarian mission is carried on. It also says, "To strange sailors this place must be of real value, for in it they may sit and write their letters, or read and rest, free of all charge." Only those who have seen the working of this really invaluable institution can tell how truly blessed and helpful in every way it proves to thousands. An interesting anniversary gathering held at the Rest on Friday evening is reported on another page.

The scramble which is taking place for African territory has been illustrated in The Pall Mall Gazette by a map of the coast line from Morocco to Cape Colony. Out of 7000 miles of littoral (the extent of the West Coast) Europe has already appropriated 4450 miles, besides other tracts claimed twice over by Germany and the Cape Colony. Of these Britain claims 1940 miles, France 1155, Germany 730, Portugal 800, and Spain 85, while 2590 miles at present remain independent, or are under international auspices. Clearly, if disastrous complications are to be averted, such a mutual understanding as the Conference now sitting at Berlin is endeavouring to arrive at, is a pressing necessity.

The call for closer union between all true believers becomes louder and stronger as the conflict between the Church of Christ and the hostile spirit of the world becomes more stern. As an American writer of note has puts it:—

. . . "Evil masses its forces against us, but millions, who are practically one as to fundamental principles of Christian society, are impotent to make their mighty energies felt in national morals and in behalf of social order because a persistent individualism resolves them into a rope of sand."

This "persistent individualism" is what in these days we need all to guard against and abjure, except where the dictates of an enlightened conscience may compel its adoption. But even then it need not prevent co-operation and sympathy with others who, "holding the Head," desire the glory of Christ. In view of the awful mass of wickedness and heathenism which confronts us at home and abroad, concentration of spiritual force becomes an essential duty and necessity.

Amongst the many striking proofs of the increased zeal and interest in our day in foreign Missions, we are glad to learn that the following gentlemen commence a united campaign in Scotland on Sunday next:—Major-General Haig, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, Mr. James E. Mathieson, of Mildmay; Rev. A. J. Landale, of the China Inland Mission; Mr. Stanley Smith, and Mr. C. T. Studd. The two last named are soon leaving England for Gospel work in China. This campaign is in the interest of no special missionary society, but with the sole desire, by God's blessing, to stimulate interest in the churches and amongst the students and young people of Scotland on this subject. The following is the proposed programme:—

Glasgow	Nov. 30—Dec. 2.
Greenock	Dec. 3.
Dundee	Dec. 4, 5.
Aberdeen	Dec. 6—8.
Edinburgh	Dec. 8—10.

Mr. Phillips, of the West Ham Bench of Magistrates, has recently advised the School Boards to take proceedings against fathers who through drunkenness neglect their families, and prevent their children from attending school by failing to provide them with clothes. It is right, he contended, that people should know that such cases are an offence punishable by law. One could see a large number of children about the streets who appeared to be utterly neglected, and it could not be believed that all their parents were without fault. For the sake of the children themselves, Mr. Phillips said he hoped some proceedings would be taken, and then the eyes of the public would be opened to the fact of the existence of a penalty for the offence.

In an article contributed to the current number of The British and Foreign Evangelical Review, Dr. Blaikie discusses our Lord's principles of philanthropy and social reform. The notion secularists endeavour to propagate, that according to the teaching of Christ the present life should be treated with indifference and contempt, is shown to be groundless and untrue. Christ sought to alleviate the sorrows of humanity, and his precepts as to the use of wealth, and the general conduct of human life, all aimed at the regulation and improvement of its social condition, not its destruction. His philanthropy consisted in wise and thoughtful regard to the true and abiding welfare of its objects; not mere kind-heartedness, but wise and practical consideration of results, entered into all our Lord's deeds of mercy. They never promoted improvidence, or the habit of weak dependence on others. Their principal objects were persons whose ailments disqualified them for work, and as soon as restored He set them to work for their own or others' benefit. The great lesson of it all is that to put a man right you must begin by putting him right Godwards.

Our Lord's principles of social reform are also ably dealt with by Dr. Blaikie, who meets the objection that his teaching took so little notice of the social corruptions of his time, by pointing out that direct attack on specific forms of evil was not his method of procedure. Christ gendered a spirit in connection with which social evils and abuses could not live, a spirit that could not endure slavery, nor the fashionable amusements of the theatre and the circus, nor the prevalent debaucheries of family life, nor the intrigues and plots of fashionable ambition. The exercise of this spirit was to take place within the community of his Church, the members of which, as a separate guild gathered out of a hostile world, go forth influencing and guiding social life in all directions for good. The loss of the spirit of Christ by the Church, and its failure, through corruption, to answer its appointed end, lie at the root of much of the terrible social evil which now exists. The article is one of great value as a contribution to the social science of our times.

The following high tribute to Professor Stuart, of Cambridge, nowa representative, in the House of Commons, of the borough of Hackney, is paid by the Pall Mall Gazette. We want many more such men on both sides of the House:—

"The House of Commons is to be sincerely congratulated on its newest member. Prof. Stuart is the very opposite of 'the common-sense politician,' the adroit, but unenthusiastic, and withal somewhat shallow, opportunist, who is regarded in some quarters as the beau idéal of British statesmanship. A devotee, an enthusiast—his depreciators would say a fanatic—in the cause of social improvement, an intense believer in a high morality as the only guiding principle in political as in private life, he unities to his intellectual gifts an uncompromising sturdiness of opinion and an absolute contempt for unpopularity, and—what is more—even for ridicule when advocating what he believes to be right. His ardent zeal for the cause of national education and of social purity, the directness, single-mindedness, and heartiness of his whole character, mark him out as a democratic statesman of the best type. It is not too much to say that he is personally beloved by thousands of the working classes in the great centres of population, especially in the north."

Advocates of Sunday rest for postmen and other toilers on the Lord's Day have observed with regret that Mr. John Bright has spoken strongly against any efforts to obtain an extension to the country of London restrictions. He considers that to close the post-offices on Sundays would be not only "an intolerable inconvenience, but a great evil." The main argument relied on to support this position is that thousands of letters, containing wise and loving counsel, are written by parents to absent children, which reach them on Sundays, and so are read under circumstances specially favourable to impression, because of the quiet and leisure they enjoy on that day. Mr. Bright contends that there is not a word in the New Testament favouring the views of those who contend for stopping Sunday postal service, and he quotes the words of our Lord: "The Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath." The postmen, however, might quote the same language, and fairly argue that the Sabbath was made for them, and so they are entitled to the rest at present denied them.

REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND.

THIS eminent evangelist, with Mrs. Hammond, arrived in London last Friday, from the United States. It will be in the recollection of many of our readers that some sixteen years ago Mr. Hammond spent two and a half years on this side of the Atlantic, conducting Gospel and other meetings at various places in this country and on the Continent. Since his return to America he has continued his evangelistic labours in different parts of the Western hemisphere, penetrating as far as the territory of Alaska, two thousand miles north of San Francisco.

As we have already announced, Mr. Hammond returns to our shores with the view of entering on another evangelistic campaign as the Lord may direct. A few years ago he held a ten days' united Mission in the city of St. Louis, Missouri, in which nearly all the churches and pastors of the place actively and sympathetically joined. God was pleased to bless in a very manifest way the endeavours of these friends, under the leadership of Mr. Hammond, and the results of the special effort were highly encouraging. In scanning the records of the time we find that at a meeting of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, held two months after Mr. Hammond's Mission, it was officially reported that up to that time carefully gathered statistics, furnished by the different churches, revealed the fact that no less than five thousand persons had been received into Christian fellowship as the direct outcome of the meetings. We know not whether the records of modern evangelism can show in the same period of time a parallel instance of widespread and effectual religious awakening.

A farewell meeting was held at the close of the St. Louis Mission, which was attended by about 4000 people. The proceedings were reported in a St. Louis daily paper at great length, and the public interest caused by the visit of the evangelist was evidently deep and extensive. At this valedictory gathering a letter addressed to Mr. Hammond was read, and signed by all the ministers present, to the number of forty or more. This letter was written and read on the occasion by Rev. Dr. James H. Brookes, of St. Louis, whose recent visit to England is fresh in the memory of our readers, and whose addresses at various Conferences last summer met with so much acceptance. He is well known on the other side of the Atlantic as a Presbyterian minister of high standing, and pastor of one of the leading churches in the city. We think it well to reproduce Dr. Brookes' letter; it will serve in some degree to introduce Mr. Hammond to British Christians, and will show the spirit in which he carries on his remarkable evangelistic work. We quote from the St. Louis daily:—

"Dr. Brookes read the following paper:—The Rev. E. Hammond, who has been labouring as an evangelist in this city for ten weeks, is now taking leave of his brethren with whom he has been so intimately and so pleasantly associated, that he may enter upon other fields of toil for his Master. We regard it as due to him, as due to those among whom he goes proclaiming the Word of Life, and as due to our common Lord, to present him with this testimonial of his fidelity, as an united expression of our confidence and love. Some of the evangelical ministers, knowing nothing of Brother Hammond, or hearing vague and conflicting rumours concerning his preaching and its results, dared not assume the responsibility of inviting him to visit us. Others, with a better knowledge of the man, or with bolder faith in God, sent to him the Macedonian cry, 'Come over and help us.' All of us to day part from him with sincere regret, and utter the word 'Farewell' with a sadness brightened only by the thought that, 'Yet a little while, and we shall meet him again,'

'Where the assembly ne'er breaks up,
And Sabbaths have no end.'

"Truly we may say, 'The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad.' Backsliders in scores have been reclaimed from their wanderings, children have sung the praises of Him who still lives to take the little ones in his arms and bless them, the fallen and the friendless have found a home in our Father's house, and are now clothed with the best robe, and men and women of the highest culture and refinement, no longer going about to establish their own righteousness, have submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God.

"The methods pursued in conducting the meetings have been those in use for many years in Great Britain, and are very similar to the mode adopted by Messrs. Moody and Sankey, which has met with the cordial approval of such men as Dr. Blaikie, Dr. Calderwood, Dr. Duff, Dr. Hanna, Dr. Bonar, and Dr. Andrew Thompson. Besides the meetings for children, for whom Brother Hammond obviously cherishes the warmest affection and interest, so that they are instantly and pleasantly drawn to him, there have been union prayer-meetings in the morning and sermons delivered in the evening. At the close of each of these services there has been a second or inquiry meeting, in which all the ministers and all other Christians present are invited and urged to speak a word for Jesus to impenitent or anxious souls; and it is in these second meetings, carried on without confusion or excitement, save the excitement of silent weeping or the sob of grief, the power of the Eternal Spirit is chiefly witnessed.

"The singing of sweet Gospel hymns, setting forth the truth as it is in Jesus, has been prominent in all the services, and abundantly owned of the Lord to the awakening and conversion of many. Add to this that the Cross has been held up with unfaltering hand, and with unswerving devotion, and our brethren abroad are at once made familiar with all the 'machinery employed in this precious revival. No new doctrines have been taught, but the ruin of man by sin, and redemption through the blood of Christ, have been the unvarying themes. With singular tact, Brother Hammond has kept himself aloof from points of controversy between the followers of our Saviour, and for weeks and weeks we have been together without thinking of our minor differences. After all, there is the unity of the spirit which God has established, and which man cannot destroy; and this has been beautifully exhibited during all our happy meetings.

"The result is that the bond of union between us as ministers of the Gospel, leading distinct divisions of the one great army, has been stronger and more tender, as the bond between us and our people has not been relaxed, but made sweeter and more sacred by the efforts of our brother, and we can show to the world that if many like the waves, we are one like the sea. With adoring gratitude to God for his mercies, and with our best wishes and prayers attending his servant, who has toiled so faithfully and so successfully in this city, we subscribe our names."

Having only just arrived in our midst, and having some other important business on hand, the plan of Mr. Hammond's campaign is not yet developed. There will doubtless be many calls for his service from different parts of the kingdom, and he will, as we have said, follow the distinct leadings of God's hand. We have not infrequently heard it stated that Mr. Hammond's forte lies in preaching to children. It is true that when in England before he was led to devote a considerable space to that department of Christian work, but it was altogether an unusual thing in his evangelistic career, and there were special reasons for it at the time. Generally speaking, his invariable plan is to begin a Mission with adults. In the course of the services he may hold meetings for children in the daytime, but in the evenings he always preaches to a promiscuous audience. During his present period of service amongst us we earnestly hope that all classes and all ages may be reached, and that the slain and the saved of the Lord may be very many.

For the present Mr. Hammond's address will be Salisbury Hotel, Salisbury-square, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

UNDERGRADUATES AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

WITH respect to the meeting for undergraduates in Cambridge, to which we referred last week, the correspondent of The Record writes:—

"The meetings are now over, one having been held each night in the Alexandra Hall, and one besides (an open meeting, largely attended) in the great room in the Guildhall, on Sunday afternoon. Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, leader of the China Inland Mission, was present, and spoke at most of the meetings. The chief workers otherwise were two well-known old Trinity men, both to go out to China in Mr. Taylor's Mission, Mr. S. P. Smith and Mr. C. T. Studd. It is remarkable that both were conspicuous athletic men, in very recent days. The evening meetings varied in attendance between fifty or sixty and a hundred and fifty or more. Though mainly conducted by members of the "Inland Mission," they were announced, and honestly carried out, on a perfectly general basis; the effort being always to awaken a spirit of entire personal consecration to the will and work of God as the preliminary to all true action for Him, at home or abroad. On this clear understanding several local representatives of the C.M.S. took part in the meetings. On the first occasion of all, and once later, Mr. Moule, of Ridley, who is President of the C.M. Union, took the chair, and spoke with cordial sympathy of the effort. As regards results, I learn from many sources that quite fifty men are known to have been led to a very definite willingness to go to the foreign field; many of these, with consent of parents, dedicating themselves without reserve. A weekly prayer-meeting has been started for those who look forward to go out, and this was attended last night by twenty-five men, though held at a time when many could not be present."

Rev. J. B. Whiting writes to The Rock on the same subject:—

"After the last meeting held on Tuesday evening the men who had made up their minds to be willing to go forth to China, Africa, or India, as God might call them, were invited to remain for prayer. No less than forty remained. It surely may be taken as the dawning of a new era of missionary zeal. Remembering that these men come from many families, it is impossible not to be deeply moved. The heart lifts itself up in grateful thanksgiving that, at a time when infidelity is making such advances, a spirit of holy sacrifice should thus be manifested. Many of these men are well-known in the University both for the promise of academical success and for excellence in athletic exercises. They appear to be the healthy result of evangelistic efforts in the University itself, and several of the leading men owe their personal salvation and their convictions of duty to the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. At the last two meetings of the Cambridge Church Missionary Union (held weekly on Mondays at half-past six) there have been large gatherings of from fifty to sixty men. Oh, that this missionary impulse may spread through the land!"

DEVONPORT WORKING LAD'S INSTITUTE.—The third year of this Institute has been the most successful of all. No less than 700 lads have become members, while former members have in many instances gone on board the training ships of the navy. The religious element is kept well to the front. Since its commencement the Temperance Brigade have taken over 1000 pledges. The special need now is £2000 for new buildings. For this sum an urgent appeal is made by the Hon. Secretary, Rev. Melville R. Moore, in the little book from which these items are gathered.

SECRETARYSHIP OF THE BIBLE SOCIETY.—We understand that the vacancy in the secretariat of the British and Foreign Bible Society, caused by the death, through accident, of Rev. C. E. B. Reed, will be filled by the appointment of the Rev. W. Major Paull, who for thirteen years has been on the Society's staff, first in the Midland District, and afterwards in the South-eastern District. Mr. Paull has long been one of the most valued and efficient members of the staff, and carries with him to his new duties the good wishes of a large circle of the Society's friends.—Record.

ORPHAN HOMES OF SCOTLAND.

THE thirteenth annual meeting in connection with the Orphan Homes of Scotland and Destitute Children's Homes and Mission, was held last week in the City Home Hall, James Morison-street, Glasgow. There was a large attendance of the public, and a number of the children from the Homes were present. Provost Binnie, of Gourock, occupied the chair.

The annual report stated that during the year they had permanently helped 775 children. In the same time temporary assistance had been given to 272 casuals (that is, those who had been in the Homes for a day, a month, or a year, as the case might be, and had been returned to friends or left it because of ill-doing), giving a total of 1047 who had passed through the Homes. The numbers who came to the City Home for advice and assistance were continually increasing; 4000 was a good deal under the mark for this year, so that while the 597 new children admitted might seem a large number, it gave no adequate or even approximate idea of the multitude of cases from which they were selected, nor of the spiritual results of faithful loving words in season, as well as temporal good accomplished in dealing with them. During the year 510 weary, destitute ones who could not be taken in had felt thankful for the tickets given to "model" lodging-houses. The amount received during the year, for all purposes, was £15,207 9s. 0½d., besides large quantities of clothing and provisions. This amount, large as it was, had all been needed for the increased work of the year just closed. Over and above the money for the maintenance, which was at present about £30 a day, or £850 a month, they were looking to the Lord to send £7000 to build the church and class-room, superintendent's house, &c., at Bridge-of-Weir, and also for money to build more cottages.

The Chairman said it was gratifying to find that as the years rolled on the great and good work in which Mr. Quarrier was engaged grew apace. There really appeared to be victory all along the line, and to none but the Lord of Hosts, who had been Mr. Quarrier's stay from the beginning, could this victory be ascribed. It would naturally be asked what had been done with the £15,207 received during the past year. The answer was to be found in the most interesting report, which he had read with very great pleasure indeed, and which he recommended Christians not only to buy and read for themselves, but to send to their friends in all parts of the world. Putting aside the religious aspect of the work, from even a secular point of view the city of Glasgow must be greatly indebted to the Institution. Everyone in Glasgow, was more or less under an obligation to Mr. Quarrier in promoting and carrying on his great work.

Mr. R. H. Hunter, having submitted the abstract of cash transactions for the year, Mr. J. C. White moved the adoption of the reports. On some occasions, he said, Mr. Quarrier had been obliged to tell them of a deficit, but that was not the case this year. It was matter for thankfulness that on each account there was a favourable balance so that Mr. Quarrier was enabled to begin the work of another year without any anxiety.

Mr. Alexander Allan, in seconding the motion, said he did not think it was possible for anyone to read the narrative of facts which had been placed in their hands without being deeply impressed with the importance of the great work carried on there and at Bridge-of-Weir. His heart had often failed him when he heard from time to time of new cottages being opened, and when he thought of the large additional expense that would follow upon their erection; but the result of the past year's experience showed distinctly that there had been a want of faith on his part, and that the needed money had come in in answer to prayer, and in response to Mr. Quarrier's faith in God.

Mr. Quarrier said he was very grateful for another opportunity of testifying to God's goodness in the year that had closed with October. Twelve years ago only 100 children were dealt with, while last year the number exceeded 1000. When the cases sent across the Atlantic were looked at, it would be seen that among the 1500 children in Canada trained in the Homes there had been no deaths. A marvellous fact in connection with the children sent away there was that 95 per cent. of the number were doing well. People were always asking how the work would get on when he was gone. His reply to that was that the Lord could bury his servants and carry on his own work. Others wanted to know whether his agents worked for salaries. As to that he had to say that none came for salaries but for love of the work. They came because they desired to serve the Lord. They all stood together as beggars dependent upon the Lord for the daily bread that He sent. Two years had passed since he had been able to say to the world "I shall trust God for everything for myself," and though he had been a beggar all that time on the bounty of God, like the children for whom he worked, he could say that there was nothing he really needed with which he had not been supplied. The other workers had not lacked either, all having sufficient for their daily needs. Referring afterwards in grateful terms to the agents or instruments whom God caused to give of their substance to the good cause, he said they were not confined to the wealthy, but included the poor and little children. As to the future, he believed that God would double the work. He had first asked £20,000 to build, trusting in the Lord, and had received £40,000; and surely the Lord was able again to give him more than he asked. At that moment they were so crushed in the school-room, that when he was down there the other day he had pitied the schoolmaster and schoolmistress. There were difficulties to be got over, but he never despaired. They were in want also of larger store-rooms, and these he trusted likewise to see erected. In the coming year he looked forward to taking in 150 more children, and he hoped to be able to send 300 to Canada. In conclusion, he expressed a hope that the people of Glasgow would build the school-room and the church, and show to the world that they were really alive to their obligations as men and women whom the Lord had blessed.

Rev. Principal Douglas made some interesting observations on the value of the work carried on under Mr. Quarrier's guidance, and described the bright and promising future open for the children in Canada under the maternal care and counsel of Miss Bilbrough.

In a leading article on the work, in the same issue as that from which we extract the preceding report, The North British Daily Mail says:—

"The remarkable success which has attended Mr. Quarrier will not fail him now, for the better his work becomes known the greater must be the assistance he will receive. This rescue of the perishing appeals to human sympathy on its own account. Besides, it appeals especially to the community in which it is lessening pauperism and crime. The benefit is not to the children alone, but to every ratepayer. That, of course, is the lowest ground on which the claims of the Homes can be based, but it is one which must be recognised by practical people. There are higher grounds, which no one can overlook, on which the most generous support should be given to this noble enterprise. Mr. Quarrier's work in Glasgow is being conducted with rare earnestness, wisdom, and unselfishness; and we trust that it will be attended with increasing success."

ARDWICK.—Mr. Richard Coad has held a fourteen days' Blue-ribbon Mission in Ardwick. His labours have been crowned with much success. The Prayer-meeting at the close of each meeting has been abundantly fruitful; many were found crying for mercy, and, thank God, they found it.

Y.W.C.A., GOSPORT.—The winter session of this branch was opened on Tuesday, November 11, by a tea in the Congregational schoolroom. A public meeting was afterwards held. On Friday, Nov. 14, Miss Nesbitt, of Clifton, held two meetings at the Rooms of the Associations, which were well attended. Prayer is earnestly asked on behalf of the work.

THE SECRET OF JOY.

AROUND thee plant a hedgerow firm and bright
Of loving trust and gladness for to-day;
There hoping, striving, working with thy might,
Wait, watch and pray.
Thine eyes upon thy loving Saviour's face,
Thou shalt not feel the burden of a care;
For He on whom thou gazest, giveth grace
Each cross to bear.

And if thy heart with loneliness be sore,
Another, still more lonely, do thou seek—
Renewing it from out thy larger store,
Till it can speak
Of empty vessels filled with love Divine,
And weary ones made stronger for the fray;
So, self-forgetting, more and more thou'lt shine
To perfect day.

The Lord hath need of thee, let this suffice
For busy hours, or moments dark and still,
Where, hidden half by unbelief's device,
Is writ his will.
Life is not dark, though brief. The light
Of God is shed about its feet, and love
All o'er its head is lit in semblance bright,
Like to a dove.

PIONEERING IN BOLIVIA.

DEAR SIR,—In The Christian for June 13, of last year, under the title "Pioneering in Bolivia," you made reference to an effort we were making to circulate the Scriptures in that land, and asked the prayers of your readers on our behalf. The manifest intervention of God in removing obstacles placed in our way by the civil authorities, at the request of the Archbishop, which to others had been insuperable, the protection from personal violence more than once threatened, and the success that attended our Mission all through, we ever regarded as intimately related with the prayers that were being made on our behalf.

From Buenos Ayres, the centre of our operations, to Tupiza, the first town in Bolivia, there is a journey of 1360 miles. Of this distance our books, close upon a ton weight, had to be carried 546 miles in carts and on mules. From Tupiza to La Paz, by the way we travelled, the distance is 632 miles, over roads where vehicles are unknown.

The following are the names of the places visited by us in Bolivia: Tupiza, Caysa, Potosi, Sucre, Oeuri, Colquechaca, Poopo, Oruro, Cochabamba, Caracara, and La Paz. From La Paz we came to Tacna, in Peru (now in possession of Chili), where we had a consignment of books awaiting us, more or less the same as that we had disposed of in Bolivia. These we sold in Tacna, Arica, Pisagua, Iquique, and La Nona. The entire distribution was 53 copies by donation and 5485 by sale, for which was received £291 15s.

During twenty years' experience in Bible distribution in South America, never have I seen so much honest desire to know the Gospel. The earnestness with which some of the Indians practised their heathenish rites under the name of Christianity, in the streets of La Paz, so moved our feelings that we could not refrain from tears.

Senor Penzatti, who accompanied the Mission last year, has recently started for Sucre, the capital of Bolivia, in hope that God may open up his way, and a permanent evangelising centre be established. He goes as a missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is accompanied by two colporteurs, in the employ of the American Bible Society. Their path is surrounded by danger and difficulty, as they very well know; but they trust that God will not only protect them from all ill, but will also crown their undertaking with abundant means.

As a partaker of blessing in answer to prayer in the past, I desire to return thanks for myself and those who accompanied me, and to ask that this new effort to evangelise Bolivia may be blessed still more abundantly.—Yours most truly,

Andrew M. Milne.

LONDON MEDICAL MISSION.

THE patients among whom we labour being generally in extreme want and destitute of the commonest necessaries, it will be at once conceded that the demands upon our resources are great and urgent. The applications for admission into the Convalescent Home at Folkestone, and our Holiday House for children situated at Thursley Common, near Godalming, have been more numerous this year than usual. The benefits conferred upon the inmates have been marked by physical and spiritual blessings.

Ladies have from time to time most kindly taken part in the important work of visiting in the homes of the sick, whose services have been much appreciated. There is still, however, a great lack of such valuable workers, and I would be most thankful if ladies, for the Lord's sake, who have the ability and the time, would come to help us. Mrs. Bell, Woodland Lodge, Shooter's Hill-road, Blackheath, will be happy to communicate with any lady who may be disposed to share in this branch of the Mission.

It is interesting to note that five medical students connected with the Medical Prayer Union of London are teachers in our Sunday-school and also help from time to time at the Gospel Meetings on Thursday and Sunday.

"HE IS MY KEEPER."

Visiting Mrs. J——, an old patient, the other day, I inquired how she was getting on. She responded with a happy expression of face, "The Lord has been very gracious and merciful to me." The husband was by her side at the time, and with an equally happy face said, "He is my Keeper. Since my conversion, now just three years ago, I have had no desire whatever for the beer. When I was converted, I there and then asked God to keep me, and He has. Good Friday, Whitsuntide, and Christmas used to be my hard drinking bouts; I did not care what I spent so long as I could get the beer. I thought nothing then of neglecting my poor, sick wife. Now such times are my happiest, and I keep at home. My old chums say to me, 'You must be miserable with such a wife that is always sick.' I tell them, 'No, I prefer staying at home to attend to her.' I now take pleasure in scrubbing the floor."

I well remember the time when the home of this man was one of the most wretched and neglected in St. Giles, whereas now it is bright, clean and comfortable, and he and his wife are living happily together.

"NOT YET, MOTHER."

We are continually reminded as to the uncertainty of this life, and that unless a man is safe for eternity, whether he be rich or poor, learned or ignorant, he is in the most dreadful position that it is possible for any human being to be.

The case of the young man which I am about to relate tells of one who was not rich, but poor as regards this world, yet truly rich and happy because he had eternal life through faith in Christ. His mother is a consistent Christian, and one always feels when in her presence that she carries about with her much of the savour of her Lord and Master. It was, however, a sad trial to her to part with her dear boy, who had been ill for a long time with heart disease and rheumatism, from which he died in April last. A few days before he passed away to his home above, it was evident to all that he had only a short time to live, for very grave symptoms had set in. Seeing his mother weeping by his bed-side, he said, "Mother, don't cry, it is not yet, not yet mother—at least I don't think so, but it will not be long when I am called to go home." He then spoke to his father, and said to him in a low whisper, "Father, meet me in heaven." He then spoke to each of his brothers and sisters in turn, and begged of them to give their hearts to God, particularly the youngest, and made her promise that she would give her heart to Jesus while she was young, and meet him in heaven, to which, he said, he was going. He longed to be for ever with Jesus. His end was full of "peace and joy."

YOUNG ENGLISHWOMEN IN PARIS.

WE have long been wanting to let our friends, the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, hear how we have fared since we were turned out of our Home, 77, Avenue Wagram, on April 28, for the very heavy repairs which we were obliged then to undertake. All has now been successfully carried out. Many of our old friends will scarcely recognise the new face of our old Home. Our repairs are estimated at £1520, of which, so far, we have only received some £600. We hope that many of the early friends of our work, who so graciously responded to the purchase of our Home ten years ago, will lift this burden off us, and not allow our heavy winter's work—now, alas! greatly intensified by the outbreak of cholera—to be clogged with this deficit.

During the time of our repairs we struggled on with our work in four separate apartments, which has entailed much extra expenditure; but whilst making this effort, God has not left us without the consciousness of his blessing. During the hottest of the summer months we had a severe case of typhoid, which not only detained us in Paris, but prevented meetings being held in aid of our work, the result now being that beside the fund needed for our repairs we are heavily overdrawn for the daily need of our Homes. Added to this, we had much distress to deal with in the summer from those of our country people who are dependent upon the Paris season. In little over one month we distributed over £40 to those whom we knew to be in real want, although hid under a refined exterior. Now schools have been broken up at a day's notice; engagements, which meant home and daily bread to many of our young country women, severed at a moment's warning; apartments, supposed to be let for the winter, left vacant, all revealing a sum of human wants with which we look in faith for God to deal. Mr. F. A. Bevan, our Treasurer, 54, Lombard-street, London, E.C., will gladly receive help.

SOCIAL PURITY AT MAIDSTONE.

MR. Alfred S. Dyer, editor of The Sentinel, lectured on Social Purity on Monday of last week to over a thousand men in the Corn Exchange, Maidstone, under the auspices of the Maidstone Social Purity Association. Dr. Monckton, J.P., presided, supported by a large number of local clergy, ministers, and gentlemen. On this occasion Mr. Dyer dealt more with the moral and spiritual than with the physical evils of impurity, in illustration of the Scripture that "he that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city." Commenting on the shams of conventional greatness, and contrasting them with the true nobility born of self-mastery, he said that not long since a faithful councillor was remonstrating with one in high social position on his profligate courses, when he replied, "It is no use talking to me; I am a lost man." Although surrounded by everything that rank, wealth, and influence could command, indulged passion had brought him to the degradation of feeling that his body was the master instead of the servant of his spirit. "Yet even for such a case," said the lecturer, "there is One now exalted 'far above all principality and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come,' who is able to save 'to the uttermost' all who come unto God by Him."

Having alluded, among other things, to the awful inner condition of a man who has brought upon himself the state of having "eyes full of adultery, and that cannot cease from sin," Mr. Dyer concluded by declaring that one of the inevitable results of the onward march of the Social Purity movement must be to require a higher standard of morality among our public men. Recognising the importance of self-control in their own characters, the people will recognise its importance also in the characters of those whom they are asked to exalt to places of power and authority, and will say in practice, if not in word, that he is not the man to rule others who has failed to rule himself.

THE LONDON CHURCH MISSION.

IT would not be possible for us to give anything like an adequate report of the extensive proceedings of this special effort, sustained during the last week throughout the Episcopal community, in central, north, and east London. In a future issue we hope to give some glimpses into the interior of the work. Meantime we can only cull from various public sources some of the more striking and outstanding features of the Mission. There seems no doubt that in some of the churches at any rate the work has not been carried on upon Evangelical lines. Indeed, one of the missioners plainly told his auditors that he took it for granted they were all baptized persons, and therefore Christians; the object of the Mission was not to make them Christians, but to induce them to live up to the height of the privileged position they occupied. The disastrous effect of such fundamentally erroneous doctrine cannot well be imagined. We are fain to believe, however, that the vast proportion of the clergy who are actively engaged in this work have held forth the word of life without addition or subtraction, to the large congregations gathered to hear them. The result may on the whole be of a mixed character, but there must be a solid and abiding blessing to many, as the fruit of all the prayers that have been made and effort that has been put forth.

The midday addresses in St. Paul's Cathedral, by Canon Knox Little, have been attentively listened to by immense gatherings under the Dome every day throughout the week. The Canon is credited with highly sacerdotal and ritualistic opinions, but his earnest words on these occasions, so far as we have ascertained or heard, have not been open to much objection. His scathing exposures of the prevailing sins and fashionable follies of the day, have been accompanied by the proclamation of deliverance through the atoning and mediatorial work of Jesus Christ. At the church of St. Andrews Undershaft, Leadenhall-street, Rev. W. H. Aitken has, day by day, before great companies, chiefly of men, been asking and answering questions as to the kind of life that is worth living, and the power by which men can live such a life. These great problems, the presence and importance of which no man can escape from, have been powerfully and faithfully presented, and we may confidently look for much fruit by the blessing of God.

On Monday night, says The Pall Mall Gazette, Shoreditch parish church presented a remarkable sight. At a few minutes to eight the church was empty. Owing to the zealous efforts of a number of working men, under Mr. C. Powell's leadership, who, having been specially commissioned for the work by the vicar, scoured the parish in courts and alleys, and gave telling practical addresses to their mates at the corners of streets, the spacious church by half-past eight was crowded mainly by men, who listened attentively to the chief missioner, the Rev. J. Cullin. The open-air services have been very effective. At a church in this neighbourhood the parish clergy, one night, welcomed at least twenty notorious thieves, brought direct from a thieves' kitchen, mainly by the exertions of a well-known banker, who often plays a game of cards with them at a club they frequent, hoping thereby to humanise them, and who could pass in safety, with any amount of money, through their worst haunts. These addresses of laymen to their fellows in some of the common lodging-houses in Whitechapel and Shoreditch have been most telling, and in one thieves' kitchen some fifty notorious breakers of the law listened attentively to a member of the Church of England Working Men's Society; when asked to repeat the Lord's Prayer and Creed, the familiar words they had known in their childhood brought tears to many eyes, and one of their number who mocked received anything but gentle treatment from his "pals."

It is too early yet to speak of the rescue work being carried on under the auspices of the Church Penitentiary Association in St. George's-in-the-East, Christ Church, Spitalfields, and other parishes, but midnight services have been held in specially selected parishes for the unfortunate women who abound in the district; in one parish where Lady William Seymour, Mrs. Goodenough, and many other well-known ladies took part in the work, some fourteen girls were on one occasion taken to Homes.

A noteworthy feature in this Mission is a series of lectures upon Christian Evidences, arranged by the Christian Evidence Society to be given at three churches—viz., St. Ann's, Aldersgate; St. Mark's, Dalston; and St. Leonard's, Stepney.

We have been favoured with the following reports:—

ST. BARNABAS, HOLLOWAY.

The Mission here has been conducted by the well-known Mission preacher, Rev. W. Haslam, whose power to draw large congregations, and to deeply impress them with the truth, was never seen more forcibly than on this occasion. Night after night the church has been filled. The numbers who have attended the after-meetings, and have stayed afterwards, seeking help from the missioner, or some of the band of Christian workers, testified to the power of the Word as spoken by God's servant. His plain, downright teaching had God's blessing on it, leading many to decide that they would now accept Jesus as their Saviour.

Not less effective have been the solemn addresses every morning on the Christian life, which have been listened to by congregations of many hundreds. Here the preacher has, by the illustration of God's dealings with his people Israel, shown what is his power to help, and deliver, and make more than conquerors, those who give themselves wholly to Him and accept all He is willing to give.

One feature of the Mission in this parish has been the untiring energy of a noble band of workers, who, meeting each evening for prayer at half-past six, have then gone out in pairs to all the poorest parts of the parish, to every room and house, and by invitation and persuasion have brought in large numbers to hear the Word of Life. In many cases the reward of their loving labours has come very soon, in the sight of men and women rejoicing in a Saviour found, and the bright hope of eternal life.

ST. MARK'S, DALSTON, E.

The intention of the Christian Evidence Lectures here was to meet the doubts of anxious inquirers, not in this parish only, but in the surrounding parishes. The services have been very largely attended, and we have already had evidence of the benefit they have been to the class of persons for whom they were intended. We have likewise had some working men of the secularist type, who came in a contentious spirit to carp and cavil at the statements of Scripture. Though not "anxious inquirers," we have been as patient as possible with these, though they have come to seek interviews night after night.

THE RATCLIFF WELCOME HOME.

OUR hearts have been aching much lately in consequence of the many seafaring men and families around our Home being destitute through the dulness of trade. They are out of work, have no means for support, and naturally look to us to help them. Will friends please enable us to meet this special need? Sad, sad are the tales of some of these dear men and women. The cry here seems "No bread!" One poor woman, a dock-labourer's wife, says: "My husband, children, and myself have not tasted bread for two days; we are starving." A man tells us of his going about in the street with his two children; no lodging, no bread.

The sailors' wages have been lowered, and many men are out of employment, as ships are being laid up. May the cry of "No bread" soon be arrested, or sad, sad indeed, will be the results. R. CHILD.

Welcome Home, St. George's-street, E.

THANKSGIVING, CONFESSION, AND PRAYER.

MILDMAY CONFERENCE HALL.

THOSE who can look back to the revival which touched London in 1859-60, and wrought wondrously in the following years, will remember the frequent meetings for prayer and conference, sometimes in the rooms of the Y.M.C.A., Great Marlborough-street, or Titchborne-street, at Freemason's, or St. Martin's Hall, in the West; sometimes at Crosby, or Sussex Hall, or Wentworth-street, in the east. Some of our present readers will never forget a meeting at Sussex Hall on the evening of January 23, 1861, convened by Reginald Radcliffe, and addressed by himself and the truly reverend Baptist Noel, when the latter said, "We shall see some unknown Luthers and Whitefields excavated out of this dark mine, to spread the Gospel farther and wider than we have any idea; and if working men begin to preach the Gospel, I believe we are on the eve of a greater work than England ever saw; and the East-end of London is the right place to begin." To which Mr. Radcliffe added an entreaty to Christians, "where they had sat in their pews, there to begin to work, labouring to get a circle of blessing round that spot."

The London of to-day bears witness to God's abundant answer to the prayers offered in those years; and one of our greatest present needs is the more frequent opportunity for Christian workers to pray and take counsel together. The very answers to the prayers of twenty and five-and-twenty years ago have given them so much to do in their own circles that it has been difficult to find time for united meetings, at which all such works should be represented.

It was, therefore, with great satisfaction that the following invitation was received and responded to:—

THANKSGIVING, CONFESSION, AND PRAYER.

"It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto thy name, O Most High; to show forth thy loving kindness in the morning and thy faithfulness every night."—Ps. xcii. 1, 2.

"I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones."—Is. lvii. 15.

"The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth labourers into his harvest."—MATT. ix. 37, 38.

To Christian Workers in London.

BELOVED FELLOW-LABOURERS,—It may be in your recollection that four years ago (at the close of November, 1880), many of us gathered for a season of humiliation and prayer, and poured out our hearts before God in confession and supplication, assured that He would pardon our neglects and answer our desires with a shower of blessing. Two years later (in November, 1882) we met again to tell of his grace and recognise his faithfulness, and to seek for further manifestations of his power and love.

What wonders God has wrought in these recent years! What an impulse has been given to home Mission work in our great city, and in many parts of the land; what increased longing for holiness in many of the Lord's people; what earnestness in seeking out the lost by means both customary and extraordinary, "if by all means to save some;" and what readiness to listen to the Gospel message in open air and crowded halls, as well as in churches and chapels where the truth is clearly and faithfully proclaimed. God has given blessed encouragement to all true-hearted workers.

But when all this has been said, and we look around calmly on the state of London, of England, of the World, may we not fear that were one of Satan's emissaries to send forth a circular, recounting the triumphs of the old deceiver, he could point to pernicious activities and fresh developments of evil; to "deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish;" to the ready ear given to the enemies of Christ, and to many woeful signs of latter-day backsliding? Let us not hide from our eyes the power and malignity of our great foe, but rather try to realise how little we have yet believed, how little attempted, how little achieved in the name of our gracious Master. As a beloved brother writes, in a statement which has just been issued: "A most perplexing feature of the revived Christianity of the present day is the comparatively feeble impulse it has given to the work of Foreign Missions."

In response to this circular about 250 representatives of Christian work in various parts of London assembled; many more were occupied in the Church of England Mission, and others who would have been present were engaged in the opening of the new hall at Wandsworth, the outcome of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Mission there. Prayer was made for both of these.

Mr. JAMES E. MATHIESON presided in the afternoon, and after silent and audible prayer Rev. F. C. Lillingston read Eph. iii.

Mr. J. DENHAM SMITH said that recently he had been thrown among 120 men, all preachers of Christ, and for a whole day such confession was made as he had never heard from human lips. It seemed as though the accumulations of years upon the conscience were all emptied out. If all believers were to be thus emptied and then anointed with fresh oil, what unheard-of power would go forth from them to all the world.

Mr. RADCLIFFE, expressing his thankfulness for what had been said as to confession, went on to speak of the need of sending the Gospel to the ends of the earth. The yearly increasing population makes the odds more and more against us. We have been hiding our talents; we are but half awake. The command to go into all the world and preach the Gospel is as imperative as any other. We put away drunkards and dishonest persons from the Lord's table, but ought we not to judge ourselves for disobedience to this command? Let us hide our faces in the dust because of the past, but let us bring our tithes into the store-house and prove our Lord; and see if He will not do a new thing in the earth, and pour us out a blessing that we shall not be able to receive.

Deacon ABRAHAM added a few words in reference to Daniel's confession and prayer (chap. ix.), and the rich answer that was given him.

In the evening Dr. LASERON, who had not been present in the afternoon, read part of the same chapter (Eph. iii.) as had been read previously.

Mr. BROOMHALL reviewed the past five-and-twenty years, speaking of the greatly-increased desire for holiness, and the enlarged place which Missions have obtained in the minds of Christians. But we must not separate the work at home from the work abroad. Greater London would soon contain more people than Ireland. It has been said that the morality of Holland affects Holland; that of Belgium affects Belgium; but the morality of England affects the world. No greater work can be done anywhere in the world than in London.

Mr. Radcliffe urged, from Num. xiv., that we should go up and possess the land.

The greater part of the time, however, was spent according to the invitation, in waiting on God rather than in speaking to one another. Such meetings, held periodically in different parts of London, would be very acceptable to Christian workers, and very helpful to their work.

OBITUARY.

REV. J. THOMAS, SWANSEA.

WE regret to record the death of this highly-esteemed pastor. Although he held the pastorate of several chapels during forty years of his active life, some ten or twelve years ago he gave up his connection with any special church in order to entirely devote himself to evangelistic work. "John Thomas," as he liked to be called, was an evangelist of the right sort. On all hands and in every circle there are expressions of regret at the loss which the whole town has sustained in the removal of this exemplary Christian labourer. His funeral was one of the most impressive which has been witnessed in the town for many years. Mr. Thomas will be long missed in the town; the poor especially have lost one who, in season and out of season, laboured for their temporal and spiritual welfare.

REV. R. H. SMITH.

This well-known pastor of the Congregational body has gone to his rest and his reward. He did not live much in the popular eye, preferring to exercise his pastoral gifts in pioneering work in needy districts. There are many to whom he faithfully and lovingly ministered at Surbiton, Hanley, Gospel Oak, and elsewhere, in whose memory and affection he will long abide. He was gifted as a poet and a painter, and these gifts were ever devoted to the highest and noblest ends.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

Stockholm.—A large and handsome building, says En Avant, was opened on September 28, by the Salvation Army in this city.

The French Bible Society announces a third edition of the new revised Ostervald Bible. In three years 17,000 copies of this Bible have been distributed.

Mr. McAll has opened an evangelical popular meeting at Cognac, where so many facilities for brandy-drinking exist. The hall has been well attended, and there is every appearance of success.

Brisbane.—The Christian ladies of this place are energetically promoting the cause of social purity. The movement has been frowned upon by one of the leading secular journals, but this has only resulted in evoking greater public sympathy.

Pastor Chiniquy, while lecturing at Montreal on various subjects relating to Popery, has been subjected to much trouble and even danger to life, from disorderly persons who attend the meetings. The Montreal Witness remarks that the action of the mob will help on rather than hinder the spread of the truth.

Toronto.—The Globe of this Canadian city is reported lately to have sent a representative, disguised as a respectable tramp, on a tour among the fashionable churches. At many of them he was looked on with aversion, and generally shown the poorest seat. Altogether, he met with scant courtesy.

Monte Carlo.—It is well known that the Committee of the French Senate appointed to consider the question of the closing of Monte Carlo have unanimously reported in favour thereof, and this matter will be discussed by the Senators ere many weeks are over; in point of fact, the first days in December will probably see the topic debated.

Paris.—Mr. Dwight Norton and his wife, for many years engaged in missionary work in Chicago and Cincinnatti, have spent the last two years in Italy, and are now in Paris for the winter, testifying for God as they have opportunity. During the absence of Miss Pryde in Scotland, they have the oversight of her institute at 22, Rue des Acacias.

Popish Persecution.—The following facts are from the Courrier de l'Ouest:—"The clergy have found means to reduce Mr. Grégoire and his wife to a state of famine. Mr. G. is a lay teacher in the Loire-Inférieure, and for this sin butchers, bakers, grocers, &c., have been forbidden to supply their goods to him. At St. Philibert a barber was unfortunate enough to send his son to a lay school, although he himself went to mass. As soon as the clericals knew this, his shop was interdicted, and he is ruined."

Allier, Central France. — About 1867, M. Scilte came to Montluçon as evangelist and schoolmaster. His work was at first very laborious, extending in a short time, and including Commentry and Bezenet. These three centres have now each their Protestant free primary school with altogether 200 scholars; Roman Catholic children as well as Protestant attend them. M. Scilte and his coadjutors visit at intervals also many surrounding places, and hold interesting meetings. There are now six Sunday-schools in Allier under their charge.

Italy.—A special meeting of the General Assembly of the Italian Free Church met in Florence on October 29 and following day, under the presidency of Signor Gavazzi, to consider the proposed union and confederation among the churches. The proposed union between the Church and that of the Waldenses received the unanimous approval of the Assembly. It was referred to their Committee to carry on the negotiations, and to report to a future meeting. The subject of confederation between all Protestant churches received the warmest approval also. Matters are thus making satisfactory progress.

Philadelphia Medical Mission.—In the story of the fifth year of this Mission, we are told:—"In no part of our work have we had so much encouragement as in the personal dealing with those who have come to us at the Dispensary. All nationalities meet for this bodily healing, and listen to the Gospel, many of them Jews and Roman Catholics, who, in no other way could be induced to attend a Gospel service." Practical work has been done in each department of the Mission, including the instruction of the young, the mother's meetings, and the Gospel services. The Mission is situated in 519 South Sixth-street, at which address the worthy Doctor will be pleased to see any visitors from the old country.

Belgium.—Le Chrétien Belge gives some encouraging details of evangelistic work by the Christian Missionary Church in Belgium. Evangelists and colporteurs find, for the most part, a ready entrance and hearing in the towns and villages visited. Roman Catholics are much more ready than formerly to read the Bible and to listen to preaching, the preachers often being requested to visit them again.

Berlin. — The Court preacher, Herr Stöcker, began in 1882 to send forth sermons to the many who, through official or other work, or through sickness, are unable to hear any preaching. This work has now become a society, and is grown so much that 33,000 sermons are given away every Sunday. Policemen, cab-drivers, firemen, &c., constantly show their appreciation of the kind thought, and it is believed that the kingdom of God is spreading widely in Berlin by this means.

Iceland. — Some members of the German Lutheran Church being in Iceland in the summer, visited a small island in close proximity. Grimö, in the Polar regions, is about three-quarters of a mile long and a quarter broad. Its population numbers eighty-eight souls, who are under the care of an evangelical pastor. No vegetation grows to more than an inch high; the people are very poor, living upon their flocks, fish and seabirds. They appear to be a contented, God-fearing people.

Evangelising Work among Scandinavians in the United States is engaging public interest. To the Sunday-school of the Presbyterian Church in New Rochelle a missionary of the Sunday-school Union in Minnesota writes of the new village of Starback, where all are Scandinavians save four families, and among whom he held the first religious service in English, and organised a Sunday-school not long since. Thence he went to another village, settled entirely by Scandinavians, and found a Norwegian lady, a Lutheran, who speaks English, ready to work in a Sunday-school. She is the head of a society of sixty members in the Women's Temperance Union. They are doing a grand work, despite opposition.—New York Evangelist.

Repression in Russia.—Some specimens of the vexatious persecutions that Christians, not of the Orthodox Church, meet with in Russia, are given on authority by Le Christianisme au XIX. Siècle. In St. Petersburg public meetings of more than twenty persons are forbidden, and although family worship is tolerated, yet the police often intrude on some pretext or other. A case is given where a large family thus met in their own house for domestic worship. The agents of the police entered at that moment, and informed them that an action would be entered against them. The mistress of the house courageously said, "Gentlemen, my sons were formerly drunken and quarrelsome, they tormented me in a thousand ways, and even beat me occasionally; you never entered then to maintain order. Now that they are steady and quiet, and we can together read the Word of God, why do you intrude and treat us as if we were dangerous subjects?"

Mission and other Appeals.

Mr. C. Wickerson, evangelist in connection with the Metropolitan Tabernacle Country Mission, desires help in the erection of a Mission hall at Southgate. The treasurer is Mr. R. J. Fremlin, Rustic Cottage, Southgate, N.

Tracts Wanted.—Two thousand tracts are required to enable earnest Christian workers, who are too poor to purchase, to work a house to house visitation in the poorest localities. John Line, Mission Secretary, Broad-street, Reading.

German Text Cards.—Miss A. von Mielecka, Shugborough, Stafford, would be very grateful for any number of Mrs. Grimke's German text cards, for distribution in Germany. They are highly valued and gladly received by all.

Victoria Hospital, Netley.—Rev. G. N. Godwin, Chaplain to the Forces at this hospital (near Southampton), appeals for spare clothing, suitable for the wives and children of invalid soldiers. He would also be grateful for gifts of books, magazines, illustrated papers, &c., for the soldiers. Parcels should be carriage paid.

MR. FRANCIS MURPHY has concluded a season of Gospel Temperance effort at St. Paul's, Minnesota. His fervent and touching appeals on behalf of total abstinence from the mocking cup have been largely responded to, and the good cause has received a strong impetus. One of the speakers on the closing day expressed the earnest wish that Mr. Murphy should make the city of St. Paul his headquarters, that from it as a centre the Temperance movement might cover the entire State.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For gracious answer to prayer asked in this paper six years ago, on behalf of a friend who had left her first love and wandered far away. The Lord in his great mercy restored her. ——For grave sickness wonderfully arrested in a child.

PRAYER.—For blessing on services at Paulton, Gloucestershire, from Nov. 29 to Dec. 2, by Mr. Opie Rodway.—For blessing on a series of children's services by Mr. W. F. Seagrove, at Vernon Chapel, King's Cross, from Dec. 1 to 5.——For Gospel meetings at Studley, Warwickshire, Nov. 23 to Dec. 7, by F. E. Marsh.——For a faithful worker in the Lord's vineyard now suffering from a complaint causing great spiritual depression.——For blessing on the Mission in Broadwater commencing Nov. 30.——For blessing on Gospel Temperance Missions by Mrs. Bradley, at Haydon Bridge, Alnwick and Bridlington, Nov. 24 to Dec. 18.—— A minister in Scotland writes: "In The Christian prayer was asked for a minister, who though he had preached for years, was in anxiety about himself. He is not alone in his experience. I have been suffering for more than twelve months from a severe shock, and during the whole of that time more or less I have had much concern as to my true state before God. I ask the prayers of God's people that I may come out of this state of doubt and uncertainty. I have preached for more than twelve years. You can imagine my perplexity as to my duty now."——For the restoration of Rev. A. W. M. Christopher, of St. Aldates, Oxford, who is suffering greatly from want of sleep.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Opie Rodway writes that there has been much ground for thankfulness in connection with Gospel Mission at Stapleton-road Church, Bristol. During four nights' meetings there have been over a hundred inquirers after salvation.

Stanmore, Middlesex.—A Mission is being held here in the Mission room. Mrs. Brightman has spoken the simple Gospel every Sunday evening, and more than forty souls have professed to have found peace since June last, when the room was opened.

Mr. Charles Inglis has concluded a five days' Mission at Brockenhurst. The place has been greatly stirred. The after-meetings have been seasons not soon to be forgotten; many have been spoken with personally about salvation, and not a few have been brought to a saving knowledge of the truth.

Deptford.—Mr. T. Eyres, of the Children's Evangelistic Mission, has conducted a week's service at the Napier-street Mission Hall Sunday-school, in connection with the Lewisham High-road Congregational Church. Nearly one hundred and twenty children professed to have accepted the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour.

The Salvation Army.—Writing recently from Paris Miss Booth says:—Sunday night last at Quai Valmy I was much rejoiced, the hall was well filled and a powerful meeting in every way. At the commencement we had a disturbance caused by an infuriated woman entering and claiming her son. The dear young fellow was saved a few months back, and as he was then in a situation where he was forced by the "patron" to act dishonestly, he decidedly refused and lost his place. This enraged his parents, who are unconverted, and on Sunday evening, knowing that he was at our hall, they came and began swearing and beating him until he was obliged to leave. God alone can keep these poor people faithful in the midst of ceaseless persecution.

Saltley is a populous suburb of Birmingham. The population is 7000, chiefly consisting of the middle and lower classes. Within its limits are two large railway carriage works, employing 1700 workmen; there are also large gas works, paper mills, bicycle works, small arms factory, rolling mills, and the repairing works of the Midland Company, employing altogether 3400 men and women. We have just concluded a Mission, with midday addresses at each of the works, and I have promised to continue these addresses once a week for the future. For this and general visiting work throughout the parish, I greatly need the valuable aid of my Scripture reader, who is much liked in the parish, but whose services I am about to lose, owing to the lack of funds for his maintenance. The salary is £80 per annum, and if only this could be provided for one year, I shall feel deeply grateful.—Yours faithfully, J. Longley.

THE MOUNTAINS OF AURES.

TRULY, as an English traveller observes, "this Algeria is the most beautiful, the most fertile, the most marvellous country in the world," and not the least interesting is this province of Constantine through which we journey. In a short time all this part of Northern Africa will be opened by railway communication from Tlemcen, on the west, near Morocco, to Tunis on the east.

Following up our inquiries as to facilities for missionary effort, the languages spoken, and character of the native population, we left our temporary mountain home and friends we had made at the Col de Takitount, and made our way to Setif. Passing through rather a desolate-looking country, which was relieved by the great Babor towering up in the distance, we had a good opportunity of distributing our tracts at several poor-looking French villages on the high-road, and observed many Arab villages on the slopes of the mountains. The dress of the men showed no difference to the more strictly-speaking Kabyle districts, and the women were all unveiled, some gaudily dressed. One woman in particular attracted our attention, painted, jewelled, tattooed, with a babe at the breast and a little two-year old girl clinging to her dress with that peculiar trip children have, a diminutive little woman, jewelled on breast and arms, painted under the eyes, very conscious of her importance.

Setif is a very healthy town 3600 feet above sea level, with a very large market, resorted to by numbers from the Sahara. Its public gardens contain many Roman remains. We obtained information here which induced us to proceed to the military town of Batna, the nearest approach to the Aures country. Batna is surrounded by walls and has large barracks. We came by railway, but we found that rough roads by trap and long journeys on mule back would be almost too much for my wife's strength. Happily, we found that Colonel Playfair and two ladies had made some years before the journey which we proposed to undertake, and he gives a most graphic and interesting narrative respecting it in "Travels in the Footsteps of Bruce. London, 1877." Through the courtesy of the Chief of the Bureau Arabe I obtained, by means of a native cavalier, a translation of part of John iii. in the Chaonia dialect, in order to compare it with the same in Zaonia, Riff, and Shalleh.

The Aures mountains rise from a little below Batna, skirting Kantara, run down close to Biskra, and stretch far to the east and form the northern boundary of the Sahara; they extend seventy-five miles in length and forty-four in breadth. They consist mainly of ranges of mountains running roughly parallel to each other from N.E. to S.W., shutting in a considerable number of valleys, through which flow various rivers. The valley of the Oned Abdi nearest to the route to Biskra presents most splendid scenery.

On their northern slopes large Roman cities existed, the ruins of which excite the wonder and admiration of modern travellers; proceeding from west to east are found those of Lambæsis, Verecunda, Thamugas, Mascula, Baghaia, and Theveste, besides many others. These, together with the vast ruins of Lambessa, on the way from Batna to the Aures, where the Third Augustan Legion was quartered—nearly 60,000 men, for about three centuries—show how extensive the Roman occupation was.

Several of the cities were inhabited by Christians, and their bishops were present at the Councils of Carthage. Timegad (Thamugas) was a Christian city at the time of the Arab invasion, 646; the ruins and inscription of its church still remain. The Donalist Bishop Optatus here revolted against the Emperor Honorius, in fact the city was the focus of agitation in the fourth century. "One finds amongst them," says Mons. Emile Musqueray, "souvenirs borrowed from Judaism, and they have preserved the use of Christian feasts, and in some cases are tattooed with the cross."

For evangelising Mohammedans one can begin here under most favourable circumstances, so much in contrast with Turkey, where the difficulties are enormous, and becoming in its decadence increasingly so; here, in a country ruled by France with its equitable laws, we can surely count not only on toleration but protection. The persecutions which young men of the Beni Fraoucen have had to endure, fines and imprisonment for kindness shown to Protestant missionaries, has been in violation of those laws, and is explained by the well-known infidel bias of one of the authorities, acting on his exclusive personal authority; but this flagrant abuse of authority has become too notorious to be permitted any longer in this nineteenth century.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson not long since advocated Medical Missions to Mohammedans, and this kind of agency would be admirably suited. He says: "Medical Missions offer to missionaries the most powerful weapon they can wield—the Gospel associated with the healing art." This benevolent application of remedies without fee or reward cannot be hindered in Algeria, as it would be were it practised for payment. How happy it will be to recall the inhabitants of these mountains to a purer Christianity than that the reminiscences of which they have nearly though not altogether lost. Their present Mohammedism is only skin-deep, and their own proper legislation is by no means Mussulman, but consists of very short Kanouns. The French have most mistakenly imposed on them Mussulman law, which they are much opposed to, and introduced Arabic also, much against their desire, as they cling to their native tongue. An eminent French writer observes: "The French have islamised the Aures."

The tribes were formerly in constant warfare with one another, and this continued down to May, 1845, when General Bedeau defeated the Outed Abdi at Aidoussa, and brought about the submission of the whole country. The French military stronghold is at Khenchla, to the north, four thousand feet above the sea, and enjoys a beautiful climate. In the vicinity are large forests, great mineral wealth, and an abundant supply of water. It promises soon to become a great centre of commercial and industrial enterprise. They are also contemplating the establishment of another centre on the plain of Medina, near Bordy Tizougarine, the north-east corner of the Outed Daoud, which presents many advantages for colonisation, and has also an abundant supply of water.

Colonel Playfair and his friends were much struck with the singular beauty of some young girls returning to the village of El Arbaa in the evening with their flocks from pasture. During four-fifths of the year many of these tribes leave their arid mountain homes, and live under the tent; their flocks constitute their wealth, and their large villages are mainly used for storing their goods, under the protection of a fort, somewhat like the Mozabites, with whom are found other similarities, for in the middle ages the inhabitants of the Aures were Ibadites, or Puritan Mussulmans, like them. The people are very hospitable, and overwhelmed the travellers with kindness. Colonel Playfair says: "Our hosts were as perfect specimens of Berber nobility as it is possible to imagine, and looked, indeed, as if they had been thawed out of marble statues of Roman Emperors in the British Museum." He speaks also of the valley of Tizougarine as a most charming spot, and of Ain Mimoun "the traveller might fancy himself in one of the finest parts of Switzerland."

Their language, the Chaonia (from Semetic cha, a sheep), or rather the Tamzira, is a Berber dialect, extremely soft, differing considerably from the Kabyle of the Jur-Jura. To the east, however, they speak the Zenatia, and on the south-eastern angle, from Chechar, the Arabic.

Both as to the country and its people it is an inviting field, a virgin soil, waiting to be cultivated by the servants of Christ.

Yours faithfully,

GEO. PEARSE.

DOWNE LODGE HALL, WANDSWORTH. — A report of the opening of this Hall, last Thursday, is in type, but we are obliged to hold it over for a week.

FRENCH IN LONDON.

AT the invitation of Monsieur Barbier, a few friends met on Thursday last to consecrate, by prayer and praise, the new reading-room attached to the Salle Evangélique in Portland-street. On entering we found two small, but comfortable rooms, on the ground floor, furnished in a plain simple manner, with a well-stocked book-case, the contents of which will give pleasure and profitable employment to our poor French-speaking neighbours on many a night during the ensuing winter. On the tables were placed the daily papers and writing materials for their use, forming, with the beautiful wall-texts in neat frames and a good light, no inconsiderable antagonist to the low cafés with which this neighbourhood abounds.

Mr. Joseph Weatherley presided over the meeting, and offered a few words of congratulation. Short addresses were given by Rev. R. Berry, of Islington Chapel, and Mr. W. Harrison, of St. Giles' Mission. Then some most touching testimony was given to the value of Monsieur Barbier's work in the Salle Evangélique by several men of different nationalities. One poor fellow stated that he came there for temporal benefits, but had found the pearl of great price, adding, that now instead of spending his evenings in the public-house, he intended to come to the reading-room.

The advantages of the Institution can be obtained by a subscription of sixpence per month. Several new members were enrolled on this the opening night. It was announced in the course of the evening that, in addition to the reading and writing facilities, there would be a systematic free distribution of the Scriptures in French; also that a registry would be opened for foreign men-servants, upon the principle so long carried on for women-servants and nursery governesses by Madame Barbier, at 10, Charlotte-street, Portland-place, W. In connection with this part of the work, several young Swiss entered their names as seekers after situations, and Monsieur Barbier will be most thankful to hear from any Christian family requiring such. Any help in this interesting effort will be thankfully received by Monsieur Barbier or Mr. Joseph Weatherley, 51, Gordon-square, W.C.

KING'S LYNN, NORFOLK.—Mr. W. Forbes closed a seven days' Gospel Temperance Mission in the Athenæum Music Hall on Sunday last. Arrangements had been made for five days only, but the friends invited Mr. Forbes to remain two days longer. Some well-known drunkards signed the pledge.

PEACE AND ARBITRATION.—Mr. Samuel James Capper, author of "Wanderings in War Time," delivered an intensely interesting and instructive lecture at Uxbridge on Friday evening, under the auspices of the London Council for Promoting International Arbitration, on "What I saw of the Bombardment of Strasburg." Mr. Capper was one of the noble band who distributed the War Victims' Fund raised in Great Britain for the relief of the suffering non-combatants living in the districts devastated by the Franco-German War.

CHURCHES v. PUBLIC-HOUSES.—Under the direction of Tolmer's-square, Hampstead-road, Help-Myself Society, a census was lately taken of the number of persons attending places of worship on a Sunday morning and evening, and those entering public-houses and beershops on a Saturday night between the hours of nine and twelve. The number of churches and public-houses were confined to twelve each, and the census was taken by members of the above society. The district included Euston and Hampstead-roads. The number entering the public-houses was 10,037, of which 5684 were men, 2769 women, and 664 children. The churches include several denominations, and the worshippers numbered 8700.

"A GOOD WORK IN PERIL."—I wish to thank those kind friends who have so generously responded to my appeal for funds for the Home in Great Coram-street. Receipts have been forwarded to those who have given their names, but may I ask all those who have not yet done so, to send them to Mrs. Andrew, at the Home, 35, Great Coram-street, W.C., that she may acknowledge their kind donation. We have indeed reason to thank God for the timely support, and to ask that He would send yet further help.—Yours truly, J. TYLOR, 29, Pembridge-crescent, W.

Notices of Books, &c.

A Light in a Dark Place. This is a sketch by a teacher, of the early history, struggles, and triumphs of the Deptford Ragged Schools. Can be obtained from the Secretary of the Institution. Price 3d.

Drink, What it Costs. By Bishop T. H. Gregg, D.D. 5l. Old Bailey. 1d. This tract ate appeals to reliable statistics in proof of the fearful costliness of the drink system. The facts quoted are appalling in the extreme.

Queensford. By Bruce Edwards. National Temperance League. This is a Temperance tale, no doubt, but it is overloaded with romance, and contains much that is altogether irrelevant to the Temperance question.

Little Robert: the story of a good boy, who died in his eighth year. Obedient, truthful, loving, and kind, he was a bright example while he lived, and ready for death when the summons came. It may be obtained of Mrs. Cunningham, North-West Castle, Stranraer, Scotland.

Mr. J. E. Hawkins has issued the three little floral text books, "Bible Lilies," "Daisies from the Psalms," and "Pilgrim's Rest," bound in leather and enclosed in a neat leather case. It forms a very handsome Christmas or birthday present. (6s.)

A Shipful of Children. The Little Folks' Annual for 1885. Cassell & Co. Anything that comes from "Little Folks" is always welcomed by little folks. Wholesome, hearty merriment abounds in these pages. Before 1885 dawns many a shipful and many a houseful of children will have read and re-read this Annual.

Spirit Footprints. By Mrs. John Foster. Nisbet & Co. This is a casket of poetic gems, and those who become its possessors will find that the treasures are for daily wear. They breathe a devout and gentle spirit, and bear the impress of originality. "Songs of the Inner Life" remind one of the gifted singer, F. R. Havergal. At a time when so many write and so few really read (books are devoured nowadays), it is refreshing to meet with this thought-compelling book of poems for quiet or busy hours. (1s. 6d.)

The Story of the Jubilee Singers, with their Songs. By J. B. T. Marsh. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Those who have heard the famous Fisk Jubilee Singers and do not possess this interesting and edifying work should procure a copy of the new edition just issued. The story that Mr. Marsh has to tell, and tells so well, is more wonderful and fascinating than many a romance. The chequered experiences of these dusky warblers in their own land, and the cordial reception they have ever met with in this country, form a curious chapter in the history of the negro race. The collection given here of the melodies that have charmed so many musical ears and thrilled so many Christian hearts, is worthy of an honourable place in the popular hymnology of the age; to be thoroughly appreciated, however, they must be heard as the Jubilees alone can sing them. A very excellent portrait group of the Fisk Jubilee Company now in England serves as a frontispiece to the book.

The Spitalfields Genius. By T. Fayle, B.A. 4s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. The life of an English chemist, who was the esteemed friend of Alexander I. of Russia and the Duke of Wellington, cannot fail to be interesting. William Allen's life-work is less generally known than those of his co-religionists George Fox in the seventeenth century and J. J. Gurney in the nineteenth. He has, however, this advantage over them, that an undecaying monument of it may be seen by anyone who visits "America"—not the continent, but the Sussex colony bearing that name. His biographer aims at brevity, an example that all biographers would do well to follow. Sometimes, however, this well-meant brevity leads to indistinctness. The interesting chapter on Quakers dispels not a few popular errors about that worthy community. Mr. Fayle's decided likes and dislikes are, for a biographer, rather too strongly expressed, and we do not understand a phrase on p. 179. W. Allen, he says, "grasped at the anti-slavery question more than St. Paul." It would be truer to say that Allen applied to modern slavery the principles laid down by God through St. Paul in reference to all slavery, especially that practised by the heathen of old. With the exception of such minor flaws the book is well written, and will interest many classes. The book has three neat illustrations, and a clear chronological table showing in parallel lines the chief events of Allen's day, and the leading incidents in his own life.

The Minister's Pocket Diary and Clerical Vade Mecum, for 1885. 2s. Hodder and Stoughton. Complete in all respects, and most convenient for the ministerial pocket.

Victoria Hall Addresses. By Heyman Wrefford 1d. Good sermons, full of Christ and his finished work. The publisher is A. Goodere, Little Queen-street, Exeter.

Con's Acre: a Tale of Gillcourt Farm. By Mrs. C. M. Clarke. Sunday School Union. The beneficial influence of a pious woman on a young lady fresh from boarding school is here set forth. A hasty temper, with unforgiving spirit, subdued, and a contented mind in place of peevishness and discontent, are among the victories achieved and recorded. (1s. 6d.)

Sick-Room Meditations and Studies; or, Alone with God. By Rev. Joseph Cross. Nisbet & Co. The beautifully chastened spirit of the accomplished author of this volume gleams on every page, and is doubtless largely the product of being "alone with God, on a sick bed." The thoughtful and spiritual reader will here find much food for quiet and profitable meditation.

Little Folks. Cassell & Co. 3s. 6d. A thoroughly cheering volume inside and out. Attractively bound, and full of good stories and beautiful pictures. The little folks of the present generation are, indeed, a highly favoured race. The series of papers called the "Editor's Pocket-book," and "Stories of Westminster Abbey," are especially interesting and instructive.

Daisy Snowflake's Secret. By Mrs. G. S. Reaney. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. This is a popular edition of a book that has met with considerable acceptance from the story-loving public. Mrs. Reaney knows well how to point the moral, while at the same time she adorns the tale, and all who would speed the Temperance cause will wish that yet another edition of this book may be called for.

The Christmas Number of The Graphic, an early copy of which has reached us, is a wonderful combination of artistic and other attractions. The extra plate "Quite Ready," is a triumph of the art of colour printing, and is claimed to be the largest picture of its kind ever issued in connection with a newspaper. The price of this special issue is only 1s., and it will be in the hands of the public on December 1.

About Jesus: One hundred poems by William Luff. Drummond Tract Depôt. Mr. Luff is no stranger in our pages, and in these strong, helpful verses he certainly becomes our friend. Truly, his one theme is Jesus, and in "The 'Comes' of Jesus," "All can do something for Jesus," and "Walk on for your Master Jesus," he is at his best. It is a book to keep and to give away. We shall recommend it to all our friends for its hearty freshness and its life-like reality.

Alpine Souvenirs. We have received specimens of these beautiful souvenirs in the form of cards, note-paper, and books for Christmas use. They are adorned with real Alpine flowers and leaves, and are worthy of the highest praise for neatness, elegance, and adaptation to the purposes of Christian friendships. They should have a large sale, as the proceeds are devoted to charitable objects, the primary one this year being the supply of water-pillows to the Derby Nurses' Training Institute for loan to the sick. (M. S. S., Rozel, Torquay.)

The Honey Bee: Its Nature, Homes, and Products. By W. H. Harris, B.A., B.Sc. Religious Tract Society. Seeing that we import so large a quantity of honey from other lands, it seems strange that we should be so little careful of our own. The manual before us affords such varied information up to the latest date that any one may in a little while know all about the bee, and turn that theoretical knowledge to practical advantage by the very instructive amusements and profitable employment of bee-keeping. (5s.)

The Children's Portion. By Dr. Alexander Macleod. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. As a preacher to children, Dr. Macleod has, perhaps, no living equal. In these delightful chapters he seems to us to be at his best. With due admixture of the doctrinal, historical, and allegorical, there is, of course, a large infusion of the narrative element. It is specially the case with regard to children, that "truth, embodied in a tale, will enter in at lowly doors." These stories are, for the most part, bits of real experience, and the lessons they convey will be sure to stick in the youthful mind and heart. We hope not only that many children will read this beautiful volume, but that many preachers will take note of the preface, and its message to them. The publishers deserve a word of praise for the very pretty binding.

The Seven-roomed House of Salvation. By Rev. Charles A. Fox. Partridge & Co. 2d. Mr. Fox's New Year Addresses are always good; but none of its predecessors is calculated to be more generally useful than this. It shows that four-square and deep foundation which God's free grace has laid for our justification, and the glorious building which He has reared upon it. To be justified by faith is to be safe within the Door, but there are rooms within of ever-increasing communion, into which we have free access by the same faith in the same Lord Jesus Christ. We hope this little book will be widely circulated.

Birdie's Bonnet, and other Stories. By M. E Townsend. Hatchards. Four useful and natural stories. They are evidently intended specially for young women, but others will find in them valuable teaching agreeably imparted. One story shows what shame and sorrow may result from love of finery. Another well describes a fine instance of Christian self-denial. The discontented swan reiterates the old proverb "There's no place like home." Mrs. Townsend has always used her pen with ability in behalf of high morals. We are glad to observe in this little book plain allusions to the doctrines of grace and the work of the Holy Spirit. The class she writes for require "no uncertain note."

I've Been a Gypsying. By George Smith, of Coalville. Popular Edition, illustrated. 3s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin. Sir Stafford Northcote spoke truly when he said that the good deeds of Mr. George Smith would live after him. They are his best memorial, and one that will keep his life and labours fresh in the hearts of coming generations. We are glad to welcome a new and popular edition of Mr. Smith's deeply interesting book, in which he describes with a realistic pen the varied aspects of gipsy life. He is now beginning to see some of the fruits of his earnest efforts for the social and moral elevation of these pariahs of society. We hope the widespread perusal of these able sketches may help on the objects he has in view.

Babylonian Life and History. By E. A. W. Bridge. Religious Tract Society. Mr. Bridge's little volume is a very valuable contribution to the evidences which sustain the claims of Scripture. It brings out to a remarkable extent the correspondence between history as transmitted by inspired and uninspired men. It places the denier of the historical truth of the Book of Daniel under the unwelcome necessity of ignoring a great variety of coincident records, the veracity of which is in no wise open to suspicion. In a day of widespread scepticism, the historical proofs of the veracity of Scripture are increasingly important. We recommend this volume, therefore, to educated readers with great confidence as meeting a present necessity. (3s.)

MESSRS. J. F. SHAW & CO.

Another goodly parcel of books comes to us from this firm, every one of them handsomely and tastefully got up. Estella; or, Who is My Neighbour? By Lady Hope. 5s. Life and love are the spirit and soul of this beautiful, thrilling story, which would be spoilt by any attempt at description. Graced with common-sense culture, and burning with an enthusiasm which is ever on the side of God and the right, the authoress deals in a delicate, truthful manner with the second great evil of our civilisation. Around the elegant tracery of her story she has fixed her strong points, and she touches them with a deft hand, so that evils are uncompromisingly met, and the remedy found.

The Lord Mayor. A Tale of London in 1384. By Emily Sarah Holt. One of our autumnal enjoyments is supplied by Miss Holt in her annual historical story of England in the long ago. The volume before us is dedicated to the late Lord Mayor, Alderman R. N. Fowler, M.P., whose year of office has been marked by more practical sympathy with Christian and beneficent work perhaps than that of any of his predecessors. Five hundred years ago John de Northampton was Lord Mayor and John de Wiclif died. Young men and women loved, and old ones suffered then as now. From these records of the past our author has woven a story full of stirring incident graphically told, while the tone and tenor of the book indicate the highest Christian life. (5s.)

The Guest Chamber. By Lady Hope. Parchment, 1s. The simple eloquence of this delightful little book will touch many hearts with more earnest desire to keep the Guest Chamber consecrated to the Heavenly Guest, and to let Him rule the whole being and brighten the whole life with his presence and love. Being a pocket size, it will make a good travelling companion.

Fathoms Deep. By Catherine Shaw. 3s. 6d. Mrs. Shaw always more than satisfies her readers, and in this sweet story of practical Christianity she has even surpassed herself. We have made the acquaintance of some of the characters in "Alick's Hero," of which this appears to be the sequel. It is a story of patient, heroic waiting and trust, of faith rewarded, and truth triumphant. The characters have their trials, and young people will be helped in reading how they overcame them. The book has a gloriously healthy and uplifting tone, and leaves a pleasant echo in the breast. We recommend it to those who want to enlarge the hopes and aims of their young friends during the coming season.

King's Scholars; or, Work and Play at Easthaven. By M. L. Ridley. 3s. 6d. From cover to cover this is one of the best boy's books of the season. Fun in plenty, and such fun! Work and play, honour and humility, bright Christianity, and not a bit of "preachiness" from first to last. The story, too, is a good one, and will help many a fellow to keep straight at school, and to think in a manly way of the things that made little Cartwright's life so beautiful. Norman and Elsie; or, Two Little Prisoners. By Emily Brodie. 3s. 6d. Surely there never was such a time for boys and girls! Here is a book presenting so true and delightful a picture of them, that we instinctively wish ourselves back to the days of childhood, that we might enjoy the fun and frolic here depicted. It shows us three months of life among the young folks, and we can hardly believe we have only read about it—it all seems so real, and has done us so much good. Two London Homes; or, Marjorie and Muriel. By Evelyn Everett-Green. 2s. 6d. The story of a rich and a poor child drawn together by circumstances born of love to the Master; how they met, how they were helped, how each triumphed in her way, and how all turns out happily in the end, we must leave our young friends to find out for themselves. The teaching of the book is of the right sort, and in its handling of a growing error, it is wise and true. His Chosen Work; or, Was it a Failure? By C. M. McSorley, 2s. 6d. A real and heart-stirring story of a life with a noble purpose in it, showing how almost insurmountable difficulties may be overcome by unselfishness and perseverance. It is a pity, however, that the hero's motive—emanating as it must have done from the Source of all strength—is not more clearly defined.

Other Lives than Ours. By Mrs. Stanley Leathes. (3s. 6d.) A very good book to put into children's hands, teaching, in an amusing way, lessons of kindness and consideration towards animals. As the creatures tell their own tales, the little readers will be moved to sympathy. The illustrations, by M. Irwin, are very good.

The Sefton Boys. By C. E. Irvine. A capital story for boys, written by one who understands their trials and temptations, and rejoices in their victories. The boys sketched in this book are real boys, not saints, philosophers, or martyrs, but with the possibilities of all these in them. The hero of the tale is a type of a young Englishman and a Christian—one who has not yet attained perfection, but is pressing forward. (1s. 6d.)

Lost on the Moor; or, The Story of our Geordie. By Anne Brown. The being lost on the moor is only one episode in the tale of a life simply and well told, and showing how an early sorrow and a life-long trial need be no hindrance to a useful and happy career. (1s. 6d.)

Tom Tit, his Sayings and Doings. By Ismay Thorne. 3s. 6d. Tom Tit, like most of his age (five years) and race, said little but nonsense and did little but mischief. Still, the magic of love turns these sayings and doings into wonder and beauty. One might fear lest the little ones who read this book should be tempted to imitate Tom Tit, if one did not remember that all small boys, and girls too, can originate plenty of mischief without the necessity of copying others.

Our Darlings. Edited by Dr. Barnardo. 3s. 6d. Really the editor of this volume must be more careful, or we shall have to bring an action against him to recover damages. When we take up his book we find the pictures so full of life, and the tales so full of interest, that we cannot lay it down again, and meantime what is to become of our work? Well, we forgive him this time (though he is sure to be as guilty again), and trust that this bewitching book may find its way far and wide, not only delighting the children, but touching the hearts of the parents, so that substantial help may come to the useful institutions over which the editor presides.

Words of Life. Packet A. Selections from Pilgrim's Progress, with pictures and appropriate passages of Scripture. Our old friend Christian must always have a welcome, but we have certainly met him in many a more attractive guise. (1s.)

Four most useful productions from the graceful pen and gifted mind of Mrs. Shaw are included in this parcel: Echoes from the Bible, being a third series of "Something for Sunday," is a set of ruled papers with a suggestive picture to each and a question with Scripture references. It will give pleasurable and profitable employment for Sunday hours, and may prove the basis of interesting Bible lessons. Alphabetical Texts, for pricking or painting, being a fourth series of "Something for Sundays." Can be worked in coloured wools after they are pricked, and will give great pleasure to the little workers. The sacred words will thus be imprinted on the memory, and the texts make a pretty and useful decoration for nursery walls; or the children may be encouraged to paint or work them as gifts for the poor. Something for Wet Days. Wet days will not be dreary days to the little people who are fortunate enough to get these pretty, suggestive pictures, on which to write short essays or descriptive sketches. Who Will get a Prize? The outline pictures are by Mr. T. Pym. Every child who paints these outlines will gain something still better than a prize—education of eye and taste. The pictures are pretty and good, and the short sketch or tale with each helps to keep up the interest of the young artist. We hope many will enter the list of competitors for the prizes. (1s. each.)

"Rich in Faith" (2d. Shaw & Co.) is a very touchingly written account of a young woman, who has been for years a great sufferer from a painful disease. The writer of the little book has had the privilege of ministering comfort to the spirit of this sorely-tried one, and desires also to do something towards her bodily support. Readers of the narrative will doubtless be moved to help in this mission of mercy.

Christmas Cards, &c. A packet of these seasonable souvenirs, of very varied character but of general excellence, comes to us from Mr. Bernhard Ollendorff, 4, Jewin-street, E.C. He excels in the juvenile department, and those looking for children's cards that combine sentiment and humour will find here an ample choice. The raised cards, representing satin fabrics in brilliant colours, are novel and pretty. Clever verses are contributed by Lewis Novra and R. P. Scott to the children's series. Among the verse writers for the cards for general use, our poet friend Miss Charlotte Murray holds a prominent place, some of her telling stanzas being reproduced in fac simile of her fine, familiar handwriting. Mrs. Haycraft and other able verse writers are impressed into the service, while the artistic combinations of flowers, animals, landscapes, &c., sustain the high reputation of the firm. Mr. Ollendorff has also published a profusion of very pretty and cheap text, birthday, and other cards, reward tickets, book-marks, &c. For some of the birthday cards Miss Macritchie contributes exquisite verses.

One publisher seems to have almost exhausted the resources of the beautiful in art, until we see the productions of another; then we begin to find that there is apparently no limit to the supply. Those cards sent out by Messrs. Phillip Brothers, 4, Silk-street, E.C., are remarkable for elegance of style and delicacy of colouring, while the seasonable mottoes and verses are of a choice and high order. Miss F. R. Havergal and others have to pay tribute in this department, and in each case the setting is worthy of the song.

Although more than a million copies of "Cassell's Popular Educator" have been sold, this remarkable work is still as largely in demand as ever, and the publishers have made arrangements for re-issuing it in serial form during the present month. The secret of its ever-growing popularity seems to be that it is so framed as to meet the requirements of every class of learners.

Letters to the Editor.

A SUGGESTION.

Dear Sir,—Might I suggest that Scripture texts be placed on the walls of work-rooms? I have been an employé in a work-room of a Christian master, and have thought how beneficial these reminders would be in strengthening the serious and warning the careless.—Yours, respectfully,

A Work Girl.

TREATMENT OF HABITUAL CRIMINALS.

Dear Sir,—I hope it is not too late to say a word in expression of my interest in the article on the treatment of habitual criminals which appeared in your paper of September 25. The problem there touched upon is a most serious one, to use no stronger expression, and the writer has the merit of making a serious attempt to grapple with it.

Could not a beginning be made in Manchester or London to deal with it? Could not a few of our more practical philanthropists be invited to meet the writer of the article, to consider the best form of meeting the great want before us?

I will not add to the length of this communication further than the expression of my hearty approval of the spirit in which the writer has approached the subject, and my earnest desire to see the matter take shape, if not in the precise form there indicated, at any rate in such other form as the experience and judgment of earnest men might approve.—Your faithful servant,

R. Bailey Walker, F.S.S.

Ribblesdale, Fallowfield, Manchester.

"AFRICA'S MILLIONS."

Dear Sir,—With reference to the project mentioned in last week's Christian under the above heading, I think it only right, without commenting upon the proposal, to send you the thoughts of Mr. Fred. S. Arnot on the subject of self-supporting missions in Africa.

His letter was written in August last from Bihé, which he had reached from Zambezi, and his conclusions are in effect as follows:—

(1) Trading would of course be quite legitimate, but much capital would be required, also great tact and experience, and losses might be very heavy.

(2) Labouring to raise crops would not be very suitable work for whites in such a climate. If the natives were employed for this, their charges would be very high, though they sell the produce of their own labour for very little. They think nothing of taking their goods sixty miles for sale and make no charge for the journey, but if asked to take purchased goods a few miles they would expect to by well paid. Any crops that might be raised would also very probably be stolen.

(3) He therefore does not advise "self-support" at present in Central Africa, highly as he approves of it. On the other hand, he says that if anyone is prepared to forego European comforts and live like the natives, his expenses would be easily met by very moderate supplies of cloth, and his health might be well maintained if he took care to have his food well cooked.

Though very desirous of a fellow labourer, he thinks that for pioneering work he is better alone, as a single white man is not suspected, but two would be. The opposition and danger to a party of twenty would therefore be very considerable. That there is ground for this is seen in the fact that the American missionaries have had to flee from Bailunda, though within the Portuguese territory.

Nov. 17. Faithfully yours, M.

PERSONAL AND SOCIAL PURITY.

THE following are some notes of an address given recently at a meeting "for men only."

The speaker said he desired to address young men as a father, older men as a brother, and all as a man of like passions with themselves. Is General Gordon at Khartoum the only man who is surrounded by enemies? There had been a rebellion in heaven and an invasion on earth. Spiritual foes have surrounded our spirit from early days for many evil purposes, and one is to prevent our living a life of purity and self-control. The Word of God not only teaches us how to be saved and to reach heaven hereafter, but how to live on earth, what to avoid, and how to act in all the relations of life.

In passing under review the particular form of uncleanness denoted by the word "effeminate," a statement by Mr. A. S. Dyer ("Safeguards against Immorality") was quoted, showing it to be one of the greatest causes of insanity. "He that hath an ear, let him hear!"

Gal. vi. 8 was dwelt upon at greater length. While a repenting sinner believing in the Lord Jesus Christ will be saved, yet he that has sown unto his own flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption. He will suffer injury in his condition as an organic structure. There are certain laws or arrangements so that a cause is followed by an inevitable result. Saved or unsaved, there is no difference in this respect. Certain sins bring about injuries to mind, character, and body, so that, besides what remains in a future state, a transgressor reaps already a deteriorated physical life, which more or less accompanies him, Christian or no Christian, to his dying hour. Beware of wilful sin. There is no device possible for the prevention of an effect from a cause. If it does not come in one way, it bursts out in another. God cannot be set aside, and (Num. xxxii. 23) "Be sure your sin will find you out."

On the other hand, there is nothing essentially impure, if it is rightly used—(Titus i. 15): "To the pure all things are pure." And God's special approval of purity is shown in part of the history of Joseph: "The Lord was with Joseph." Blessing, beyond all the pleasures of sin for a season.

There are certain safeguards. Yet the speaker desired not to present that as the primary aspect. Rather, good things become safeguards incidentally. Right with God involves good to man. A few definite exhortations were given: Cultivate friendship with good persons, male and female. Let mind and body be well occupied. We learnt once, "For Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do." Perhaps we have proved it. Take plenty of bodily exercise, occasioning real fatigue, though short of exhaustion—that leads on to drink.

There are things to be avoided. Keep aloof from trifling companions. Shun vicious persons. Abstain from indelicate conversation. Cost what it may, and the Lord will be on your side, let it be known if necessary that you will tolerate nothing of the kind in your hearing. Even otherwise respectable newspapers sometimes transgress in this matter.

Upon the effect of bad reading and bad pictures, Mr. Dyer's pamphlet was again quoted. He says:—

"Having incidentally alluded to the pollution of the mind by a certain kind of conversation, I cannot omit a few words on the far-reaching influence of impure reading. Such reading would be bad enough if its effect upon the passions and imagination were confined to the time of its perusal. But it does not end there. John Angell James, one of the most eminent preachers who have adorned the Congregational denomination, once said in his pulpit, 'Twenty-five years ago, when I was a boy, a schoolfellow gave me an infamous book, which he lent to me for fifteen minutes. At the end of that time I was to return it to him; but that book has haunted me like an evil spirit ever since. I have asked God to obliterate that book from my mind, but I believe that I shall carry down the damage of those fifteen minutes to my grave.' Dr. R. G. Bulkeley, in a sermon preached in Lincoln Cathedral, mentioned a similar incident. He said, 'A lad once showed to another a book full of words and pictures of impurity. He only had it in his hands for a few moments. Later on in life he held high office in our Church, and years and years afterwards told a friend that he would have given half he possessed had he never seen it, for its impure images, at the most holy times, would sometimes arise unbidden to his mind.'"

May God, through his Word and by his holy Spirit, reveal, as necessary, the secrets of each one to himself. Forgetfulness is not forgiveness; and even though forgiven there is a wound and a dishonour; and old men turn pale, and public speakers may prove dumb on this subject—and why?

The past is beyond recall. What of the present? What shall the future be? If tempted to these, or to any sins, get before your soul the crucifixion of the Lord Jesus Christ; when he endured, not only suffering from man and from Satan, but the wrath of the Holy Righteous God for sin; and look up to Him, the risen, loving, living Saviour, mighty to deliver, and He will snap the chain.

But besides that, cultivate purity, pure imaginations, pure affections. Be thoroughly pure in conduct. Even the redemption is not all. The Lord Jesus gave himself for us that He might both redeem and also purify. He who would be purified must be redeemed; and he who is redeemed must be purified.

Lastly, the speaker advocated early engagements. He would not quite say early marriages, for they ought to be affected by fitness for its responsibilities. A man ought to see his way in some degree to provide what is needful. Still, the time of moderation in means may with God's blessing prove the happiest part of life. But as to early engagements, to have an affection for, and to win the affections of, a girl worthy to be loved, is in the highest degree beneficial and ennobling.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH IN BELFAST.

THESE hard-working brethren have been continuing their labours during the past week in the Ulster Hall. It is called the largest public building in the north of Ireland. It was taxed to its utmost last Saturday evening to hear the evangelists give their song service, "The Cross of Christ." This service, as one might expect, is simply packed full of the Gospel. Right well was the message given by the brethren, and very attentive was the hearing accorded by the large congregation of people. Sunday found the Y.M.C.A. hall full at eight o'clock for the prayer-meeting, and the Ulster Hall was also well filled at the afternoon and evening meetings.

God has continued to bless both the song and speech of the evangelists. In the wareroom I spoke of a fortnight ago, the number of young converts has increased from ten to twenty. The girls are going on happily, and have already been useful in leading some of their companions to decision.

During the week the meetings were well attended, and every night there were those who waited behind for conversation and prayer. A very special interest attached to the Wednesday night meeting, because on that evening Mr. Smith told the story of his own life. It is a tale worth telling from every standpoint, and right well did our brother magnify the grace of God in reciting how he was led to decision for Christ, and how he was brought to consecrate himself to the Master's service. The record of such a life should prove a blessing to many.

With agents in different parts of the world, and adopting a very simple plan of action, the Society ought to prove a great boon, especially to the travelling public. The annual subscription is only two shillings.

MR. WILLIAM NOBLE lately addressed a large assembly in Preston on the Temperance question. The meeting, presided over by the vicar, was convened to commemorate the Gospel Temperance Mission held there about a year ago. Mr. Noble gave one of his earnest, rousing addresses. Speaking of the ruinous results of the drink, he said there were men in London, who had formerly been ministers of the Gospel, who were now glad to receive the price of a night's lodging.

A VILLAGE LIBRARY.—There is a village in Surrey where a pastor and his wife are faithfully and diligently working. During the winter months they endeavour to supply the members of their congregation with books. They say that many husbands and sons have been kept from public houses by this means. If any Christian people possess interesting magazines and books, and will spare them, they will be doing good service by devoting them to this village library. Mrs. Clemance, Brunel House, Denmark-hill, S.E., will be happy to receive and forward any parcels entrusted to her.

HELP WANTED FOR THE ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children,

Now Sheltering, Educating, and Training over 1,300 Poor Boys and Girls.

Dr. BARNARDO will be very grateful if all who are preparing gifts for the Annual Sale on behalf of the Homes for as yet but very little has been received. He would also remind those whose busy fingers are at work for the Sale, that shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby clothing are particularly valuable additions, being much asked for and readily sold. Of course, besides these, he will be glad to receive pictures, jewellery, old coins, old china, curios, musical instruments, and fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, books, drawings, bric-a-brac, and other examples of the thousand-and-one tasteful ornaments which are sought for by purchasers.

WILL KINDLY SEND THEM IN AT ONCE,

The SALE will this year be of the SAME CHARACTER as LAST YEAR, that is to say,

Instead of holding a Public Bazaar at the West End during the month of December, as formerly, all the Goods received will be made up into

£5 and £10 Boxes. These Boxes will each contain a very excellent selection of at least the value of £6 and £12 respectively, and will be sent on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque to any part of the country.

Ladies ordering these Boxes confer a great benefit on the "Homes"; for by this easy method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West End of London.

Many kind-hearted sympathisers have already expressed warm approval of this plan, and promised to purchase boxes, with the contents of which they propose to hold in their own houses, to which their personal friends can be invited during the present season.

If there be many articles left over unsold, they can be disposed of in the last week of January (D.V.), in the New Hall of the "Edinboro' Castle."

Dr. Barnardo earnestly invites all who love poor children, to co-operate with him in this new plan to increase the funds of the "Homes," by which, too, all the wearying, disappointing, and expensive drawbacks of a public Bazaar may be avoided.

The Boxes, carefully lined and packed, will be ready for transmission on the 10th December, and can be despatched on receipt of order to any railway station in the Kingdom. Applications (PREPAID), with full instructions as to conveyance, etc., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to

The TRADE MANAGER,
18, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

To all who have already in any degree helped by Contributions of Useful or Fancy Articles, Dr. Barnardo now desires to offer the expression of his very grateful acknowledgments.

THE RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.

A SPECIAL interest attached to the seventh anniversary, last Friday evening, of this well-known place of refuge and resort for the seamen of all nations. The enlarged room, which is to be used chiefly for the Scandinavian sailors, was opened. Considering the limited space at command of the architect (Mr. R. Hill), it must be confessed that he has achieved a decided success. In his opening remarks as chairman, Mr. J. E. MATHIESON said it almost seemed a dream to look back seven years, and think of what had been accomplished since the work began. He gave a due meed of praise to Mr. T. A. Denny, who suggested and largely provided for the alterations that had given them such a beautiful room. Mr. Mathieson referred to the widespread depression in the shipping trade, and the consequent distress among seamen, as additional reasons for the energetic carrying on of the work. He had some weighty words to say, also, about the guilt of the professing church in its comparative disobedience to the divine command to evangelize the world.

In his secretarial statement, Mr. ISAACS briefly described the different branches of the work, which is all voluntary, the only paid official being the very efficient caretaker of the house. The nightly meetings for English, French, Italian, and Scandinavian sailors are well attended, with most encouraging results. A new departure had been made during the past year in the Sunday afternoon meetings for children. There have also been instituted week-evening classes for boys and girls. Last winter some free teas were given to the men residing in one of the large lodging-houses, when the Gospel was preached. It is proposed to repeat these this winter, if the needed means are furnished. Among other "wants" mentioned by Mr. Isaacs were a Christmas tree, and articles such as cuffs, comforters, handkerchiefs, books, &c., for presentation to 100 sailors, besides articles to replenish the tree for the children's Christmas party. To sum up, he wanted about £100 to wipe off the cost of alterations and for general current expenses. Presuming that many of our readers will be glad to respond to some or all of these needs, we may append the address of the Rest, 163, St. George's-street (Ratcliff-highway), E.

After some hearty words from Mr. HILL, the architect (whose services have been freely rendered), Mr. T. A. DENNY spoke, with a characteristic mixture of grave and gay. Alluding to some of the Chairman's remarks, he said that most people would like to do exploits, but we need to remember that no service done for God is little in his sight. There is something for all to do. He thought there had been too much of the one man sort of ministry; but it was now played out. He rejoiced in the unsectarian and catholic nature of the work. He had been brought up in one particular Church, but now he hardly knew where he was, in a denominational sense. Mr. ROBERT PATON dwelt on the importance, for successful Christian service, of conferring not with flesh and blood, but looking to God for the enduement of power. When one sees the abounding iniquity, he is ready to say, "Who is sufficient for these things?" Only the power of the Holy Ghost will enable the worker to succeed.

Mr. NOBLE, one of the workers, gave a cheering testimony to the progress he had witnessed, and to the joy he experienced in the work. He appealed for regular helpers in the Sunday afternoon services for children. Then came Miss HEDENSTROM, who devotes her energies to the Scandinavian sailors—her "dear boys," as she calls them. She said that as she sat there in the meeting she could not but cry for very joy. She was a stranger in a strange land, and everybody had been so kind to her and her fellow-countrymen. Her great trouble just now was the want of sufficient room in the Scandinavian Temperance Hotel, in Leman-street; at Christmas about 200 seamen would be wanting to find accommodation, and there was only room for 75. What was she to do? If some lady friend would come down to the evening meetings at the Rest, to play the harmonium and help her in the singing, she would be so grateful. She, too, wanted to give Christmas gifts to her "dear boys;" would not some friends come and help to trim the tree, and bring something with them?

Last of all came Mr. REGINALD RADCLIFFE, whose heart and lips were full of praise for all that God had wrought these past seven years at the Strangers' Rest, the Welcome Home, and the Bridge of Hope. He besought the workers to take hold on God and to allow Him to take hold on them for yet further service, not only among the seamen of all nations that come to the port of London, but for the dwellers in those nations that are still lying in heathen darkness and the shadow of death. He spoke of the awakening interest among the railway men, and called for a return to the methods of the early church, when the believers went forth in all directions and to the remotest lands then known, telling out the message of salvation. According to custom, the meeting was brought to a close with the observance of the commemorative feast, at which brief words of exhortation were spoken by Mr. George Holland and Rev. J. Topping. Prayer was offered at intervals during the evening for the Christian workers and work generally, in the East-end, as well as for workers abroad.

"These Hymns have abundant 'swing' and 'march' in them, and will be found largely suitable for evangelistic work. And so, indeed, they should be; for the chief raison d'être for any new hymn-book must be the special value it may have in connection with Gospel effort. It is gratifying to learn from Mr. McGranahan's preface that the 'Songs of the Gospel' have for the most part been written—words and music—by those engaged in evangelistic work. This is as it should be. The labourers in the harvest-field best understand what is likely to be of service to them in their work."

JOHN WESLEY:

HIS LIFE AND TIMES.

By JOHN W. KIRTON, LL.D., Author of "Happy Homes, and How to Make Them," "Buy Your Own Cherries," &c.

"The spirit of a great reformer's life has seldom been presented in a form at once so brief and lively. . . The memoir pourtrays Wesley in all the aspects of a character that was many-sided. Every page sparkles with edifying anecdote. . . The book costs only a SIXPENCE, and ought to have a sale of many thousands."—Christian Leader.

"We should suppose this SIXPENNY book will sell by thousands, and do good wherever it finds a place."—Baptist Messenger.

"Written in a popular style; yet of high literary merit. One hundred and twenty-eight pages, crown 8vo., 6d.! After this, who need be without a Life of Wesley?"
Primitive Methodist Magazine.

"In some nineteen chapters Dr. Kirton tells, in a popular and fascinating style, the life of the Great Founder of Methodism. It is, emphatically, the Biography of Wesley for the people. The volume contains 128 pages; and the price is only SIXPENCE. To every Primitive Methodist we say, Get it at once!"—Primitive Methodist.

"The happiest and most successful attempt yet made to present, in a brief compass, a really life-like account of Mr. Wesley and his work. We most heartily commend it. A copy should be in every home. The Publishers and Author deserve universal thanks for placing within reach of every one in the community such a gem of a book."—Irish Christian Advocate.

GEORGE WHITEFIELD:

HIS LIFE AND TIMES.

By J. R. ANDREWS, Author of "The Life of Oliver Cromwell."

"A SIXPENNY well-printed and well-told life of this extraordinary man of God deserves a world-wide circulation, and will probably be read by thousands."—Baptist Messenger.

"A marvellous record of earnest labours and successful work; one, too, that may be purchased for SIXPENCE."—Irish Congregational Magazine.

"We cannot imagine a better SIXPENNYWORTH of human authorship. Oh that every Minister in the three kingdoms possessed this 'Life of Whitefield,' and would read it through! Why, it would set the Church in a blaze! It would be a noble thing if some wealthy man would see to it that this biography was placed in every manse in the United Kingdom."
REV. C. H. SPURGEON in The Sword and the Trowel.

"A most interesting, and withal marvellously cheap, biography of the great Evangelist of the last century—the Moody of his day."—Baptist Witness.

HENRY MOORHOUSE,

THE ENGLISH EVANGELIST.

With Lithographed Portrait.

"Henry Moorhouse was of a gentle, winning disposition; and I do not know of a single instance, in a wide-spread work, in which he left any but friends behind him. Denominational jealousies were forgotten; Christians of every name gathered about him; and ministers with long years of successful work, and young converts just entering the field, alike sat at his feet to study the Word. I feel that I have lost a dear friend, and one that in a long and intimate personal acquaintance was very helpful to me. I hope that the story of the evangelist will lead many, who have not come under his personal influence, to a more thorough study of God's Word; knowing how God has used and blessed it in the work in which our friend Moorhouse was engaged. And may they be able to say, as he could, 'Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path.'"—D. L. MOODY.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONSUMPTION.—CASE of Miss M. E. LAIDLAW.

In August, 1883, I received a letter from a friend of this patient, urging my best consideration of her case. Both her parents had died from Consumption. At this time she was suffering from every symptom of this fell disease. She had been compelled to resign her situation, and (as her friend writes), "the doctors had told her she would never be able to take a situation again."

I gave my best attention to her case and the correspondence extended from that time to May, 1884. During that nine months there was a gradual improvement (with slight variations), till she got thoroughly well.

Recently I received a letter as follows:—

"Dear Sir,—Miss Laidlaw, after being under your treatment for nearly ten months, gradually left off your medicine, and has been without it for six weeks. She still maintains her strength. She has taken a situation, and we believe she is alive and in fair good health entirely through your treatment.—John Hayes, 15, Wordsworth-street, Penrith."

EXTRACT from a LETTER as to CASE at DEAL.

Mr. W. Darracott, of High-street, when writing me on behalf of a relative, says:—"You remember my correspondence with you. I was given up by two doctors; but after taking your medicine for nine or ten months, was restored to perfect health."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

"These Hymns have abundant 'swing' and 'march' in them, and will be found largely suitable for evangelistic work. And so, indeed, they should be; for the chief raison d'être for any new hymn-book must be the special value it may have in connection with Gospel effort. It is gratifying to learn from Mr. McGranahan's preface that the 'Songs of the Gospel' have for the most part been written—words and music—by those engaged in evangelistic work. This is as it should be. The labourers in the harvest-field best understand what is likely to be of service to them in their work."
The Christian.

AN EFFICACIOUS REMEDY.

THE Odo-Magnetic method of healing is not an experiment upon public credulity; its principles were recognised and employed (though imperfectly) for therapeutic purposes years ago. From the first introduction of Odo-Magnetic treatment to the present date it has received marks of continuous and increasing favour. By it many who had despaired of recovery from disease have become an astonishment to their friends and themselves; while some, not perfectly cured, because absolute cure was not possible, have yet found their condition so ameliorated as to make life tolerable, if not enjoyable. In many instances it has so energised the nervous system that unavoidable pain has been borne with greater fortitude, and the unqualified testimony on all hands is that none of the remedies yet provided for human ills have conquered such a varied array of diseases, or have been so simple and comfortable in application.

Mrs. BURLEIGH STUART, Dergmony, Omagh, Co. Tyrone, having, through a former patient, become acquainted with our method of treatment, and having a nursemaid suffering from Rheumatism, sought our advice. Mrs. Stuart professed herself to be an unbeliever in Curative Magnetism, and was unwilling, therefore, to go to much expense; at the same time, she expressed herself as being extremely anxious to try the experiment on a case which would be entirely under her own observation. From the account which we received, we expressed our confidence of success if a trial were granted, and, under the circumstances, offered to treat the case for half the usual fee: the lady accepted our offer, being most anxious to save a human being from the life of suffering which she feared awaited this poor young girl. Though still strongly expressing her incredulity, she regarded this case as an excellent one for experiment, as the girl was of too childish a nature to understand anything about it, and, being French, could get no information on the subject from anyone but herself. These circumstances she considered would quite eliminate imagination or any merely subjective impression as an operating cause.

Ten days after acknowledging the receipt of the appliances, Mrs. Stuart says: "I have to report immense improvement in the patient, who has been treated according to to your directions. When your appliances reached me the girl was with difficulty able to move about the room. She is now able to do her work, can walk out with the children, and even run a little. I cannot but attribute this change to the use of your remedy." Four months after, Sept. 17, 1884, Mrs. Stuart says: "My maid has continued in perfect health ever since, and has had no return whatever of pain. Some, no doubt, will regard this as a mere coincidence, not a consequence of the wearing of magnetic garments, but the coincidence was so extraordinary, the weather even being against her at the time, that I am myself strongly of opinion that the cure was due to your remedy."

On receipt of particulars of any case in which advice is sought, the fullest information will be forwarded, and the required treatment suggested, by Mr. B. COPSON GARRATT, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury square, London, E.C.

NEW WORK BY PHILIP HENRY GOSSE, F.R.S.

THE MYSTERIES OF GOD: A Series of Expositions of Holy Scriptures. This day. Crown 8vo., 3s. 6d.

THE AUTHOR says: This volume is addressed exclusively to believers. It aims to array what the Holy Scripture declares of the eternal purpose of God toward the Earth and Man, and of its progressive fulfilment: of the barrier, seemingly impassable, introduced by the Fall, and its removal by Redemption: of resurrection, and the measure in which it is already possessed: of Christ's headship, and the responsibilities of the Church to Him: of priesthood, of the Psalms as the experience of Jesus: of the antagonism of physical science to Revelation: of the things shortly coming on to the earth; of the final destiny of redeemed man.

"There was a wonderful 'all-roundness,' if one may coin the word, in her character.... A mind which could make the most of all opportunities, clear, logical, mathematical, strong; and a soul which could transfigure the humblest toil, by putting into it poetry, and sunshine, and love. That she thought to good purpose the passages quoted from her letters and notebooks amply show. That she spoke to good purpose is testified by the way in which her words were stored up by those who heard them; and that she acted to good purpose is proved by the success of her branch of Syrian Mission Work."—Church Bells.

"A touching record.... her arduous work in the British Schools in Syria was undertaken and accomplished with that Christ-like simplicity which characterised her whole life.—The Christian.

STARVATION WAGES.

In reply to our first article, November 13, entitled "Law, Labour, and Prayer," "A Manufacturer" writes a letter from which we make the following extract:—

"We have come to the conclusion that Political Economy is not a false science, but an honest endeavour to formulate some of the laws by which God rules the world, and that we must work in accordance with its laws. You, Sir, seem to have come to an opposite conclusion. A heavy responsibility lies upon both, for assuredly one or other is fighting against God." *

We have no wish to dispute over words, or to discuss mere abstract principles of Political Economy, but we may mention two or three accepted principles and ask whether they be the laws of God, and if so, whether their action should be overcome by higher laws:—

Prices are regulated according to supply and demand.

If commodities or labour be scarce, prices are high; if they be in abundance, prices are low.

Buy in the cheapest market, and sell in the dearest.

An article is worth what it will fetch.

Within certain limits these are true and healthy principles, on which commercial transactions may be conducted with the greatest advantage to the greatest number. But when, on the one hand, commodities are very high, and, on the other hand, wages are very low, the result is the greatest suffering to the greatest number.

The law of gravitation is a sound and healthy principle, essential to the existence of the world as it is, but like every other law it may work ruin on a very extensive scale, and we are continually on the alert to prevent the mischief which might arise from it. Thus the Law of Moses required that when a man built a house he should insure against accidents by putting a battlement round the roof. It was a good thing to have a house, and that the house should have a roof, but it was a bad thing to leave it unprotected.

It does not therefore follow, because a principle is sound, or a law good, that it will act beneficially under all circumstances.

The principles we have named above as to buying and selling, as to work and wages, are sound and good, but human selfishness takes advantage of them, and when excess of labour brings the workers into competition, wages are reduced to starvation point. But starvation means mental and physical suffering in its acutest and most terrible form.

* Our correspondent further says that we severely censure him and those whom he represents. This is far from our intention. The subject is too difficult, too complicated, and we are all too much implicated in it, to admit of recrimination. We doubt not that our friend feels with us the evil of starvation wages, and is as anxious as ourselves to find out a remedy.

And just as we interfere with the operation of other laws to prevent their doing hurt, or to rescue our fellow-creatures from injury, so we contend that the higher law of doing to others as we would that they should do to us, necessitates our interfering with the laws which govern trade when they tend to injure and destroy our fellow-men. The law of machinery worked by steam is to go on inexorably, whether it be tearing cotton fibre or mangling an operative who has become entangled in it. But everything gives place to the endeavour to rescue the sufferer, and the machinery is stopped in order to release him. In like manner, we contend that when the machinery of trade is in motion according to given and acknowledged laws and principles, it must be stopped rather than be allowed to crush and grind to powder men and women affected by it.

The Daily News, which might have been expected to stand by the principles of Political Economy, showed in the article from which we quoted, that they must be influenced and modified by the higher law of humanity.

We repeat our question: Is there no hope, no help? Must the machinery of trade go on, no matter who is entangled and mangled in it? Must it, like the car of Juggernaut, carry its idol on ruthlessly and unstayed, no matter how many are crushed beneath its wheels?

God's great remedy is to spread abroad and replenish the earth, to scatter these toiling thousands, to cultivate the mother earth, out of which must come our food and clothing, and the supply of every physical necessity.

"A Returned Colonist" urges this view of the case in the following letter:—

"Permit me to offer some remarks on work and wages from what may be considered a Scriptural and business standpoint. An employer is not entitled, nor could he continue to give such wages as would extinguish his capital. To obviate that result he should retire from the business. When there is a surplus of labour, those who have the opportunity or the means should emigrate, and they would thus benefit both themselves and their fellow-workmen. We have been multiplying, without duly replenishing the earth. Those who come to poverty and want cannot emigrate, nor should our waifs and strays be imposed on other countries. Many of the working-class save enough to enable them to emigrate. More than 20,000 have been assisted by Mr. Vere Foster, of Belfast, by a London association, and by others to emigrate, the average cost being 30s. per head. It is the best policy to aid the thrifty, and this can be done safely by an order towards the passage, which is presented for payment by the shipowner.

"If the vast sums that are spent on strikes were applied towards the emigration of surplus labour, the result would be ten times better. Employers would probably join in this work.

"It may be stated, in conclusion, that while the population of England and Wales has increased 155 per cent. (say one and a-half times) in seventy years, that of Australasia has increased 250 times, or from 12,000 to 3,000,000. If the State were to assist emigration as above, and as the Colonies have done, by the expenditure of millions sterling, the surplus rural population could be sent to our Colonies, instead of drifting into large towns."

Another correspondent has an entirely different conception of the cause of the evil and its remedy. He says:—

"Legislation has turned aside the natural operation of the laws referred to, and produces the disorder which is so bewildering to thinkers on the subject. The statutes which uphold 'credit' in trading transactions are the source of the mischief, and have the effect of making the well-to-do richer, while effectually hindering the rise of the poor. . . . One aspect of the subject may be seen by those who can spare time to spend half a day in a county court. Committals to prison of those who evidently have no means to pay, and orders to pay to those in poverty, are sufficiently suggestive that judicial support to credit must work evil all round from what is there seen of it. Were this legal prop taken from it the system would fall, leaving the abundant earnings of the country to flow in sufficient measure into every household. . . ."

The causes which produce the present distress are many and complicated, and the remedies must be so also. Beyond question, drink and improvidence are supreme factors in the case. But the experience of the past few years has shown that the barrier against these must be erected by the people of God, and must descend from the higher strata of society to the lower. And while God thunders in the heavens, "What mean ye that ye beat my people to pieces and grind the faces of the poor?" it is surely the province of those who are the light of the world and the salt of the earth, to seek from the Father of lights wisdom to set up such a standard of righteousness and beneficence before the conscience of the nation as to compel the recognition of the law of kindness as superior to the law of trade.

DENOMINATIONALISM.

An Old Missionary (page 8) complains justly, of the undue multiplication of churches and chapels in small places. One very simple step towards the remedy of this evil would be to abstain from denominational names. For example: A ——ist chapel is established, let us suppose, in Northburn. There is not another chapel within a mile. But it is called Northburn ——ist Chapel. It therefore confessedly represents only one section of the Church, and by its very title invites others to come and complete the circle. If, on the other hand, it had been simply called Northburn Chapel, or any undenominational name—Rehoboth or Elim, or Ebenezer or Salem—so long as its worship was conducted without any unnecessary obtrusion of denominational distinction, yet without any suppression of truth, there would be no appearance of challenge to any other body, and no excuse for the entry of any other, until the increase of population demanded it.

One thing is certain—that the old barriers are broken down. The people care less and less about denominational distinction. They go to the place of worship which suits them best, to the preacher who edifies them most, to the circle in which they feel most at home, but in an increasing number of cases they scarcely ask themselves to what denomination it belongs. And this is also true, that the leading ministers of every sect bring less and less of their own distinctive colour into their preaching, so that a stranger would not know from the discourse whether he were hearing an Evangelical Churchman, a Baptist, Presbyterian, Methodist, or Congregational minister. Where, then, lies the difficulty of getting rid of the sectarianism which "An Old Missionary" declares presents so great a hindrance to home and foreign evangelisation?

THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD.

WE read in God's Word with admiration and joy the devotion and separation of the early Christian Church at Thessalonica. In the midst of great opposition and persecution she stood "holy and without blame," a living testimony, "an epistle known and read of all men," a light shining in a dark place. How the heart of the Lord must have rejoiced over her devotion as his betrothed bride, and how truly St. Paul must have entered into the joy of his Lord and Master when he wrote, "For from you sounded out the word of the Lord not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in every place your faith to Godward is spread abroad; so that we need not speak anything. For they themselves show of us what manner of entering in we had unto you, and how ye turned to God from idols, to serve the true and living God; and to wait for his Son from heaven."

In the three weeks St. Paul had been with them, they seemed to grasp the glorious purposes of the Lord Jesus Christ concerning them—not merely what He was for them, but that they were to be for Him down here; a separated people, separated from the world to Himself, and, like Moses, "esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Eygpt." What a contrast to the state of things now existing, when the world is wooed and courted to help on the work of Christ. Just as if He had failed, and his exceeding great and precious promises were like so many counterfeit bank-notes!

Angels might well wonder and weep at the following extract from a daily paper. But what must his heart feel when He sees his bride playing the harlot with the world!

"Foremost amongst the pleasantest sights of the season are the numerous fancy fairs and bazaars which have been and continue to be held in various parts of the metropolis and i's suburbs. . . . One of these al fresco entertainments was held during the summer in the grounds of ——. The object of the show is to raise £1,000 for the permanent building fund of St. —— Church, B——. Apart from the natural surroundings, &c., &c., there were beautifully attired gipsies, youthful and middle-aged, on all hands begging to have their palms crossed with silver; and there was a real Indian princess who told fortunes, the majority of whose prophecies it is to be hoped may come true.

"Then there were Italian and Spanish banditti, who did not look at all terrifying in their assumption of the character, but played good-naturedly, and quite as naturally as English youths are seen to do, at lawn tennis with young ladies dressed in pink and other tints of the fashion. But evidently the sensational attractions of the various shows were the performances of certain leading actors, who cordially lent their aid to the good cause for which the fair had been got up. Amongst them were Mr. ——, in his famous 'monopolylogue' ——; Mr. ——, who gave a dramatic recital; Miss ——, Mr. ——, and other public performers whose fame is established."

One high up in the Church writes: "Alas! alas! what shall we say of that portentous change which is passing over many hitherto evangelical churches and their ministers? What shall be said when it is those 'without' who are exclaiming: 'These Christians are just as gay, as sumptuous and convivial, with their feasts and wines, as fond of mingling in doubtful companies, as we are?' The fiction is exploded that Christian believers are 'new creatures in Christ Jesus.' Their religious soirées and bazaars are places for the same acting, laughter, and buffoonery as the paid caterers of the world provide."

The heads of the faithful may well be bowed in sorrow. What a scene! Children of light going to worldlings to make them happy, and help them build their churches. What a farce the Confirmation promise has become! The devil and his works, the vain pomp and glory of the world renounced! Are they not rather embraced, and these very acts advocated by many who are looked up to as spiritual advisers. Is the Master's voice lost in the world's din? Is his loving call, "Follow thou Me," spurned and despised?

Christians — fellow-Christians — awake! awake! This sleep, this carelessness, is deadly. Cannot you hear above the charmer's voice the piteous cry of the perishing multitudes? Awful thought—perhaps their souls may rise up in judgment against you some day.

Let me close with St. James's definition of true religion: "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

The CHURCHES and FOREIGN MISSIONS.

By an Old Missionary.

THE attention of the Church of Christ is being more and more directed to the evangelisation of heathendom; and surely there can be no more hopeful sign of the spread of Christian truth and principle at home than an increased effort for the diffusion of true religion abroad. The more Christians learn to value Christ's Gospel, the more will they seek to make it known to others.

But the age of romance and sentiment in Missions is now over. Pioneering heroes have done their work, and we have now to face calmly, and with full information at our disposal, the hard stubborn facts of the millions sunk in gross heathenism. The number of Christian agents is yet very small. The fringe only of heathendom has been touched. The results achieved (greater, perhaps, though they be than we had any right to expect) are insignificant when looked at side by side with the masses of heathen. In the presence of such facts as these, and we must not forget these facts and think we are doing well, ought we not to review our forces and consider our position as Christian churches?

It has come to be accepted now as almost a truism that Missions are the great end of the Church, and every body of Christians feels itself bound to help on the Mission cause. This indicates much advance in point of view during the last 50 years; but notwithstanding all this, may we not test ourselves with such a question as this: Is the Christian Church prepared to be a missionary church? Let us not be startled by the question; let us rather press it home to our consciences. Are we ready to evangelise the heathen?

We may consider this question briefly under two heads: first as to union, and secondly as to doctrine.

First, then, as to union. Is the Church sufficiently united to undertake foreign Missions in any adequate manner? There has been, undoubtedly, much progress in this matter of union during the last twenty years, but the rivalry of denominations resulting in the undue multiplication of churches and chapels in small places, the unnecessary retention of a fixed number of them in places where population has decreased, is a great evil, causing waste of money, waste of men, not to mention other and worse consequences. Is it not time that the true unity of the Church of Christ be demonstrated to the world by persistent efforts to adjust the supply of ordinances to the demand, and not to the glorification of sect? Redistribution is the political question of the hour; could not something be done ecclesiastically in this direction too? A reduction of churches in certain places, resulting from a recognition that there is an adequate supply of means of grace by an evangelical body there, would be an unmixed blessing.

This matter of union affects not only home Missions but also foreign Missions. We know of prejudicial results in the fields of heathendom. Missionaries do endeavour to sink differences before the great enemy, but there is wasted energy even there. Greater union at home would oblige the missionary societies to co-operate more largely abroad, so that districts might be chosen and worked by only one society, instead of by a dozen. This would result in thoroughness of work, and prevent many difficulties about payment of agents, discipline, and methods, so constantly rising abroad.

What we would urge, then, is that the churches should aim at practical union in home work, and should bring a great force to bear on missionary societies to lead them to practical union abroad. Only in this way can the Church grapple with Missions manfully, i.e., as a United Christian Church.

A briefer consideration may be given to the second question, which concerns doctrine, or that which we have to teach the heathen. No doubt the two matters of organisation and doctrine are closely bound up together, but they can be viewed separately. The question is, Are we sufficiently agreed on what we are to teach the heathen? Have we learnt to sink all differences of minor importance, and go forth with the Gospel of Christ pur et simple? Is there sufficient preparedness on the part of the Christians of our country to enable them to rise above questions of attitudes, and vestments, and strictly denominational differences? If the Church at home could reach by consecration and true unsectarianism this higher Christian life, then missionary societies could better instruct their representatives as to their duties in heathen lands. The great danger now is that our sectarianism is spreading abroad, and this can only be stayed by action at home. Missions are the reflex of the home church life—they cannot rise higher.

Take, for example, the matter of church government, and the clear unadvisability of taking to India any form of church government. New Testament scholars show us how no distinct form of church government is laid down by Christ and his Apostles, and how Episcopacy, Presbyterianism, and Congregationalism are all forms which grew up according to national genius, or local necessities. They are not, then, matter of Divine legislation. Why should missionaries be bound to establish their own forms of church government in India? It could be arranged that all the converts of a certain district could meet and form one Christian Church—they being left to themselves to develop that form of church government best adapted to Indian customs. A united Christian church could then be built up in the presence of heathendom, and with what blessed results! Missionaries would thus have one great work on their hands—viz., the conversion of the heathen, and truly converted men, free from the confusion and jealousies engendered by sects, would be a great power for India and China's regeneration.

We long for a greater ingathering into the Christian Church; but we often fail to notice the great condition as set before us in Isaiah, "Arise, shine, for thy light is come." "The Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising." Success abroad will be in proportion to success at home. Greater union and greater agreement on essential truths are needed above all. So long as these are wanting, we have still to ask the question with which we set out, Are we prepared to be a Missionary Church?

A SONG OF YOUTH.

BY REV. HORATIUS BONAR, D.D.

Early seeking, early finding,
Happy, happy we!
Looking up in life's sweet morning,
Looking up to Thee!
We begin our children's days,
Lord of glory, with thy praise.

Early asking, early getting,
Happy, happy we!
We would daily, blessed Jesus,
Find our all in Thee.
In thy fulness is the store
Of the life for evermore.

Early knocking, early opening,
Happy, happy we!
By the holy gate we enter,
Lord, to dwell with Thee.
In the city of the blest—
In the home of heavenly rest.

Early loving, early trusting,
Happy, happy we!
Looking upward, pressing onward,
Day by day, to Thee;
Leaving this poor world behind,
All in Thee, O Christ, to find.

LITTLE SHIPS.

Looking out upon the blue sparkling sea from the windows of an old house where I was staying, I saw a fleet of fishing boats put out, one after the other, with different names painted in various colours to suit the taste of their owners. Their big brown sails were hoisted to catch the breeze, as they passed silently down the narrow creek that lay between two dangerous reefs of rock, and they were anxiously watched by those left on shore.

Evening after evening the boats went out and the fishermen toiled all night catching the fish which would bring the daily bread. This evening the sky was cloudless, and far, far across the sea, with its lovely, ever-varying lights and shadows, could be seen the great vessels, bound for all parts of the world, and in comparison with which the little boats looked like little brown specks on the water. Thus I watched, and wondered what were the thoughts and motives of the weather-beaten sailors, till they all passed out of sight, and the evening sun sank beneath the waves, and only the steady glow of the lighthouse marked the entrance to the harbour.

Waking in the night I heard the wind moan and sigh in angry gusts round the house, with the rain dashing against the windows, and the shrill voices of the women, as they watched from the cliff for any sign of a boat's return. Next morning the sky was heavy with clouds; the rain was driven past by the wind in sheets; the waves were breaking with dull, sullen roars against the rocks. Beaten back, they raised themselves in huge masses of white crested water, and were thrown back splashing and foaming, only to return again and again, and again and again, to be foiled in their attempts to conquer the stern cliffs that kept their force in check. Anxious faces are gazing out to sea, to catch the first sight of the returning boats, and anxious hearts beat faster as far out are seen the boats tossed up and down, now rising triumphant on the crest of a wave, now sinking and seemingly engulphed in the trough of the next.

Will all return? is the question; and have all outlived the storm? and can they make the narrow creek in safety? Hopes and fears strive for the mastery. Nearer and nearer they come, some steady and straight for the shore, others tossed and buffeted; further out it was the same with the larger vessels, the huge hulk tossed about like a plaything. At last one boat nears the shore, and smiles are bright on every face as the men help to pull the boat to land, and the women take the fish that have been caught to market.

And then, that excitement over, the mothers, wives, and sisters still wait for the other boats. Though one has gained safe shelter others may not, and the boat now coming seems scarcely able to live through the storm. Still it does, and the men have only to tell of damage done and desperate efforts to make for home. Hope is high for the rest now nearing the cove. The wife knows her husband's boat, and prays he may be kept, when a sudden gust strikes the boat, and it staggers and reels over to one side. A wave breaks over, angrier than the rest, as if greedy of its prey, and before help can be rendered every vestige of boat and men is gone. Only the cries of the women tell of the desolation that comes when the husband and father are snatched away, and a harder fight with poverty begins.

It seems to me that you boys and girls, just setting out over life's sea, are like the fleet of pretty fishing boats. The men and women who are teaching you, helping and guiding you how to do right, are like the big vessels. All are bound on the same voyage, and all hope to make the same harbour. To you life is sunny and bright, and, as you gather the flowers, with birds singing, and the soft wind touching your cheek, you cannot think there will ever be a stormy day again, but all will be smooth for you.

We watch you as you set sail, and know you mean to steer clear of the rocks and shoals—treacherous rocks of lying and swearing and evil thoughts, that don't seem to make any difference. Perhaps, outwardly your bark is still fair to see, and you are sailing as steady as ever. But these things are the little leaks that by and by will let the waters of vice and sin in, and loving hearts will be wrung as they see you swamped and tossed to pieces, and sunk out of sight. Others keep on bravely, and, though waves of trouble may come, they ride above the storm. They may have sore struggles in life, but they fight it out, and are welcomed by those who watch us from the further shore.

Life is our voyage, and heaven is our harbour. If we want to live through storms that would shatter our frail barks on the rocks that lie below—evil, and sin of every imaginable kind; not drink alone, though drink drags down into its whirlpool thousands who sail out with every prospect of safety and peace—we must make sure that Christ is our Captain, for unless He is on board terrible shipwreck shall we make. If we trust in Him we need not fear, for He has put one grand shining lighthouse for us to steer our course by, and that is the Bible. It tells us how to guide our barks, and sheds its brilliant light over the darkest night of toil and sorrow. And how, when we have touched the eternal shore, shall we praise the Captain of our Salvation for that beacon light.

"Pull for the shore, sailor, pull for the shore;
Heed not the rolling waves, but bend to the oar;
Safe in the lifeboat, sailor, cling to self no more,
Leave the poor old stranded wreck, and pull for the shore."

MESSRS. MURPHY IN MINNESOTA, U.S.

IN addition to the brief notice in our last issue, we cull the following from the Union Signal:

"The W.C.T.U. owe a debt to Mr. Murphy and his son they can never repay; they have opened the doors in this great city, and let into every corner a bright hope for Temperance work; they have not only made homes happy by healing the wounds of the drunkard, but they have made a pathway for those who have so long wandered through the city trying to find some path to lead them to successful work in the cause so dear to our hearts. St. Paul has passed out of the darkness into light. We find in our efforts many ready to help us where in days past we could find not even hope.

"The daily papers of this city have been most kind and we have been so gratified to find at each meeting the courteous reporters prompt at their places. It is impossible to mention all our good friends that have come to us during these meetings, but I must tell you that for four Sundays the Grand Opera House was given us free of charge by W. F. Davidson, one of St. Paul's noble business men, and a grand temperance worker as well; to him is due much of our success. Mr. Murphy and his son have left us, but not until their friends were numbered by thousands. Many men who have been drunkards for years have signed the pledge and are sober to-day. Wives and husbands long separated are united and made happy. Nothing has ever awakened such good feelings in the community as these Gospel Temperance meetings. I trust they may be kept up in this state until every town and county has felt their softening influence."

REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND.

THE return of Mr. Hammond to British shores after an absence of sixteen years, will justify some notice of his work in Scotland in 1861, and of his labours in London in the same year; and again in the years 1868-69. A generation has sprung up since our friend was last among us; and to most of these his name and work must be largely unfamiliar.

The year 1861 was a time of spiritual activity in these islands. In the spring of that year, Mr. Hammond, then spoken of as "a young American," and who had a short time previously been a divinity student in a Scottish University, was holding revival services in Northern Britain. In each instance these meetings appear to have been attended by a powerful wave of Divine blessing. We first hear of him at Annan (a town, the name of which has become familiar by its association with the story of the lives of Edward Irving and Thomas Carlyle), in January and February of 1861, although Mr. Hammond had been at work elsewhere before this time. The Revival of that date thus records some particulars of this movement of nearly a quarter of a century ago:—

"The effect has been such as no words can describe. No place of worship has been found large enough to accommodate the people; and even at the enquiry-meeting there have been as many as five or six hundred. . . . That hundreds have been saved there is no room for doubting. . . . The number of young men and women who are savingly changed is very large. The work among the children is noteworthy. Most remarkable, too, have been the answers to prayer."

From Annan Mr. Hammond went to Dumfries, where also it was said at the time, "the Lord was working wondrously." On the second Sabbath, when Mr. Hammond was present in Dumfries, there was a remarkable manifestation of the Spirit's presence and power. One church was filled to overflowing. Then a second church was opened. In short, there were five churches opened that evening, and about a thousand people remained to the inquiry meetings. A minister wrote thus at the time: "The work that evening was delightful. A considerable number were brought to the knowledge of the Gospel. We had a meeting in my church last week, and we thought no fewer than thirty or forty people were brought to the Saviour."

After the lapse of well-nigh a quarter of a century the work of Edward Payson Hammond in Dumfries has its living witnesses. There are, it is confidently believed, men and women in Scotland who are now serving God in their day and generation, who can look back to those days as the time of their first illumination; there are Scotchmen in London who, if speaking of Dumfries, would testify that this was the time, and this the place, of their spiritual birth; there are more than one evangelist now working on the other side of the Atlantic, who would refer to the Dumfries meetings of 1861 as the occasion of conversion and of entrance upon the new life of faith, love, and service.

Some recollections of the Glasgow and London meetings of that time will follow in another number. J. R. C.

DR. DYKES ON RAGGED SCHOOLS.

THE announcement that Dr. Oswald Dykes would preach a sermon at Regent-square, to Ragged School Teachers, on Sunday morning week, attracted a large congregation. The chosen text was, "It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish" (Matthew xviii. 14). Premising that the flowing tide of evil in this country received a powerful check at the beginning of the last century through the influence and labours of Wesley and Whitfield, and later on through the inauguration of Sabbath-schools by Robert Raikes, Dr. Dykes said it was nevertheless a fact that at the present time we are compelled to admit the existence of a condition of things among the poor so appalling as almost to paralyse all hope. Although there might be less brutality and less ignorance than formerly, yet the misery and suffering resulting from improvidence, overcrowding, sickness, and the precarious struggle for livelihood, joined with a growing feeling of discontent, was so widespread and so intense, that all the efforts of philanthropy had been able to do little more than to mitigate and relieve, while the underlying causes had scarcely been touched.

If this fact is sad to contemplate, as representing the life of thousands of our fellow-men, how much greater does the evil appear when viewing the subject in relation to children. With much graphic power the preacher asked his hearers to try and picture to themselves, if they could, the surroundings of a poor infant child brought into the world under such conditions. Largely the offspring of criminals, the unemployed, or of those whose daily living is uncertain and precarious, if anywhere on earth there was a sight to be witnessed that might move us to pity, surely it was here. These "little ones" were brought into our midst with the almost certain prospect of a life of suffering, poverty, and vice. It is here, continued the Doctor, that our text comes in. It is not God's will that even one of these little ones should perish. Some are disposed to say there is no remedy, and that a cure is impossible. But Jesus denies that perdition for them is a necessity. We, therefore, ought not to acquiesce in such a view, but should feel ourselves bound to find out the existing obstacles to their rescue, and seek to remove them by every means in our power. For the evils that surround these little ones there is a remedy provided, and that remedy is the Gospel.

Doubtless much might be done by the State, which will never have reached its goal in legislation until every means at its disposal has been brought to bear upon the removal of every preventible cause. Still, the Church is not to wait for that. We are not at liberty to sit still until the State intervenes; neither must we be deterred from the discharge of our personal obligations and responsibilities in the matter of saving these little ones from perishing. If only in units, we must rescue all we can, for it is not our Father's will that one of them should perish. Ragged-school teachers have been fishing in these streams for a period of forty years. The necessity for commencing the schools was a reproach to us, while the necessity for their continuance is a yet greater reproach.

Dr. Dykes proceeded to show that the need was not met by Board-schools, since many of the class reached by the ragged-schools elude the inspector, notwithstanding the compulsory clause. Moreover, the ragged-schools have become much more Sunday and night-schools for religious instruction than formerly. They have gradually developed into a great Christian organisation for the training of these little ones, and in addition have become centres of operation for almost every good work. The requisite teachers are not to be found in any other kind of school. It is only the Christian man and woman who can "show them the Father," and how unlike their earthly father He is.

After reading extracts from a letter written to him on the subject by Lord Shaftesbury, the preacher addressed words of stimulus to every teacher hearing him: "Be it yours to go on working, if only to win one of these little ones, each of whom is sent into the world possessing capabilities of almost unlimited development. Discouraged you may sometimes be because more notice is not taken of your work by the State or the public; but One eye rests upon you, who is now owning you as a servant, and will one day crown you with a reward. In prosecuting this work you are treading in the very footprints of Jesus. Conscious of this, you can with uplifted voice call down upon your labours the blessing of the great Father in heaven."

After observing that the object of the discourse was to bring the claims of the Ragged School Union more fully before the Church and congregation, the preacher fervently appealed for its continued and increased support.

LONDON CITY MISSIONS.

THE opening of a new room for Gospel meetings, at 63, Webber-street, Blackfriars, on Thursday evening last, Nov. 27, was a most interesting occasion. Mr. Frank Bevan, one of the Committee of the L. C. M., presided, and gave an account of some of the operations of the Mission, informing us that it now employs some 460 missionaries, whose special work consists in that most arduous task of house to house visitation in their respective districts.

Mr. Lysence, the missionary for this district, gave a short but very encouraging account of his labours during seven years here, detailing a few of the many cases of conversion in which the Lord honoured him as the instrument. This newly-opened room has been badly needed, as it is the only place in his district where he can gather the people to hear the Gospel, there being no church, chapel, nor schoolroom. How important it is that every district so situated should have a room for a similar use.

Mr. Dawson and Mr. Pearson, the two Secretaries of the L. C. M., were also present, and gave further accounts of the working of this, one of the most important agencies for God's work in this great city. Other Christian friends from the West-end and suburbs briefly addressed the meeting. There was a very good attendance, the room being full. Never was I more convinced that all those who have the interest of the masses at heart should encourage and help on these 460 worthy labourers, whose work in the main is most trying and arduous. Many living in the West-end and suburbs might render more personal help to the missionaries of the poorer districts; ladies by coming down to visit, and hold mothers' meetings, and Bible-classes; and gentlemen, by helping to proclaim the Gospel. If this were done, there would be far fewer cases of soul dyspepsia, the result of ever feeding themselves, and neglecting to take proper soul exercise necessary for the maintenance of a healthy tone and vigour. H. Perry.

THE SOCIAL PROBLEM IN LONDON.—The congregations that crowd our churches, and the large incomes obtained by societies formed for charitable purposes, might lead us to think that the religion which has been fighting for nineteen centuries against the world, the flesh, and the devil, had its firmest stronghold and widest sway in the Capital of the British Isles. It may be so; but no one can walk through our West-end streets, or witness the vice and degradation which seem in possession of the East of London, without feeling how little, after all, has been done by Christian men and women in comparison with what remains for them to do. It may be asked whether much of the failure we deplore is not due to causes over which we have a distinct control. We waste our strength in futile controversies; we object to join with men who do not wear our badges and utter our shibboleths, instead of remembering "the one touch of nature." We divide class from class, not by law, indeed, but by custom; and thus it comes to pass that there exist in London at this day some of the worst vices of heathendom, and the desperate social miseries of a civilisation which, despite much that is noble and of good report, has not yet learnt how to humanise the great mass of the people.—John Dennis, in Good Words for December.

MR. RADCLIFFE AND RAILWAY MEN.

OUR indefatigable brother lingers in our midst, endeavouring, in season—we will not say, and out of season—to awaken and foster among different classes of the community a sense of responsibility for the evangelisation of the wide, wide world. One evening, the week before last, he addressed some 200 railway employés at the Railway Mission Hall, Kensal Green-road, and, judging from the results, made a deep impression on these faithful servants of the travelling public. In the course of his rousing exhortations he referred to the remarkable development of the railroad system since the opening of the first line for passenger traffic between Liverpool and Manchester, of which he was an eye-witness. Basing his remarks mainly on the Lord's Prayer, he emphasised the paramount importance of Christian men and women seeking, in the first place, to know and to do the will of God: that being attended to, God would see that all personal needs are supplied. He urged, in his own fervid and striking way, a great scattering to the ends of the earth of the believers who are cooped up in this small island. Christ has not suffered and died, and risen and ascended, merely for the sake of a few millions of Englishmen. The whole round world is embraced in his atoning work, and in the arms of his love. Why should Christians in this favoured land tie the hands of the blessed Lord, that are so full of blessing and of saving power, instead of dispersing hither and thither, and going chiefly to the dark, and dry, and thirsty lands, where the hundreds of millions are waiting to be refreshed and regenerated by the Gospel news?

Such was the burden of his theme, and he applied it specially to his auditors—engineers, stokers, pointsmen, porters, and what not. In the early days of the Christian era, the believers—ay, even the soldiers in the Roman armies, went forth to lands that to them were distant, carrying the message of salvation, without waiting to be sent by any church organisation, and without extraneous support. Why should not these railway fellows do the same, supporting themselves by their craft, and shining as lights in a dark place? We must correct the mistake of leaving this blessed privilege merely to some select ministers and missionaries; let the rank and file of the Christian army march out, taking their orders from the Great Captain, and leaning on Him for success in the warfare.

In order the more to put his hearers on their mettle, Mr. Radcliffe told of various recent instances in which consecrated souls had been roused to an appreciation of the needs of the heathen fields, and had either gone or were going forth to China and other places. We must take possession of the railways of the world in the name of Jesus, and make them the means of spreading the Gospel.

At the close of his address he asked those who were moved with a desire to give themselves for this service to hold up their hands. In response fourteen hands went up, and earnest prayer was made that the compact might be sealed and brought to its complete issue. Since the meeting about half the number we have mentioned have expressed a strong wish to start at once for some distant field, some of them paying their journeying expenses. Surely the Lord, having put this desire into their hearts, will make the way plain before them.

PREVENTION v. CURE.—Mrs. Culkis, of Boston, has apparently a large stock of common sense, as well as a vigorous faith. She tells of a young man who had been healed by faith, but did not think it worth while to keep God's laws of health, and next day prostrated himself by eating imprudently of "baked beans." Faith-healing is good enough in its way, but we should have fewer Christians needing healing if God's simplest laws were more sacredly respected. Many people think that a law recorded in the Bible is more sacred than one written in the book of nature. All God's laws are sacred, and no amount of healing power will keep men and women who defy the laws of health from suffering the natural consequences of transgression.—Indian Witness.

A MISSION HALL FOR WANDSWORTH.

THE practical wisdom and foresight for which Mr. D. L. Moody is so famous are never more conspicuously shown than in his desire to leave behind him some tangible and permanent outcome of his labours. It would be difficult to say how many Mission-halls, as centres of aggressive, unsectarian effort among the masses, have been erected in this country as the result of the various evangelistic campaigns that Messrs. Moody and Sankey have carried on amongst us. The great London Mission of last winter will be memorable for the planting of at least two of these halls—at Wandsworth and Stratford. The former has just been completed, and devoted to its high purpose of uniting evangelical Christians in the common work of preaching the Gospel to the poor.

On November 20, last year, in Down Lodge Hall, Messrs. Moody and Sankey commenced their Wandsworth Mission. On November 20, this year, Down Lodge Mission Hall, erected on the same spot, was publicly opened in the presence of a large and interested assembly. Our readers will doubtless remember, that not only was the site for the building given freely by Dr. Watney, but that he generously undertook the cost of its erection. He has done the thing handsomely. Mission Halls are not often remarkable for architectural elegance. Dr. Watney has given to the Wandsworth community a hall that will be at once an ornament to the neighbourhood and, we feel sure, a centre of blessed spiritual influence through many coming years.

At the afternoon meeting on Thursday week there was a full assembly (the hall is seated, we believe, for some 700 persons), a full choir, and a full platform. Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS presided. After a song of praise, and the reading of an appropriate Scripture by Mr. D. CAMERON, earnest prayer was offered by Dr. WATNEY that a rich and continuous blessing from on high might attend the efforts that would be made in the new building. He was followed by Rev. N. BUCKMASTER, who entreated the Lord that it might be the scene of many triumphs of faith, and miracles of grace.

In the name of the Committee Mr. SEAMAN recounted the steps that had been taken, at the close of the special Mission last year, for the erection of the building as a centre of undenominational effort. Speaking of the uses to which it would be devoted, he said there would be Gospel services in which all sections of the Church would be invited to help, occasional special Missions, Bible-classes, meetings for united prayer, and for the advocacy of foreign Missions. The hall would also be available for addresses and lectures of an educational character, but not for purely secular or political objects. He hoped that in all these endeavours for the good of the people, personal help would be freely given by the Christians in the neighbourhood.

The addresses that followed were full of interest, and marked by a gratifying spirit of unity and zeal in the common cause. The CHAIRMAN gave appropriate utterance to the feelings of gratitude that all cherished to Dr. Watney for his generous and valued gift. He went on to say that he hoped the work carried on there would help to transform "horrible London" into "delightful London." He only wished that Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey could have been present; God be praised for such men and for the work they have done. He trusted that a Sabbath School and Band of Hope would in due time be added to the other agencies in operation. Rev. MARCUS RAINSFORD thanked God for the blessed impetus that was given to Christian life and work in Wandsworth through the Mission last year. He was right glad to see such a hall erected to carry on the blessed work of seed sowing. The work done there would not hinder the usefulness of any of the churches, but would help all. He did not believe that more than five out of every hundred of the dense population round about attended any stated place of worship, so that there was a great field for such undenominational and united effort. Mr. M. H. HODDER urged that some special provision should be made for bringing the Gospel home in saving power to the children. Rev. J. PARK was very hearty in his commendation of the projects connected with the new hall, and in his promises of co-operation. Rev. DONALD MATHESON sounded the praises of Christian unity, and rejoiced that it would be advanced by the work carried on at Down Lodge Hall.

A collection was made towards the expense of seating, lighting, &c. It was announced that a Gospel Mission would be begun on the Sabbath, with Mr. E. J. Mitchell for the evangelist. Mr. Robert Paton led in a closing prayer, and with the benediction the happy gathering was dismissed. Another meeting was held in the evening, over which Mr. T. A. Denny presided.

BANDS OF HOPE IN SOUTH AFRICA.

SIR,—I am collecting books for the use of the various Bands of Hope in Natal, South Africa. I have been living there for the last thirty years, and you will be pleased to learn that Bands of Hope are being set on foot in all directions. Durban is the principal seaport town, and around it there are some eight or ten Bands well attended, and the numbers will increase.

But the young people are greatly in want of books to form libraries in their various places of meeting, and they cannot be purchased in the Colony for love or money. I think it very likely that many of your readers have young people around them who have read books that are now laid on one side. I shall be very glad to take charge of any such, and they can be forwarded to me, care of Messrs. Perrott and Perrott, 24, Tentor-street, Moor-lane, London; I shall be pleased to pay the carriage. If books are not at hand I am sure the Editor of this paper would take charge of a small subscription for so good a cause.—Yours truly, W. COWEY.

DESTITUTE CHILDREN'S DINNERS SOCIETY.

SIR,—The attention of the public in general has of late been thoroughly roused to the importance of taking steps to secure the improvement of the food of the thousands of poor children attending schools, whether voluntary or Board schools; and the fact that ill-nourished children are really incapable of the efforts necessary to gain proper instruction is growing to be an established axiom in the minds of all engaged in teaching.

We therefore beg to remind our friends and the public that the Destitute Children's Dinners Society, which provided 188,384 substantial meat dinners during the five winter months of last year, for the poorest of such school children (who themselves paid £425 0s. 6d., in pence and halfpence, for their dinners), is now entering on the nineteenth year of its useful work. Some fifty dining-rooms are now open in various districts where the need of such aid is most felt, at an expenditure of about £350 a month.

Our funds are at present nearly exhausted, and we appeal with confidence to the liberality of those who have the means to enable us not only to continue our work as at present, but to extend it to other districts equally in want, but without the necessary means to defray the expenses of a dining-room. Subscriptions and donations will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, Lord Kinnaird, 1, Pall Mall, S.W. Any gentleman willing to assist in visiting the dining-rooms, or in the work of the society, may obtain all information by writing to the secretary, Colonel Alston, 86, St. George's-road, S.W.—Your obedient servants,

SHAFTESBURY, President.

THE LONDON CHURCH MISSION.

THE large number of places at which this special effort was simultaneously carried on precluded the idea of our attempting to give any fair estimate of the work through our own staff. We therefore addressed a note to all the clergymen of the churches in which the services were held, asking their kind co-operation. Only in this way could we hope to present our readers with the interior aspects and outcome of the Mission. As will be seen from the appended reports, many of these friends have responded, either themselves or through some of their workers. We are sure our readers will scan the statements with the deepest interest, and rejoice in the blessed results that have followed this extensive effort:—

ST. PAUL'S, CLERKENWELL.

The preachers in this parish were the Rev. Walter Bradbury and Mr. H. L. Monte. A deep impression was made, and many expressed their gratitude for the week's Mission.

EMMANUEL MISSION DISTRICT, HOLLOWAY.

The Mission here was conducted by Rev. A. C. Downer, vicar of Ilkley, assisted by others. The interest awakened was very great; the many services were a great blessing to the district. The after-meetings were very solemn times. Some seemed quite broken down under a sense of their sin. The Bible-readings each afternoon, conducted by Major Hedley, were much appreciated. The services for children and for men only formed quite a feature in the work. It has been a time never to be forgotten by those who took part in it.

At the close of the services on Sunday, November 23, all who had received blessing during the Mission stayed to bid farewell to the Mission preacher. The services were continued until November 25 by others.

ST. JOHN'S, UPPER HOLLOWAY.

Rev. C. B. Wilcox, who commenced the work, was called away by domestic bereavement, so that the Mission had to be taken up without notice by Rev. M. Reed, of Leicester. But the work was greatly prospered under both. Upwards of 800 adults attended daily, and more than 3000 adults on both Sundays. The Children's Services grew from 400 to 700. At the afternoon service on the last Sunday nearly 500 men were present, and grand was the song of "All hail the power of Jesu's name." Only three left before the second address, so deep was the impression. Many stayed each night to be spoken to by the missioner and clergy, aided by loving Christian workers. The daily requests for prayer were numerous, and most touching. Addresses were given three times in the tin-foil factory and in the 'bus yard. During the week 15,000 tracts were distributed.

The influence of the Mission pervaded the daily life of the whole district, every church in Holloway having a Mission, so that careless people remarked on the quietness of this busy quarter, and asked what was the cause. On the last evening 250 stayed to Holy Communion.

ST. JAMES THE LESS, VICTORIA PARK.

The Mission in this parish has been conducted by Rev. Dr. Harrison, vicar of St. Silas, Liverpool, and Rev. H. Stephens, vicar of Christ Church, Finchley. They were assisted by Rev. George Moore, vicar, and Rev. A. A. O'Neill, curate, and a body of earnest workers. The work commenced on Saturday evening, November 15, when Mr. Stephens gave an excellent and useful address to the workers. He also preached three sermons the following day (Sunday). On Monday Dr. Harrison took up the Mission, and preached each evening during the week. He also gave special addresses to believers, women only and men only, and held a service for children each afternoon, in which they took considerable interest.

Through the earnest efforts of all the workers the attendance during the week was sustained, and on the closing Sunday evening nearly all the congregation remained for the after-meeting. There is every reason to believe that lasting blessings were received by many of those present. The Holy Communion was administered on both Sundays of the Mission and on the Thursday morning, and workers' meetings for prayer were held every evening. Some thousands of tracts, handbills, and notices both before and during the Mission were distributed. A thanksgiving service for praise was held on Monday night, after which nearly a hundred memorial cards were given.

ST. ANDREW'S, THORNHILL-SQUARE.

The Mission services were conducted here by Rev. G. Noel Storrs, vicar of St. Stephen's, Tonbridge. The Mission has been preceded by many weeks of earnest prayer that God would pour out his Spirit upon the church, congregation, and district; and the inhabitants of the parish have received personal invitation to attend the services. Special addresses have been given to men, urging them to make religion a matter not for the future only, but for the present life.

A very bright gleam also has been diffused over the work of the week in the children's services, which were largely attended. Beginning with the illustration of the "Wordless Book," with its leaves of black and red and white and gold, Mr. Storrs brought home to many a young heart the true course of the saved soul's progress from sin, through the cleansing blood, to holiness and to glory.

The evening services have been well attended. The course of subjects has been principally on the well-known incidents of the Gospel story, "The three Crosses," "The Samaritan Woman," "Blind Bartimeus," "The Almost Persuaded," "The Question that must be settled—What shall I do with Jesus which is called Christ?" These topics were successively brought before the congregation with an earnestness solemn and resistless. In the after-meetings Mr. Storrs dealt very faithfully with the inquirers who remained behind, more than fifty of whom, on different evenings, expressed their anxiety to "take the sinner's place" and find the sinner's Saviour, while a still larger number confessed their confidence in Christ. Some who, at the opening services, were quite broken down, have been led through flowing tears to behold the brightness of the Sun of Righteousness, and the heart clouded with doubt and fear has been spanned by the rainbow of hope. A very efficient band of singers assisted at each service. Altogether, the season has been greatly blessed of God.

ST. THOMAS'S, STEPNEY.

The hearts of all who have been engaged in the work here are filled with gratitude and praise for the blessing which has rested upon the efforts made in dependence on God's Holy Spirit. Rev. Arthur W. Cribb had secured the services of Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, Vicar of St. Paul's, Onslow-square, who was assisted by Rev. Charles Courtney, Vicar of Upper Armley, Leeds. Much prayer had been made for many weeks previously, in the parish itself, and by the congregation of St. Paul's, and it was deeply felt by both missioners and workers, that all their labours would be in vain unless God gave the increase.

Mr. Cribb had organised every detail most carefully, and in a very practical manner, and there was a remarkable spirit of union amongst all who took any part in the Mission. A large body of workers came down every day from South Kensington to join with those on the spot in canvassing the parish from house to house, and singing and speaking in the open-air to attract the people to the services.

The attendance steadily increased, night after night, until by the Thursday the church was filled with a congregation of attentive and deeply interested hearers, listening to the grand old Gospel truths powerfully and earnestly set forth by the missioner. Mr. Webb-Peploe carried his audience from point to point until the whole scheme of salvation had been plainly and forcibly stated. The subjects of his discourses were Sin, Justification, the Love of God, Decision, Faith, and Only One Way, finishing with the Sunday evening's sermon on The Cross of Christ, when the church was thronged to its utmost capacity. A goodly number testified to the blessing they had received, and gathered round the missioner before dispersing to bid him an affectionate farewell. At the close of each stirring appeal, inquirers were invited to remain for conversation with Mr. Webb-Peploe and his band of workers, and a large number responded to the invitation.

The Great Day will show what all the results have been, but it is confidently believed that many careless ones were aroused to deep concern about their souls, many hesitating ones brought to decision, and last, but not least, many lukewarm Christians revived and strengthened.

The arrangements were most complete, and all classes were contemplated in the Mission. There were services for boys and girls, for the sick and aged, for a body of police, for women only, and one solemn address on Saturday evening for men only. Moreover, there was a series of three afternoon addresses to Christians, which were greatly appreciated, and very refreshing. In these Mr. Webb-Peploe, while strongly maintaining the impossibility of perfection here below, unfolded the high standard held out by the Word of God, and the blessed rest of a life of simple trust.

Nor were the poor outcasts forgotten, for Mr. Cribb gathered in about forty of our fallen sisters to tea one evening at eleven o'clock; the clergy and a few Christian ladies received them, sang hymns, and spoke words of warning and help. Three were provided with a shelter that night, and several others gave their names and were conversed with by the ladies present.

The Mission was concluded by a thanksgiving service on Tuesday evening, Nov. 25. To the vicar of the parish and his band of helpers will remain the blessed task of gathering in the fruits, and watching over the souls newly brought into the fold.

ST. LUKE'S, WEST HOLLOWAY.

The missioner at this church was Rev. W. F. Cobb, M.A., rector of Nettlestead, Kent. The many services were well attended, though those on the week-day mornings and evenings not so largely as was hoped. They were all marked by solemnity and earnestness, the singing being especially hearty. Mr. Cobb's sermons and addresses were characterised by a quiet intensity and unction that made them unusually impressive. He is essentially a Scriptural preacher, and you hear in it much more of the Word of God than the word of man. His "doctrine distils as the dew." It both gains the ear and touches the heart. There has been little of the excitement occasionally attendant on revivals, but that a powerful spiritual influence has been at work there can be no doubt. A prayer-meeting preceded each service, but there were no "after meetings."

One interesting feature connected with this Mission was the work in the factories in the parish. During the dinner hour the vicar and the missioner visited both Hill's organ factory and the Star brush factory, and gave addresses. The operatives at the latter were so much interested that they spontaneously expressed a wish for a second visit, which was gladly complied with. Another pleasing incident of this Mission was that at the close on Sunday evening a considerable number of leading gentlemen of the congregation went into the vestry to express personal thanks to Mr. Cobb for his faithful and earnest labours.

As the church is situated at a distance from the poorer part of the parish, the working classes did not attend the services as numerously as was hoped, notwithstanding the invitations with which they were canvassed. The vicar has therefore resolved to carry the Gospel into their quarter by holding a special Mission in the Mission Hall in their midst. And thinking that perhaps a lay missioner would be more effective with them, he has arranged with Mr. W. Creese, of Teddington, Worcestershire, to hold a week's Mission there, commencing on December 1, the vicar himself opening it on Sunday evening, the 30th instant.

SPITALFIELDS' PARISH CHURCH.
